The first real witness whose testimony is of interest to the public at large and whose high position in the county gives it much weight was County Clerk H T Batchelder. Colonel Batchelder was sworn and in a calm and dignified manner gave the evidence which may mean so much to the man who was at one time his warmest friend. During the giving of this testimony absolute stillness reigned in the courtroom and from all the circumstances and the present relative position of the defendant and the witness, the dramatic interest of the situation could not escape the most disinterested spectator. Dr. Rodley heard the evidence of Batchelder with absolute calmness, only occasionally smiling at some particular statement and again commenting to his wife in whisper upon it. To the close observer it was evident that Col. Batchelder was under a severe mental strain, but he made an excellent witness and his statements certainly carried the impression of truthfulness.

He stated that he was 60 years of age and for more than 34 years had resided in Butte county; he knew Alfred Fuller in his lifetime, and also knew Rodley, with whom his friendship was of the warmest character. In February, 1898, he resided in Biggs, where he was engaged in teaching school. At this point the defense objected to the witness testifying on the ground that it was of a purely corroborative character. The objection was overruled and exception noted. Continuing, he said that on the 13th day of February, 1898, he resided at the Hamilton Hotel in Biggs, and that on the afternoon of that day Rodley came into the hotel office. He said he wished

Alfred Fuller.

If all the things of earth are known in Heaven and hell, what must be the pleasure of Alfred Fuller as he realizes the trouble into which all those have fallen who have endeavored to feather their nests with the wealth he so regretted to leave behind him.

As far as can be learned, this queer old fellow submitted himself but once to the camera, and that was over twenty years ago when he was residing near Sonora, where the photograph was taken. A reproduction of that photograph is herewith presented.

to see Batchelder on private business and the latter asked him to his rooms up stairs. He closed the door behind him, and Rodley said, "Batch, would you know Alfred Fuller's signature?" "I think so," was the reply. "Would you know it if you saw it?" Rodley asked. "I think I would," was the reply of witness. "If satisfied that this was Fuller's signature would you sign your name as a witness. It would be to your interest to the extent of $3000."

Rodley showed him no paper at that time but used the word "will" in connection with the asking of the witness to certify. Batchelder replied, "Doctor, he has never asked me to sign, and I never sign without being invited."

They remained but a few minutes longer in the room and nothing further was said concerning the proposition at this time.

Witness was shown a typewritten letter signed by Rodley under date of February 17, 1898, in which he urged upon him the importance of coming to Chico on the following Friday evening. He particularly urged him not to fail, and offered to pay all his expenses. The letter was identified by the witness as one he had received from Rodley.

(Continued on 4th Page.)

DAMAGING TESTIMONY BY H. T. BATCHELDER

(Concluded from first page.)

An unusual gathering of ladies occupied one side of the courtroom at the afternoon session and the scene was quite reminded of a female seminary.

The direct examination of Col. H. T. Batchelder was resumed. He retold the story of his having received a letter from Dr. Rodley on the morning of February 18, 1898, urging him to come to Chico. He went to Chico that evening. He was not certain whether he went immediately to Dr. Rodley's office or not, but he reached the office about 8 o'clock and found Dr. Rodley alone.

"Hello, Batch!" was Rodley's greeting, and "Hello, Doctor!" was the reply by witness. As witness took his seat near the desk, Rodley, without saying a word, went to his safe, opened it and took out a piece of paper which he laid on the desk before witness. Witness said he read the writing on the paper twice while it was on the table, and taking it in his hand, read it again. It was the alleged will of Alfred Fuller, without the attestation. He identified the will by the misspelled words. Witness testified as to the conversation held with Rodley immediately after his reading the document the third time.

"Batch, is that Alfred Fuller's signature?" asked Rodley, and witness replied, "I do not think so." "Then you would not sign that as a witness?" said Rodley, and witness replied: "I would not sign it except on being asked to do so by Fuller. I never sign wills unless I am invited to do so." Rodley then put the will back into the safe, and from that time to this date he and Rodley had never mentioned the subject to each other.

Witness was then turned over to the attorneys for the defense for cross-examination. Attorney Collins took the witness in hand and was a most rigid questioner. The first hour of the cross-questioning was as to the facts liable to have occurred in connection with Rodley's visit to Biggs and witness' visit to Chico, the object being to test the witness' memory. Collins referred frequently to the testimony given by Batchelder before the Grand Jury, the former having a copy before him, that he might detect any variance in the witness' testimony. In all the material points Batchelder's testimony was as it was given before the Grand Jury. He gave his evidence clearly and was a good witness. While the examination conducted by Mr. Collins was close and most searching, he at no time resorted to tactics which could be construed as bullying or browbeating—he was a gentleman in court as well as out. When he touched upon the previous close friendship existing between witness and Dr. Rodley, the manner in which the Grand Jury secured the knowledge possessed by witness, and the finding of the letter, the proceedings approached the dramatic stage. With his eyes moist with tears and his voice trembling under the internal strain, Col. Batchelder stated that he never, before being summoned before the Grand Jury, told a living soul regarding the letter or his interview with Dr. Rodley, not even his wife, and until the time that the will was offered for probate, he thought that he had destroyed the letter. He then said to himself "some one has taken my place," and then it was that he looked over his private papers and found the letter.

"Why had you not destroyed the letter?" was asked.

"I do not know. It seems sometimes as if those whom the Lord would use, they first make mad", was the reply.

Toward the end of the session a question of the defense revealed in a manner one of the points relied upon by Rodley to explain the writing of the letter and why he wished Batchelder to come to Chico. The question was, "Will you say that Dr. Rodley did not ask you on February 18th, to serve as orator on the occasion of the Maine Memorial exercises in Chico?"

An adjournment being taken the question was left unanswered.

To-morrow at noon an adjournment will be taken for the week.

ALFRED FULLER DID NOT WRITE THE WILL

Such Was the Bold Admission Made By Attorney Collins For Dr. Rodley

THEODORE KYTKA TELLS WHO DID

Noted Handwriting Expert Declares His Opinion that Mrs. Houseworth Was Its Author

Special to THE RECORD.

OROVILLE, January 30.—The Rodley trial was resumed at half-past nine this morning. The argument of Mr. Collins having been completed yesterday, the examination of witnesses was proceeded with: C. F. Belding was again called to the stand, and certain papers connected with the probate of the will of Fuller were identified and offered in evidence. These consisted of the petition for probate of will, the proof of mailing notices to the heirs, the proof of publication of the order setting a day for the hearing and the proof of posting the necessary notices. To the introduction of all these documents Mr Collins interposed an objection on the ground that the proper foundation had not been laid and that the matter contained therein or which was sought to be proved thereby, was immaterial and incompetent, for the reason that the defense did not contend at this time that the will was in the handwriting of Alfred Fuller. The object of course for getting the papers in was to strengthen the theory of conspiracy.

Mrs. Minnie James, the reporter who took the testimony at the time the will was offered for probate, read the whole of Mrs. Houseworth's testimony given at the time. This was to aid the plan of the prosecution in showing that notwithstanding the claim made by the defense that they did not claim the will to be in the handwriting of Fuller, that it would be shown that it was not only not in his handwriting, but was in the hand of Mrs Houseworth In that testimony she said that before the will was delivered to her by Carmack she had never seen it

Mrs. Mattie Roxford of Chico was sworn and testified. She identified a certain letter offered in evidence as being from Mrs Houseworth, and she had no reason to doubt that it was in her handwriting She had known Mrs Houseworth for twenty-five years and had received many letters from her, and was consequently familiar with her penmanship. To the introduction of all testimony tending to establish the standard of handwriting of Mrs. Houseworth and Fuller, the defense objected and upon being overruled noted an exception.

John Shannon, E. B. Collins, W. M. Marvin and A. F. Jones were placed on the stand to identify certain handwriting of both Mrs. Houseworth and Fuller, which they did so identify and declare to be theirs. The taking of this evidence consumed the time up to the noon recess

A certain document on which was written the name of Alfred Fuller was handed to E. B. Collins, who was recalled at the opening of court for the afternoon session, and he was asked to say whether in his opinion it was the signature of Alfred Fuller To this the defense objected, and Judge Gray sustained the objection

Mrs. C. D. Montgomery of Redding was next called. Witness had known Alfred Fuller well during his lifetime, and for a number of years had resided in Chico in a house belonging to him. She was shown several letters which were supposed to have been written by Fuller to her, and she was asked if in her opinion the letters were written by torney Collins had objected and was sustained in his objection. Judge Gray stated that after he had reviewed the authorities quoted, he had reconsidered his ruling and would allow the witness to answer.

H. D. Lawson was next called to the stand and testified that in December, 1898, while he was County Clerk, he took the alleged Fuller will to San Francisco and had it photographed by Theodore Kytka.

Theodore Kytka was next sworn. He testified that he was a document photographer and expert in handwriting, and that he had made photographs of the handwriting of Mrs. Minnie Houseworth and of Alfred Fuller. Witness had an elaborate exhibit of photographs taken of the handwritings and these were before the jury. Several of the exhibits were enlargements to from twenty to thirty times the original size of the writing. One of the photographs showed the disputed signature with a number of signatures known to have been written by Alfred Fuller. This photograph was exhibited for the purpose of comparison of the slant of the letters. By the use of a ruler the witness showed that the slant of the letters of the disputed signature was from seventeen to twenty and one half degrees less than the slant of the letters of the genuine signatures. He said that he had made a close study of the writing of the will.

THEODORE KYTKA.

The noted hand-writing expert now testifying for the prosecution in the Rodley case.

A question put by District Attorney Sproul to the witness calling for his opinion regarding whether or no the will was written by Fuller, brought an important admission from the defense. Attorney Collins in presenting his objection said that Kytka's opinion would be entirely immaterial for the reason that in this action the defense would admit the will is not in the handwriting of Alfred Fuller

Kytka was then asked if he believed the will and the introduced handwriting of Mrs. Minnie Houseworth were by one and the same, and he gave that as his opinion. At this point to make his testimony more convincing, witness took from his pocket a slip of paper cut from the city prison register of San Francisco which was written the only direct evidence of anyone who has seen Mrs. Houseworth write her name.

At this point Mr. Collins interposed an objection to a question asking the witness to state the basis for his opinion that the alleged will was written by Mrs. Houseworth. Mr. Collins urged that while the opinion of the expert was admissible, the reason for that opinion is not proper testimony. This objection furnished another delay, for the prosecution was undoubtedly taken by surprise and was not prepared to give off hand authorities in support of allowing the question to be answered. Judge Gray was unwilling to rule upon the point without authorities being quoted, and rather than to make an error on which the Supreme Court might reverse him, he preferred to delay the case, and an adjournment was taken until tomorrow morning In the meantime District Attorney Sproul will dig up authorities in support of allowing witness Kytka to tell why he is of the opinion that Mrs. Houseworth wrote the will, signature and all.

Mrs. Housworth Was Its Author

Special to THE RECORD.

OROVILLE, January 31.—The Hadley trial was resumed at half-past nine this morning. The argument of Mr. Collins having been completed yesterday, the examination of witnesses was proceeded with: C. F. Belding was again called to the stand, and certain papers connected with the probate of the will of Fuller were identified and offered in evidence. These consisted of the petition for probate of will, the proof of mailing notices to the heirs, the proof of publication of the order setting a day for the hearing and the proof of posting the necessary notices. To the introduction of all these documents Mr. Collins interposed an objection on the ground that the proper foundation had not been laid and that the matter contained therein or which was sought to be proved thereby, was immaterial and incompetent, for the reason that the defense did not contend at this time that the will was in the handwriting of Alfred Fuller. The object of course for getting the papers in was to strengthen the theory of conspiracy.

Mrs. Minnie James, the reporter who took the testimony at the time the will was offered for probate, read the whole of Mrs. Housworth's testimony given at the time. This was to aid the plan of the prosecution in showing that notwithstanding the claim made by the defense that they did not claim the will to be in the handwriting of Fuller, that it would be shown that it was not only not in his handwriting, but was in the hand of Mrs. Housworth. In that testimony she said that before the will was delivered to her by Carmack she had never seen it.

Mrs. Mattie Rexford of Chico was sworn and testified. She identified a certain letter offered in evidence as being from Mrs. Housworth, and she had no reason to doubt that it was in her handwriting. She had known Mrs. Housworth for twenty-five years and had received many letters from her, and was consequently familiar with her penmanship. To the introduction of all testimony tending to establish the standard of handwriting of Mrs. Housworth and Fuller, the defense objected and upon being overruled noted an exception.

John Shannon, E. B. Collins, W. M. Marvin and A. F. Jones were placed on the stand to identify certain handwriting of both Mrs. Housworth and Fuller, which they did so identify and declare to be theirs. The taking of this evidence consumed the time up to the noon recess.

A certain document on which was written the name of Alfred Fuller was handed to E. B. Collins, who was recalled at the opening of court for the afternoon session, and he was asked to say whether in his opinion it was the signature of Alfred Fuller. To this the defense objected, and Judge Gray sustained the objection.

Mrs. E. D. Montgomery of Redding was next called. Witness had known Alfred Fuller well during his lifetime, and for a number of years had resided in Chico in a house belonging to him. She was shown several letters which were supposed to have been written by Fuller to her, and she was asked if in her opinion the letters were written to her by Alfred Fuller.

Attorney Collins strenuously objected to the witness giving an opinion. This testimony was of the same class as that of E. B. Collins, to which At-writing, and that he had made photographs of the handwriting of Mrs. Minnie Housworth and of Alfred Fuller. Witness had an elaborate exhibit of photographs taken of the handwritings and these were before the jury. Several of the exhibits were enlargements to from twenty to thirty times the original size of the writing. One of the photographs showed the disputed signature with a number of signatures known to have been written by Alfred Fuller. This photograph

THEODORE KYTKA.

The noted hand-writing expert now testifying for the prosecution in the [illegible] was exhibited for the purpose of comparison of the slant of the letters. By the use of a ruler the witness showed that the slant of the letters of the disputed signature was from seventeen to twenty and one half degrees less than the slant of the letters of the genuine signatures. He said that he had made a close study of the writing of the will.

A question put by District Attorney Sproul to the witness calling for his opinion regarding whether or not the will was written by Fuller, brought an important admission from the defense. Attorney Collins in presenting his objection said that Kytka's opinion would be entirely immaterial for the reason that in this action the defense would admit the will is not in the handwriting of Alfred Fuller.

Kytka was then asked if he believed the will and the introduced handwriting of Mrs. Minnie Housworth were by one and the same, and he gave that as his opinion. At this point to make his testimony more convincing, witness took from his pocket a slip of paper cut from the city prison register of San Francisco on which was written the name, Mrs. Minnie Housworth, she having written it at the time of her arrest. It happened, he stated, that he was standing by the desk in the city prison when Mrs. Housworth wrote that signature. This is t[illegible]

[illegible] was unwilling to rule upon the point without authorities being quoted, and rather than to make an error on which the Supreme Court might reverse him, he preferred to delay the case, and an adjournment was taken until tomorrow morning. In the meantime District Attorney Sproul will dig up authorities in support of allowing witness Kytka to tell why he is of the opinion that Mrs. Housworth wrote the will, signature and all.

PROVING THE WILL A FORGERY

Prosecution Endeavoring to Prove It Was Written by Mrs. Housewerth

KYTKA ON THE STAND.

The Handwriting Expert Now Showing His Photographs to the Jury.

The lengthy argument of Attorney Collins against the admission of certain testimony was replied to briefly by District Attorney Sproul, and Judge Gray announced that he would rule on the points as they arose in the course of the trial.

The first step of the prosecution today was toward proving the will a forgery, and was taken, of course, in the face of objection and exception by the attorneys for plaintiff. The court records of proceedings in connection with the alleged will of Alfred Fuller were introduced in evidence, Deputy Clerk Behting and ex-court reporter Mrs. Minnie James testifying. Mrs. James read from her notes the testimony given by Mrs. Minnie Housworth on offering the will for probate. On that occasion Mrs. Housworth testified that the will was given to her on October 17th 1898, and that up to that date she had never seen it, though she had been told by Fuller of its existence. This evidence was introduced by the prosecution to show that the will was not written by Mrs. Housworth at Fuller's request. They expect to show that it was written by Mrs. Housworth, and is a forgery. Following the reading of Mrs. Housworth's statement regarding the circumstances accompanying the finding of the will, witnesses were introduced to identify her handwriting.

Mrs. Mattie Rexford was the first witness in this line. She identified a letter received by her supposed to be from Mrs. Housworth and presumably signed by her. She could not swear that the letter was written by Mrs. Housworth, but had every reason to believe it was, as she afterwards conversed with her regarding a matter mentioned in the letter. The letter was admitted, Collins taking an exception.

John Shannon followed and testified that the signature of A. Fuller on a document handed him, was written by Mr. Fuller in his presence. He saw Fuller write his name and then affixed his own signature.

E. B. Collins of Chico testified that he knew Fuller's writing very well, having been a clerk in the office of Attorney Park Henshaw, who was attorney for A. Fuller when he was administrator of the estate of his brother, E. Fuller, deceased. Several documents connected with the administration of that estate were shown Mr. Collins who testified that to the best of his knowledge the signature was that of Alfred Fuller.

W. M. Marvin, bookkeeper for Miller & Co., grocers of Chico, was sworn and identified a letter received by that firm from Mrs. Housworth, which was admitted in evidence.

A. F. Jones testified to the signature of Mrs. Housworth on her petition for probate of will. He did not see her sign it, but prepared the paper for her, handed it to her, and when she handed it back it bore the signature. The document was admitted.

In the afternoon E. B. Collins was recalled to the stand and asked his opinion regarding a letter purporting to have been written by Fuller, but the objection to this was sustained.

Mrs. E. Montgomery was then called to the stand and testified to writings of Fuller. She had known him two years, rented a house from him, received letters and receipts from him, several of which were admitted in evidence.

The next witness was expert Kytka. The spectators have been anxiously awaiting the appearance of the handwriting expert, and Kytka has been still more anxious to give his testimony. He has been here since the trial began, and in his haste to get away has worked himself into a high pitch of nervous excitement. His time came at last this afternoon, and Mr. Kytka was glad. So was the crowd. In response to questions by District Attorney Sproul, Mr. Kytka stated that he had been a resident of San Francisco for the past seven years, his business is document photographer and handwriting expert. On December 12, 1898, at the request of and in the presence of H. D. Lansen, he made a negative of the alleged will of Alfred Fuller. The negative was produced and admitted in evidence, the objection of Mr. Collins being overruled. Mr. Kytka also testified to having made negatives of hand writing of Mrs. Minnie Housworth and of Alfred Fuller, already admitted in evidence, and negatives of the same were shown and admitted. From these negatives, Mr. Kytka testified, he made "contact prints" and these were placed in evidence and displayed to the jury. Mr. Kytka's testimony is being continued as we go to press.

All this testimony was admitted in the face of objections by Attorney Collins and exception was noted in each case.

Ex-County Clerk Lansen was called to the stand and testified that in Dec. 1898 he took the will of A. Fuller, then on file in the Clerk's office, to San Francisco to have it photographed and was present when it was photographed. He identified Mr. Kytka as the man who made the photograph and testified that the will was not out of his possession during the time he was away with it.

LATER—Attorney Collins admits that the Fuller will is not in Fuller's handwriting. Expert Kytka's testimony will be directed towards showing that it is in the handwriting of Mrs. Housworth.

SAYS MRS. HOUSEWORTH WROTE FULLER WILL.

Expert Kytka Testifies in the Rodley Case—Other Strong Evidence Against the Woman.

OROVILLE, February 1.—The testimony in the Rodley case to-day was continued with Expert Kytka on the stand, who gave it as his opinion that Mrs. Housworth wrote the Fuller will. J. H. Swearingen was a very strong witness for the prosecution. He stated that Mrs. Housworth called him into the Hallam House in Chico and asked him to go up to her room. She told him Alfred Fuller left a will unsigned, but giving her his property. She said Dr. Rodley would sign the will as one witness if she could get some other man to sign for the second witness. He at first refused, but later told her he would see her again about it. She offered him $100 to sign, and she was to give Dr. Rodley that sum and she would not think of offering him less than she had offered the doctor.

Witness stated she met him and asked him to see her twice and then when he still refused she met him again and told him that it did not matter, now that she had got John Farner to sign the will. In one of these conversations she told him that she had the will in San Francisco, that she got an envelope, went into a corner grocery store in that city, had a man there direct it to Fuller and then she brought it to Chico. Watching the post-office she selected a time when no one would see her and then dropped it into the office. Then she went to Sacramento.

On his former testimony Swearingen had stated that he had at one time made Mrs. Housworth improper proposals. He declared today that he did not understand the questions and stated most positively that he had done nothing of the kind. He had never been ordered from her room, had never asked her to leave her room unlocked that he might visit her, and that he had never promised her that he would sign the will under any circumstances.

RODLEY TRIAL GOES VERY SLOW

Expert Kytka Occupies the Stand.

MRS. HOUSEWORTH WROTE THE WILL

At Least the Expert On Handwriting So Testifies, and He Submits His Reasons For So Thinking—Makes Comparison of Her Handwriting.

Special to the Enterprise

OROVILLE, Jan. 31.—The Rodley case is progressing very slowly again to-day, and the people who have persistently followed this case from day to day are hearing more about the peculiarities of handwriting than they every heard of before, and perhaps more than they will ever hear again.

When an adjournment was taken last evening, it was for the purpose of giving the attorneys an opportunity to look up authorities as to the relevancy of certain testimony which the prosecution expected from Expert Theodore Kytka.

This desired testimony was for the purpose of showing that the will, from which sprung all of the present wrangle, was in the handwriting of Mrs. Minnie Housworth. To this testimony Attorney Collins offered a strong objection, asking for a continuance sufficient to allow the search for citations on this point.

The continuance was granted until 9:30 o'clock this morning, at which time Attorney Collins stated that he did not care to argue the question. District Attorney Sproul then briefly cited authorities to show that an expert witness was entitled to give his reasons upon which his opinion is founded, either in a civil or criminal action.

Attorney Collins then read citations for his side of the case, but the Court overruled the objection, Collins noting an exception.

Expert Kytka was then called to the stand and up to the noon adjournment was, by use of enlarged photographs, charts, etc., demonstrating the similarity of the handwriting of Mrs. Housworth with that of the writing in the will.

Kytka had a sample of Mrs. Housworth's writing which was made at the time she was arrested in San Francisco. With this, and other letters written by her, the expert is demonstrating many peculiarities of Mrs. Housworth's writing, which are not found in the writing of any one else. One of these peculiarities noticed in particular is the "o" in the name "Housworth." The expert claims that in all of Mrs. Housworth's writing all the letters of the name except the "o" come down squarely to the line, but that this letter of the name is invariably above the line. This peculiarity of the "o" he says, is only found in cases where she has written her name, and it appears in the name Housworth in the will.

He gave many other demonstrations of peculiarities in the writing of Mrs. Housworth, which were to be found in the writing of the will, and also showed that the writing of Alfred Fuller was not in the least like that of the will.

There were many objections by the defense to certain parts of the testimony, and in each case where the objection was overruled, an exception was noted.

At 11:45 court adjourned to 1:30.

At the re-assembling of Court Expert Kytka was recalled to the stand and his examination was continued until 5 o'clock when Court adjourned. He will be recalled to-morrow morning.

KIYTKA ON THE STAND.

The Day Devoted to Handwriting of Will.

After our report closed yesterday, the testimony of Theodore Kytka was continued. As stated, Attorney Collins admitted that the will is not in the handwriting of Fuller, and Mr. Kytka proceeded to show that it is in the handwriting of Mrs. Housworth. He gave it as his opinion that the will was wholly written and signed by her. District Attorney Sproul asked the reasons upon which his testimony was based, and this brought forth an objection by Collins. Judge Gray asked that the authorities be quoted in support of the objection, but this Mr. Collins was not prepared to do off-hand and court was adjourned for the day.

This morning Mr. Sproul quoted authorities to show that the question is a proper one, Mr. Collins replying briefly and citing one or two cases. The objection was overruled and exception noted. Mr. Kitka, his right to do so having been passed upon, proceeded to show why he believed the will to be in the handwriting of Mrs. Minnie Housworth.

The average citizen has little faith in expert testimony. He looks upon the hand writing expert as an individual to be watched with care and believed with caution. One must see his demonstration to realize the value of his testimony, a value recognized by the highest judicial tribunal in our State. The citizen who views the first part of the experts testimony with distrust, soon becomes interested, and if the expert have a good case he is pretty certain to remove the prejudice before he gets through. It is impossible in the short space at command to follow the demonstration of Mr. Kitka very far. He began with the letter "m" comparing that of the will with others appearing in the admitted handwriting of Mrs. Housworth. The untrained eye could easily see a resemblance, but not until the "points" had been explained would the average man see the signs, which to Kytka's mind so plainly show the writing to have been done by the same hand. He showed that in both, and in all the letters "m" produced, the first stroke was made in exactly the same way, that in each the first downward stroke was partly retraced by the upward stroke which followed, while the second downward stroke was curved to the right and was not touched by the upward stroke, the third downward was retraced by the upward flourish with which the letter was completed. The capitol letter "H" was considered and it was shown that both in the admitted handwriting and in the will, the two straight strokes passed a trifle below the ruled line, while the following letters were upon it.

The letters "u s e" written together both in the will and in the admitted writing were shown. In each the downward strokes of the letter "u" were far from parallel, the slant of the first stroke being much greater than that of the second, and in each the "s" was made smaller than the other letter, but of equal height, so it did not touch the line, as did the letter preceding and following. The word "heirs" as written by Mrs. Housworth and as written in the will was shown, and a peculiarity noted, which would hardly be noticed without close study—the letters were spaced in a peculiar way and in both writings exactly alike. The space between the first two letters was very short, between the next two considerably longer and between the next two larger still. A striking peculiarity, occurring as it did in both writings. There are but a few of the comparisons made and are given here for the purpose of giving our readers an idea of the writing of the will and the methods by which it is sought to prove that it is the writing of Mrs. Minnie Housworth. The testimony of Mr. Kytka was interesting and was interspersed with more or less enlivening detail. At one point Mr. Kiytka referred to a stroke as "unnatural," a term to which Collins objected and had striken from the record. Upon using the term at a subsequent time, Mr. Kiytka announced that he would write the word on his blackboard in order to remember that it was tabooed. A juror suggested that he try a string around his finger. At another point Mr. Kiytka in explaining his testimony to the jury remarked that he only showed the small points and not the large ones. To this Mr. Collins replies that the defense would admit that no very large points had yet been made, a sally which caused a laugh at the expert's expense and was promptly stricken from the record.

Mr. Kytka was still giving direct testimony as our report closes at 4:15 p. m. His cross examination is looked forward to with interest as it is believed that Mr. Collins will give him a severe one. Kytka has been under fire of some of the big guns before and a grilling will be no new experience should Mr. Collins adopt that course.

RODLEY CASE PROGRESSING

Technicalities Overcome for the Time.

Jan. 26—1900.

H. T. BATCHELDER UNDER FIRE

Defense Will Attempt to Show That Rodley's Letter to Col. Batchelder Was An Invitation to Deliver an Address at Maine Memorial Service.

Special to the Enterprise

OROVILLE, Jan. 26.—The first proceeding in the Rodley trial this morning was the introduction of records from the county clerk's office regarding the appointment of C. F. Belding as deputy county clerk. County Clerk Batchelder brought the records to the court room and after the entire matter of the appointment of C. F. Belding had been gone over, the defense acknowledged its legality.

C. F. Belding was then called and testified that on November 23, 1898, he was the regularly appointed deputy clerk and on that day during the hearing of the application of Mrs. Minnie Houseworth for probate of the alleged will of Alfred Fuller, administered the oath to J. Ellis Rodley, John M. Garner and Mrs. Minnie Houseworth. The witness also recited the form of oath administered to them, and testified that Mrs. Minnie James was the official court reporter at that time. Witness also identified the will presented today as the will introduced at the time of hearing on Nov. 23, 1898, and as the will which was admitted to probate at that time.

Miss Minnie James was next called and testified that she was the official court reporter during the hearing on probate of will; that she had taken shorthand notes of the testimony and had transcribed the same in long hand. She was requested to read the short hand notes of Dr. Rodley's testimony at the time of the hearing on the will which she did, and testified that Rodley gave that testimony.

For a time, at least, the defense were through with technicalities, and Col. H. T. Batchelder was called to the stand.

The testimony of Col. Batchelder was the same as that given on December 7th last, when giving testimony in the trial of the will case.

The witness recited the various conversations he had had with Dr. Rodley regarding the will, and in no detail did his testimony differ from that given at the time of the will case.

He stated that the first time he was approached by Dr. Rodley on the subject of the will was at Biggs, early in February, 1898. He was in Rodley's room at the Hamilton Hotel, when Rodley first mentioned the proposition to him. Rodley asked him if he would know Fuller's signature, and was told by Col. Batchelder that he thought he could.

About February 17th witness received a letter from Dr. Rodley, requesting him to come to Chico, and stating that all expenses of the trip would be paid by Rodley. Witness came to Chico as requested by Rodley and met the accused in his (Rodley's) office. At that time Rodley produced a paper which he stated was the will of Alfred Fuller, and asked witness if the signature of Fuller written thereon was genuine. Batchelder scrutinized the signature and told Rodley that he doubted its genuineness. Rodley then said: "Batch, if you will sign that will as a witness there is $3000 in it for you."

Witness refused to sign the document, stating that Fuller had never requested him to sign his will, and adding, "I never sign unless I am invited to do so."

The direct examination of Col. Batchelder occupied the time up to 2 o'clock, after which Attorney Collins began a most severe cross-examination.

In cross examination the witness stated that he fixed the dates of his conversation with Rodley by the letter he had received from the latter, and in reading this letter he took it as an invitation to come to Chico on an errand in response to the will.

On receiving the letter he locked it up in a tin box and did not reveal its contents to anyone until called before the Grand Jury.

The questioning of Attorney Collins tends to the belief that the defense will attempt to show that the letter in fact was an invitation to Col. Batchelder to come to Chico and deliver an address at the Maine memorial service held there on February 21st.

Court adjourned at 4:45 to-morrow morning at 9 o'clock, when the cross-examination of Col. Batchelder will be continued. Court will adjourn at noon to-morrow until Monday morning.

WEDNESDAY, Mar. 28, 1900.

THEODORE KYTKA, sworn—Am a document photographer and expert on hand-writing, and have been engaged in that profession for the past 15 years. I have testified in several hundred cases of disputed handwriting during my 15 years' experience, and am the expert for the San Francisco Police Department and the United States Bank Examiners, also am called in quite often by the Federal government, as an expert. Here the witness gave a partial list of the many noted cases in which he had been called in as an expert. All the various exhibits in the case were shown to witness, and in reply to the query of the District Attorney answered that the known exemplars of defendant's handwriting and the anonymous letters were all in the same handwriting that of defendant's.

At this point the jury was allowed to inspect and compare disputed letters and exemplars of defendant's handwriting, and the matter was continued for the noon recess.

At two p. m. Mr. Kytka's testimony was resumed: It is impossible for a person in attempting to disguise his handwriting, to not leave some of his natural characteristics. (Witness commenced to make his demonstrations upon the black-board and continued so doing up to the hour of adjournment, 5 p. m. The dreariness of the afternoon was enlivened up somewhat by occasional spats between lawyer Cumming and the expert, in which the latter, generally, more than held his own.)

PROGRESS OF THE RODLEY TRIAL

H. T. Batchelder Concludes His Testimony.

THE COLONEL WAS A GOOD WITNESS

Arguments of the Attorneys on the Admission of Testimony as to the Handwriting of Alfred Fuller. A Brief Summary of Attorney Collins' Argument.

Special to the Enterprise

OROVILLE, Jan. 29.—The Rodley case was called this morning at 10 o'clock and the re-direct examination of H. T. Batchelder continued.

District Attorney Sproul asked the witness particularly in regard to the word "privately" as used in his cross-examination, as to his meeting with Dr. Rodley at Biggs, and if he did not use the same word in his examination before the Grand Jury. The witness said that he was positive that he used the word "privately" four times. Witness was then asked why he did not state in his examination before the Grand Jury that he recognized the will there introduced, as the paper to which Dr. Rodley requested his signature at his (Rodley's) office, on or about the 18th day of February, 1898.

Batchelder entered into a lengthy explanation of this question, and in a forcible and eloquent manner told that at the examination before the Grand Jury he was so taken by surprise that his memory was muddled and not as good as it otherwise would have been, and that after thinking the matter over since that time he could remember much better, being under less excitement, and that now he recognized the paper purporting to be the will of Alfred Fuller to be the same paper to which Rodley offered him $3000 to attest with his signature. The Colonel's explanation was full and explicit and the manner in which it was given convinced all who heard him that he was telling nothing but the truth.

The explanation of the two foregoing apparent discrepancies concluded the re-direct examination. Attorney Collins then moved that the explanation of Col. Batchelder [illegible] at first recognize the will [illegible] out. The motion was [illegible].

Collins then recalled the witness on re-cross examination and asked him if his testimony before the Grand Jury was the truth, to which the witness replied, "Yes, sir, but it seems I did not tell the whole truth." Collins then called the witness' attention to the fact that in his testimony before the grand jury, he did not say that Rodley had offered him any fixed sum for his signature to the will, and that in his direct testimony he fixed the sum at $3000. Col. Batchelder explained by saying that Rodley told him that it would be to his (Batchelder's) interest to the extent of $3000 to sign the Fuller will, and from this statement he fixed the amount at that figure.

Files of the ENTERPRISE, dated Feb. 19th, were then introduced to show that Col. Batchelder was on the program for the memorial services in honor of the "Maine's" dead, held in Chico on the 21st of February, 1898. The witness was asked if he had read the notice in the ENTERPRISE and replied that he had. Collins then asked him if something had not been said to him by Rodley about the memorial services, on the night he came to Chico in response to the letter from Rodley. Witness did not remember that anything had been said. In reply to a question as to what he knew about the circumstances of the signing of the Fuller will, the Colonel replied that he knew nothing about them, he was out of the State at the time.

This closed the examination of Col. Batchelder, and his evidence stands the same in all material points as it was given before the grand jury. He made an excellent witness and his testimony will have great weight in the final consideration of the case.

The prosecution then called John Shannon to the stand, the District Attorney having stated that he would call John Shannon, Mrs. E. I. Montgomery and E. H. Collins to prove that the handwriting of the will was not the handwriting of Alfred Fuller. Before Mr. Shannon was sworn, Attorney Collins made an objection to admitting any testimony of the handwriting of Alfred Fuller.

He argued that it made no difference whether the will was or was not in the handwriting of Alfred Fuller.

At 3:30 o'clock Attorney Collins completed his opening argument on the relevancy of testimony of the handwriting of Alfred Fuller, and a recess taken.

District Attorney Sproul will commence his argument on the convening of Court, and probably consume the balance of the day.

The following is a brief and general summary of Collins' argument:

First—He objected to the introduction of any testimony showing that the will was not in the handwriting of Alfred Fuller, on the ground that such testimony was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. If the will should be proved a forgery he claims it would not be competent testimony in this case.

Second—Assuming that they do prove that the handwriting of the will is not Alfred Fuller's, they would have to show that it was not written at Fuller's request, or by his authority.

Third—That such testimony is inadmissible to connect the defendant with another person.

Fourth—That it is improper to admit evidence on the theory that a conspiracy had existed between defendant and others.

Fifth—The credibility of Garner as a witness is a question for the court to decide, not for the jury. Collins holding that Garner being a self-confessed perjurer, was not a competent witness in the case, he therefore attacked his credibility.

Sixth—That Rodley's testimony, given at the probate of the will, was not material to the issues of the case, and quoted authorities to show that the evidence must be material as to the crime of perjury.

Court Notes.

Special to the Enterprise

OROVILLE, Jan. 29.—All jurors were excused until next Friday morning, except those in the (Rodley) case.

In the case of the People vs. Boyd—Attorney Gardner appeared for Boyd in the Superior Court this morning and asked that the order fixing the trial for Thursday next be vacated and that the trial be set for Thursday, Feb. 10, at 11 a. m.

FORGERY TRIAL STILL CONTINUES

Introduction of Evidence Renewed This Morning.

EXPERT KYTKA ON THE STAND

Judge Gray Overrules the Objections of Attorney Collins to the Introduction of Testimony to Prove the Signature of Alfred Fuller and Mrs. Minnie Housworth.

Special to the ENTERPRISE

OROVILLE, Jan. 30.—At the conclusion of the argument yesterday afternoon on the question of the admissibility of evidence tending to prove the will of Alfred Fuller a forgery, and other points of evidence, as briefly outlined in last evening's ENTERPRISE, Judge Gray announced that he would rule upon the questions argued as they should come up in the progress of the trial. Court then adjourned until this morning.

The trial opened this morning by the introduction of testimony, on the part of the prosecution to show that the will of Alfred Fuller was a forgery. Attorney Collins, for the defense, raised his objection to the introduction of such testimony on the grounds set forth in his argument of yesterday. The objection was overruled and exception taken.

Deputy Clerk Belding was the first witness called by the State and produced the records of the Clerk's office showing the proceedings had upon the probate of the alleged Fuller will, a number of documents were introduced and admitted in evidence under objection and exception by Attorney Collins.

Mrs. Minnie James was the next witness. She was the Official Court Reporter at the time of the probate of the will, November 23, 1898. She was called to read from her court notes taken on that occasion all the testimony of Mrs. Minnie Housworth relating to the probate of the will, which she did under objection from Attorney Collins. Objection overruled and evidence admitted. Exception taken.

Attorney Sproul next introduced testimony to prove the handwriting of Mrs. Minnie Housworth.

Mrs. Mattie Rexford of Chico was first called for this purpose and upon being shown a framed letter, and asked if she could identify it, testified that she could, and that it was a letter received by her from Mrs. Housworth, and so identified it. The letter was introduced in evidence.

John Shannon was then called to the stand and testified that he saw Alfred Fuller write his (Fuller's) name to the document (Attorney Sproul showing the document) and that he (Shannon) afterwards signed the same document as a witness. The document was admitted in evidence.

E. B. Collins was next sworn. He identified the signature of A. Fuller to documents relating to the estate of E. Fuller.

Collins was a clerk in the office of Park Henshaw at the time A. Fuller was administering upon the estate of E. Fuller, and in such capacity became acquainted with the handwriting of Alfred Fuller. He knew the signature of A. Fuller and identified the signatures shown him as those of A. Fuller.

The documents were admitted in evidence.

W. M. Marvin, book-keeper for F. W. Miller Co., was the next witness called. He was shown a letter purported to be signed by Minnie Housworth, dated January 29th, 1898. He testified that the letter contained an order for groceries, and was accompanied by $10.00, but that the $10.00 did not cover the amount of the bill of groceries, and that the balance due was charged to Mrs. Housworth, who afterwards called at the store and paid the difference. This letter was also admitted.

Assistant District Attorney A. F. Jones was then called. Attorney Collins objected to one of the prosecuting attorneys giving testimony in the case. The objection was overruled, and exception noted by Attorney Collins, the witness being then sworn. He was shown the petition of Mrs. Minnie Housworth for the probate of the Fuller will signed by Mrs. Housworth. On being asked if he could identify the signature thereto as that of Mrs. Minnie Housworth's, he said that he could, but did not see her sign her name—he gave her the petition to sign and she afterward returned it to him signed.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

E. B. Collins was recalled and asked his opinion in regard to certain writings purporting to be A. Fuller's. Attorney Collins objected to such opinion as not being competent evidence, and the objection was sustained. The witness was excused.

Mrs. E. I. Montgomery was then called, and identified various letters she had received from A. Fuller. She received the letters from Fuller while a tenant of Fuller, together with receipts for rent. The letters and receipts were admitted in evidence under objection.

H. D. Lusson, former County Clerk, was next called. He testified that he as County Clerk took the alleged Fuller will to San Francisco on Dec. 12, 1898, and there had it photographed by Theodore Kytka.

Kytka was the next witness. The prosecution expect to prove by him that the Fuller will is a forgery. After answering the preliminary questions as to residence, occupation, etc., he testified that he had taken negatives of the Fuller will, and from the negatives had made what he called "compact prints." These negatives and prints were then introduced in evidence under strong objections from Attorney Collins. He also produced enlarged negatives of letters written by Fuller and Mrs. Housworth. The letters having been introduced, the negatives and "compact prints" were submitted to the jury.

The witness was giving his reasons for his conclusions as to certain matters when Collins objected, and the attorneys are arguing the question.

All the evidence introduced to-day was objected to by Attorney Collins and his objections overruled by the Court, to which Collins took exception.

VOL. XLVI. CHICO, CALIFORNIA, THU[

HANDWRITING STUDY BY THEODORE KYTKA

Permitted to Tell Why He Believes Mrs. Houseworth Wrote the Will

COMPARISONS OF WRITING MADE

Attorney Geo. D. Collins to Take the Expert in Hand This Morning for Cross-examination

OROVILLE, Jan. 31.—The attendance at the Rodley trial at halfpast nine this morning, was rather small although the number of ladies who rush through their early household duties in order to secure good seats shows no sign of diminishing. Assistant District Attorney Jones was not present to-day having been called to San Francisco on other business, neither was Mrs Rodley, the wife of the defendant.

The question which was being debated at the close of yesterday's session while Expert Kytka was on the stand, was, "State your reasons upon which your opinion is based." The reason called for was why he believed Mrs. Houseworth wrote the will, and to this the defense objected. Mr. Sproul was prepared this morning to quote authorities showing the propriety of such question, and he cited numerous authorities. The court considered them sufficient and ruled that the question was proper. Expert Kytka then continued his testimony.

He exhibited to the jury his photographic copies and the original documents, both the will and the letters admitted as having been written by Mrs. Houseworth. No reference was made nor was the will compared with any writing of Fuller's for the reason that the admission made yesterday by the defense that the will was not in the handwriting of Fuller rendered this unnecessary.

Mr. Kytka took up the analysis of the writing in a close and careful manner comparing certain words and the way in which they were formed in the will and the admitted writing. For instance, the letter "M" as it appears in the will "Mrs. Minnie" was shown to be identical with other "M's" in her handwriting. All her letters "r" are made with a loop, so are the ones in the will. (Incidently it may be said that Fuller never made an "r" in this way.)

Her letter "e" appears in admitted standards as stronger and more heavy than other letters; this characteristic also appears in the will as in "Minnie", "estate," etc.

The capital "H" in the will and the accepted standards were shown to have the same two heavy straight lines extending below the base line. The letters "use" as appeared in the word Houseworth in the will was pointed out as being of peculiar likeness to the standard writing, the "s" being looped. In the Fuller writings no looped "s" appears. To print all the comparisons made by witness would be tiresome and of little interest unless the reader had the exhibits before him. The jurors made a most careful examination of the similarities pointed out to them and apparently take deep interest in the testimony of the expert. Mr. Kytka occasionally dropped into argument to sustain his contentions with the result that he and Collins had several humorous passages at arms.

Expert Kytka took up the entire afternoon with his analysis of the handwritings submitted in the case, and it must be admitted that he made a strong witness for the prosecution, providing that proof of the will being written entirely by another person shall count for anything. He compared the word "Minnie" as written in the will with the "Minnie" as written by Mrs. Houseworth in signing her name at the time she signed the petition to A F Jones officer asking for the probate of the famous will. The similarity of the signatures was very pronounced.

MRS. MINNIE HOUSEWORTH

The expert's comparison of the figures, "1893" as they appear in the will and as they appear in the standards of handwriting showed radical differences.

This morning Theodore Kytka will be turned over to Attorney Collins for cross examination.

ABANDONS THE WILL

Time for Mrs. Houseworth to File Statement Expires

Special to the Enterprise

OROVILLE, January 31.—There is but one chance remaining for Mrs. Minnie Houseworth to secure the estate of Alfred Fuller, deceased, and that is to appeal from the judgment of the Superior Court wherein the contest of the famous will which has been the cause of herself being held at the county jail and also of the confinement of Dr J. Ellis Rodley and John Garner, was sustained. The time for Mrs. Houseworth to file her statement of the case on appeal expired today and she has not been heard from in this regard, hence her only recourse is to appeal from the judgment.

It is not surprising that Mrs. Houseworth, who is a unique figure in connection with the sensational developments surrounding the famous will, has allowed the will case to go by default. Her hands will be well occupied for sometime to come in defending herself against vigorous prosecution on charges of perjury and forgery. Her failure to further defend the will, however, cannot be taken as an admission of its being a forgery, for it is well known that at the time of hearing on the contest she had great difficulty in securing counsel. She had attorneys employed, one of whom was F. C. Lusk, and when the case began to warm up, he deserted her, and, being without an abundance of ready cash, she was able only at the last moment to secure the assistance of counsel. She has therefore at this time good reasons for abandoning her fight for the estate.

In view of the two serious charges against her, Mrs. Houseworth is absolutely silent at this time regarding the entire proposition. As the trial of Dr Rodley progresses, the defense is doing all in its power to secure her as a witness, but Mrs Houseworth has not manifested any desire to become one. Since her arrest no one has been able to secure a word from her regarding the case, and although she is the beneficiary under the will and the writing expert in the case has given it as his opinion that she wrote the will, signature and body, the general opinion is that her chances of getting out of the trouble are better than those of Rodley and Garner. Why this opinion, can not be stated.

ATTORNEY COLLINS REGISTERS HIS KICKS

Objects to Most Important Evidence To be Offered by the Prosecution

[illegible] 0, 1900

WRITING OF THE WILL NOT IN IT

Claims it Matters Not Who Wrote the Will—Attacks the Competency of John Garner

Chico [illegible] Record

Special to the Record.

OROVILLE, Jan. 29.—The proceedings on the trial of Dr. Rodley this morning in the Superior Court were almost devoid of interest save in so far as a lengthy argument by Mr. Collins, which was unfinished at noon, served to keep at tension the mind which is acute enough to comprehend all the technical points he advanced.

At the opening of court the Judge made an order that all jurors not sworn in the Rodley trial, should be dismissed until Friday morning.

Thos Boyd, who is charged with an assault upon the person of his daughter, was brought into court, a commission in lunacy having passed upon his sanity and declared that he is responsible for his actions. An order was set down continuing his trial until February 19th at 11 a m.

Colonel Batchelder was recalled to the stand and his statements which seemed at variance now and at the grand jury examination were pointed out to him, particularly that portion in which he said before the grand jury that Rodley made no specified offer as a remuneration if he consented to sign the will, whereas at the present time he fixes the amount at $2000. Col. Batchelder made the same explanation of this as he did other discrepancies—that now his mind is clear and calm and at the first time he was so troubled in mind that the only wonder is that he was able to make any connected statement at all.

Mr. Collins read from a file of the Chico Enterprise matter similar in import to that read from the Chico Record on Saturday, relative to the special meeting of the City Trustees at which an invitation was extended to Batchelder to deliver the oration. He had no recollection of having read the same. All this was to impeach the witness' evidence and to bring before the jury the allegation of the defense that the letter written to Batchelder by Rodley was written for the purpose of getting the witness to Chico to extend to him an invitation to deliver the oration. Col. Batchelder was dismissed from the stand about half an hour after the convening of court.

When District Attorney Sproul called John Shannon to the stand for the purpose of securing evidence regarding the handwriting of Alfred Fuller, Attorney Collins objected to the offering of any evidence to show that the will was not in the handwriting of Alfred Fuller, claiming that the handwriting of Fuller was in no way material to the issue at hand. By agreement, the jury was excluded from the courtroom, that argument might be had. It was apparent that the prosecution will before the close of the trial endeavor to introduce testimony along several general lines to which the attorney's will object, and to save time, Mr. Collins made argument against allowing testimony to establish several different propositions. As the questions arise in the course of the trial, Mr. Collins will object, and the court, having heard the arguments, will pass upon them immediately.

First, Mr. Collins contended that there is a material difference between the language of the indictment and the language which the transcript shows Rodley uttered when on the stand at the time of the hearing on probate of the will; therefore, that the indictment is not drawn according to law. He then stated that he would object to John Garner giving any testimony, and he would ask the Court, not the jury, to pass upon the credibility of Garner. Counsel claimed that Garner, being a self confessed perjurer, cannot be a competent witness. He further urged that any testimony tending to show that the will is not in the handwriting of Alfred Fuller is irrelevant and immaterial; that as the indictment does not charge that Rodley swore that the will was in Alfred Fuller's handwriting, to prove that it was not in Fuller's handwriting is not permissible in the present case; that even if it is proven that the will was forged, that evidence would be immaterial.

Assuming the will to not be in Fuller's handwriting, it would then be necessary to prove that it was not written at Fuller's request or by his authority before a forgery would be proven.

Collins next laid down the proposition that the introduction of testimony for the purpose of connecting defendant with another person to show a conspiracy is also inadmissable. He further contended that the materiality of the evidence charged to be perjury must be established, and that in this case the materiality has not been shown.

Collins' argument was a deep treatise of the questions at hand, and he cited numerous authorities.

District Attorney Sproul replied briefly and also cited numerous authorities.

An adjournment was then taken until tomorrow morning, when John Shannon, Mrs. Montgomery and E. B. Collins will be called to testify regarding the handwriting of Alfred Fuller, providing Judge Gray holds that such testimony is admissible.

Writing Expert Kytka will probably follow with his analysis of the writing.

When the Grand Jury of Butte county found true bills charging Dr. J Ellis Rodley, John M Garner and Mrs. Minnie Housworth with perjury and forgery, they believed they had scored the first point in putting a stop to the wholesale robbery of dead men's estates which has been going on in this county for many years past. It was a serious matter to charge three persons so widely known and possessing so many friends with crimes of so grave a nature, and the prosecution of the defendants became, therefore, of great importance, not only to the grand jurors, but to the citizens of Butte who perchance may be fortunate enough to leave neat estates for the benefit of their dependents now. Vigorous prosecution is also essential to the defendants, if they be innocent. If they should be acquitted of the charges because of luke-warm prosecution they never could live down the stain, and the majority of the people would believe them guilty. District Attorney Sproul who has had the cases in hand since the Grand Jury returned its findings, has been giving them almost his entire time, and the unanimous opinion prevailing among those who are watching the trial as it progresses, is that Sproul is leaving no stone unturned, the turning of which might reveal facts tending to show that Rodley did attest the will after the death of Alfred Fuller. The public is resting content.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY SPROUL
Who is directing the prosecution of Dr. J. Ellis Rodley.
[From a photograph taken a few years ago.]

RODLEY TRIAL PROGRESSING

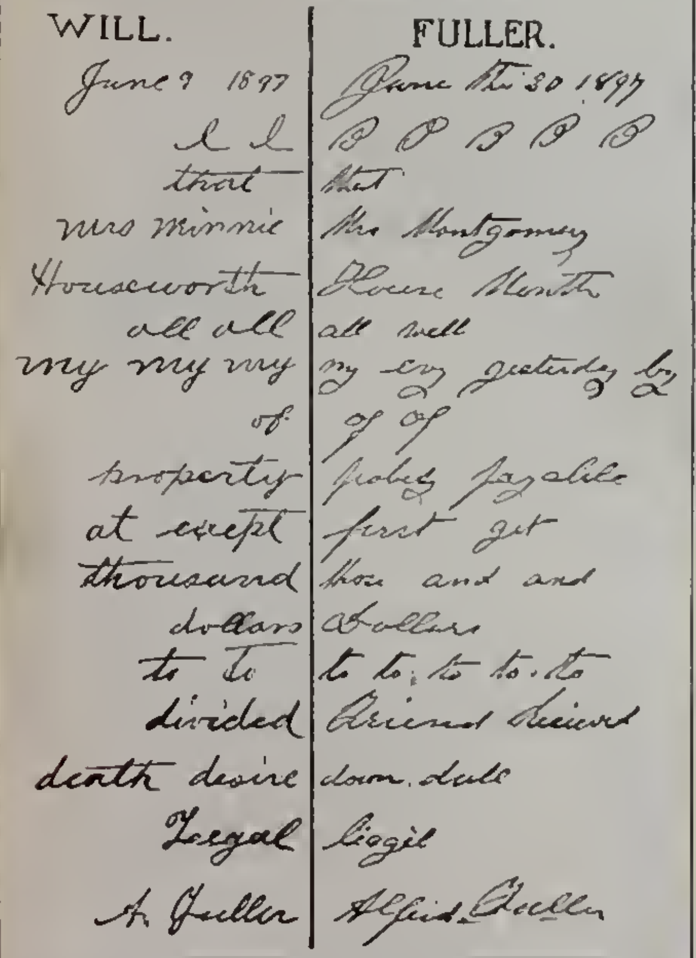
Expert Kytka Under Fire From the Defense.

SWEARINGEN REPEATS HIS STORY

But Denies Intimate Relations With Mrs. Housworth—Says That He Did Not Understand the Question At the Time of Trial of the Will Case.

Special to the ENTERPRISE

OROVILLE, Feb. 1.—The Rodley trial to-day proved very interesting, not only to the counsel on both sides



COMPARISON OF HANDWRITING BY EXPERT KYTKA.

The above is a fac-simile of a chart prepared and used in the trial for the purpose of a comparison between the handwriting of the will and the genuine handwriting of Alfred Fuller. The left hand column, marked "will," contains fac-simile copies of words from the will, and the right hand, marked "Fuller," are from letters of Alfred Fuller. The comparison of the letters "I," "J," "M," "H," "F," "y" and "r," and the words "legal," "dollar," "of" and "that;" also the general slope of the writing, the angle of curvature of final "l," "d" and "t;" also the crossing of the "t's" are some of the principal points of comparison used by the expert, and will serve to illustrate the expert investigation of the writing of the will now being made before the jury.

and the defendant, but to the spectators as well. The cause of the particular interest was the cross-examination of Expert Theo. Kytka by Attorney Geo. D. Collins, and the quick exchanges of the attorney and the expert at times caused much amusement.

At one time Attorney Collins asked the witness if he could tell the speed of a writer, to which Kytka replied that he could.

At one time the counsel for defense started to ask some questions which were quite lengthy, but Kytka frequently anticipated the question and answered before the question was finished. At one of these times the witness remarked that he "had been on the stand too often to be caught asleep."

In answer to a question as to what books witness had studied on the subject of handwriting, Kytka replied that he had studied under Prof. Frazier, Prof. Hagan, and the son of Spencer, inventor of the Spencerian system, with whom he was personally acquainted.

By means of a chart the expert demonstrated the dissimilarity in handwriting whereby any particular handwriting could be identified.

The cross-examination continued up to the noon recess, at which time an adjournment was taken to 1:30.

After the noon recess John Swearingen was called to the stand and gave testimony substantially the same as that given at the hearing in the will case, December 8th, with the exception of that part where he had previously stated that he had been intimate with Mrs. Housworth. In explanation of this difference he stated that he did not understand the question and did not mean to convey the impression which his words would indicate.

After stating that he had known Mrs. Housworth for the past twenty years, witness went on to say that

Collins then asked the witness if he could tell, by examining the handwriting of a person, man or woman, how many words they had written per second, to which Kytka replied, "No, I am not as speedy as that."

During the forenoon there were many sharp sallies between the attorney and witness, which the jurymen and spectators seemed to enjoy. Even Juror Crum's badly swollen face was frequently seen to light up with a smile.

Kytka was asked if he could recognize the handwriting of a sick person or opium fiend, to which he replied that he could. He gave, as an illustration, the case of a woman, who had, while in health, written her will, and who afterwards, while on the operating table, and just before death, added a codicil to that will. In this case the characteristics of the woman's writing were perfectly plain. While the writing in the codicil showed a highly excited frame of mind and nervousness in the extreme, it still bore the characteristics which were peculiar to this particular woman's writing, which characteristics no one could successfully imitate.

The expert stated emphatically that no person living would write just the same twice, but in the writing of each person there was a peculiarity which no amount of practice could perfectly imitate.

Attorney Collins plied the witness with a long series of questions as to the difference between the handwriting of a man and a woman, as to the characters and rules by which the expert could identify handwriting; he discussed the dissimilarity existing in the will which the expert said were assimilations of Fuller's writing and were attempts to disguise the individuality of the writer, and tried to test the memory of the expert as to the letters used as exemplars. In fact the expert was subjected to a most searching and exhaustive cross-examination, but his answers were always ready, and all efforts to "mix" him were futile.

RODLEY TRIAL PROGRESSING

Concluded from Third Page.

about May, 1898, he had a conversation with her at the Hallam House in Chico; that Mrs. Housworth told him at that time that somebody had told her that Fuller had been seen to give a letter to R. R. Fimple (now deceased), and that the letter referred to was Alfred Fuller's will; that all that was necessary to make the will valid was to get two witnesses to sign it, and that as Dr. Rodley had agreed to sign it, she wanted him (Swearingen) to sign as the other witness. She offered to give him $5000 as a compensation for his signature. Witness told Mrs. Housworth that he could not sign the will and left her. Some two weeks after this conversation witness met Mrs. Housworth and she told him that she did not require him as a witness as she had gotten John Garner to sign the will with Dr. Rodley. During this last conversation she told witness that she had sent the will to H. Carmack; that while she was in San Francisco she stepped into a grocery store and procured an envelope and got the clerk to address it for her. The envelope was addressed to Mr. Carmack.

After returning to Chico, she put the will into this envelope and dropped it into the postoffice when no one was around.

She begged witness not to say anything about the matter, and told him that if he gave evidence against her before the Grand Jury, she would kill herself.

Swearingen stated that it was after Fuller's death that he held these conversations with Mrs. Housworth.

LATER.

Special to the Enterprise

OROVILLE, Feb. 1, 5 p. m.—At the conclusion of Swearingen's testimony, John Garner was called and in every particular his testimony was the same as heretofore published. He told in detail of the meeting with Rodley and of his having signed the will after Fuller's death.

After the direct examination Garner was turned over to the defense, and was subjected to a severe cross-examination, which was not concluded up to the time that court adjourned

STICKS TO HIS ORIGINAL STORY

Garner's Testimony Remains the Same.

RODLEY IS ASKED HARD QUESTIONS

Flatly Contradicts Col. Batchelder's Testimony; But District Attorney Sproul Forces Him Into a Very Uncomfortable Position—Adjourned To Monday.

Special to the ENTERPRISE.

OROVILLE, February 2.—John Garner, the old farmer who, according to his own story, gave way to temptation and signed what he confesses to have known to be a forged will, has again told in court the story of his crime. With eyes moistened with tears, he repeated the story of how he was approached by Dr. Rodley some time after the death of Alfred Fuller, and offered $5000 to sign a document which he knew to be fraudulent; how he at first spurned the offer of gold for his self-respect, but how, after repeated attempts to resist the temptation, he yielded. How he signed the document and how the knowledge of his guilt had weighted him down. This man, who had for the past 30 years resided in the county of Butte, and who had been recognized as an honest man by all his acquaintances, again tells the story of his downfall, knowing full well that to tell the truth he was convicting himself of a crime which would send him to the State prison.

John Garner knows and feels keenly the disgrace which he has brought upon himself, but he repeats the statement made in the office of District Attorney Sproul: "I have stood the ordeal of silence long enough, and come what will, I will tell the whole truth."

Yesterday afternoon he did as he had promised, and despite the most rigid cross-examination, he held to the story previously told. But he went further and told of the advice given him by Constable M. H. Gee, while the latter was conducting him (Garner) to Oroville the day after the arrest. At that time Constable Gee told the prisoner that if he was guilty of the crime the best thing he could do would be to tell the truth to the District Attorney. After arriving in Oroville he had received the same advice from Sheriff Wilson, and upon being released on bonds, he returned to Chico, called at the office of District Attorney Sproul and told the whole story. This story is well known to all residents of Butte county.

At the conclusion of the cross-examination District Attorney Sproul asked a few more questions in re-direct examination, during which witness stated that his confession was not made with any view of leniency, as District Attorney Sproul warned him of the probable consequences of making confession to so serious a crime. On the evening that Garner arrived at Chico, after securing bonds, he went immediately to the office of District Attorney Sproul, where he made a statement, but at the suggestion of Mr. Sproul, waited until the next day before signing it.

Col. H. T. Batchelder was recalled and questioned as to his manner of entering and leaving Dr. Rodley's office in Chico, at the time he was shown the will. Witness stated positively that he entered the private consultation room and left the same way, not entering the reception room at all. He was asked by Attorney Collins: "Did you know that Mrs. Lark Dunn was in the reception room," to which he replied that he did not.

Attorney Collins then moved that all the testimony relating to the handwriting of Mrs. Housworth, the handwriting of the will, and the testimony of John Swearingen, be stricken out. The motion was passed to this afternoon for argument.

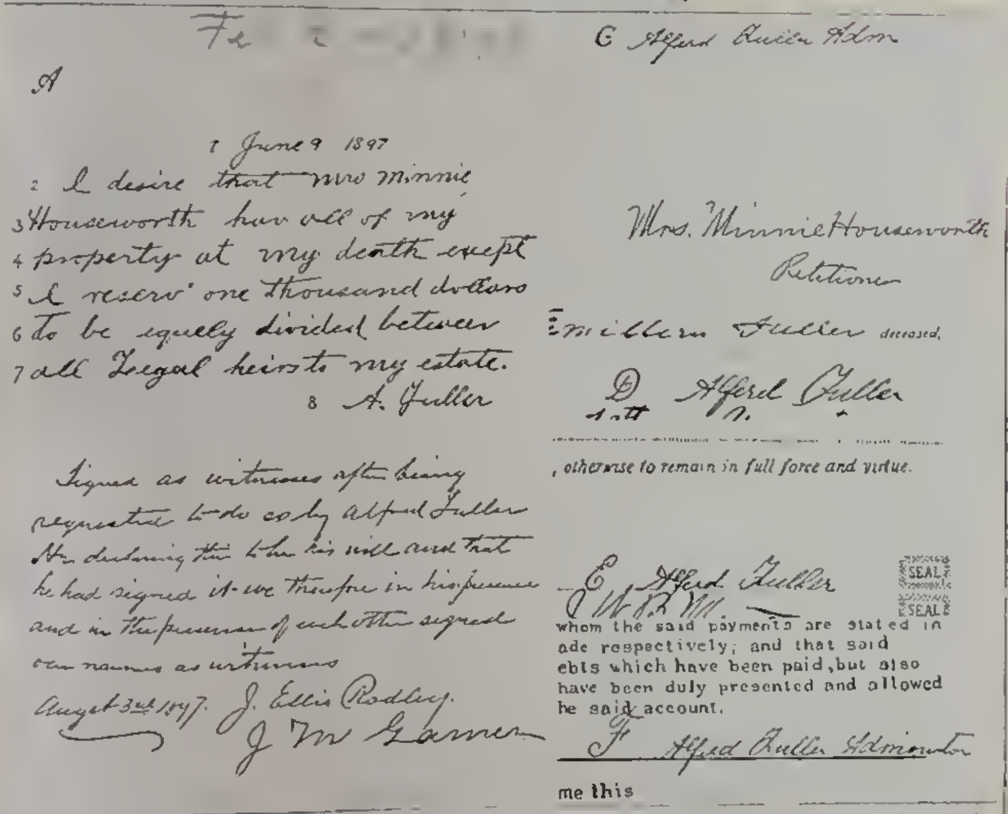
At 10:55 Dr. Rodley was called to the stand to testify in his own behalf, and he recited at great length his side of the case, during which he flatly contradicted the statements of Col. Batchelder.

He said that he had resided in Chico since 1888, and had a wife and two children.

Witness was shown the letter which Col. Batchelder had received at Biggs and asked if he (Rodley) had written it, witness replying that he did. Upon being asked to recite the circumstances under which he wrote the letter, Rodley said: "It was about 11 a. m. on Friday, Feb. 17, 1898, that Mr. Sproul telephoned to me and asked me if I had heard that the Maine was blown up, at the same time telling me that the Governor had set apart February 21st as a day of mourning. Mr. Sproul suggested that a meeting be called to arrange for suitable exercises on the day of mourning in Chico and said that he (Sproul) would speak, also naming others who would deliver an address. I said that it would be a good idea to invite Batchelder to speak on that occasion.

"Later I met Trustee Canfield and spoke to him about getting Batchelder to speak at the exercises, and Canfield asked me to write to Batchelder to come to Chico, but not to tell him (Batchelder) what was wanted, as some other arrangements might be made. On this suggestion of Canfield, I did write to Batchelder, requesting him to come to Chico, and told him that his expenses would be paid.

"Batchelder came to Chico as requested, and with his wife came to my office. I was busy with a patient in the consultation room, and Batchelder and his wife waited in the reception room. After dismissing my patient I opened the folding doors between the reception room and consultation room and invited Batchelder and his wife to



Fe

G Alfred Fuller Adm

A

1 June 9 1897
2 I desire that Mrs Minnie
3 Housewarth have all of my
4 property at my death except
5 I reserv' one thousand dollars
6 to be equally divided between 7 all legal heirs to my estate.
8 A. Fuller

Mrs. Minnie Housewarth
Petitioner

Signed as witnesses after being requested to do so by Alfred Fuller He declaring this to be his will and that he had signed it we therefore in his presence and in the presence of each other signed our names as witnesses

August 3rd 1897. J. Ellis Rodley.
J M Garner

Alfred Fuller deceased.

D Alfred Fuller

, otherwise to remain in full force and virtue.

E Alfred Fuller
W R W

SEAL
SEAL

whom the said payments are stated in ade respectively; and that said ebts which have been paid, but also have been duly presented and allowed he said account.

F Alfred Fuller Administrator me this

The above is a fac-simile of the exhibit prepared by Expert Kytka, whereby he shows the will and attestation clause, also the signature of Mrs. Housworth, which was signed to the petition for the probate of will, and signatures of Alfred Fuller made at different times.

STICKS TO HIS ORIGINAL STORY

Concluded from Third Page.

come in. At that time there were several other people in the room, among them being Mrs. Lark Dunn. Batchelder and his wife came into the consultation room, and, after a few words, I invited him to speak at the "Maine" memorial services. He told me that there would probably be a request for him to speak at Biggs on that day, but if he did not speak there he would come to Chico."

Rodley was then questioned about his trip to Biggs previous to meeting Batchelder in Chico, and he stated that on February 15th he was called to Biggs to see Mrs. Cal Hogan. After visiting Mrs. Hogan he left his team at the livery stable and went to the Hamilton Hotel where he met Col. Batchelder. Batchelder told witness that he (Batchelder) and wife were just going to dinner and invited Rodley to accompany them, which he did. After dinner witness accompanied Mr. and Mrs. Batchelder on a visit to Geo. Ditzler and wife. About 9 o'clock, and while at Ditzler's house, the stable man came for Rodley, telling him that one of witness' horses was sick. Rodley, Batchelder and Ditzler went to the stable where Rodley proceeded to administer medicine to the sick horse. Batchelder and Ditzler remained with him for some time when they left, Rodley remaining with the sick horse until late at night, and leaving for home very early the next morning.

On the road home from Biggs he met Col. Eddy who told him about the blowing up of the Maine.

Witness was shown the will and identified it as the document he had signed at the request of Alfred Fuller. Continuing he stated that he had not seen the will from the time he signed as a witness until the document was presented for probate.

After the noon recess the attorneys argued on the motion of Collins to strike out testimony, which motion was denied by the court.

Dr. Rodley was then called for cross-examination, and District Attorney Sproul subjected him to a rapid fire of questions.

The following question by Sproul staggered the witness: "Doctor, did you not make a statement to Sheriff Wilson, on the day of your arrest, to the effect that Fuller had made his will, but that it had been lost, and that you had made a copy of it; and that you took the copy to Biggs and asked Batchelder if he would sign it; that Batchelder refused to have anything to do with it, and that on the road home you tore it up and threw it away?" Rodley at first said he thought this was correct, but later "hedged" and refused to say yes or no.

Sproul then asked witness if it was true that at one time he and Mrs. Housworth had not been on friendly terms. Witness said yes, that they had not spoken for some time, until she approached him while sitting in his buggy in front of the drug store and asked him if he had not witnessed the will of Alfred Fuller. He told her that he could not talk about it until the proper time. She asked if Fuller had not left his estate to her, to which h replied no.

In regard to Col. Batchelder and wife coming to the office together, Rodley sticks to that point persistently.

District Attorney Sproul then asked "In regard to that letter—did you not say to Sheriff Wilson that there was nothing in it?" This question Rodley evaded, and would give no definite answer.

There were several witnesses for the defense who had been subpoenaed to testify to certain statements Rodley is alleged to have made regarding the will, but on motion of District Attorney Sproul, all of this testimony was shut out.

This left the defense short of witnesses, and as it would be impossible to get others before to-morrow at noon, an adjournment was taken until Monday morning at 10:30 o'clock.

SWEARINGEN RELATES HIS STARTLING STORY

Mrs. Houseworth Proposed to Give Him Five Thousand For His Signature

GARNER REPEATS HIS CONFESSION

Old Farmer Who Admits Yielding to Rodley's Persuasion Wavered Not Under Cross-examination

Special to THE RECORD

OROVILLE, Feb 1.—The trial of Dr. Rodley proceeded this morning with Expert Kytka on the iron and Mr Collins for the defense conducting the testing. The prosecution asked him no more direct questions and the cross-examination began at once. As was anticipated, the situation was at times truly enjoyable to the audience, and the technical tendency of the testimony was swallowed up in continual sparring between the attorney and the expert. Mr. Kytka at times was somewhat bothered to answer the questions in explicit English as he is a native of Vienna, but on the whole he came out very well and the defense did not in any material particular "rattle" him. He was bright enough and has been on the witness stand so many times in his experience, that he could occasionally give the attorney as good as he sent. In no way was the questioning and sparring otherwise than two bright men would indulge in, each seeking to place himself in the most favorable position before the twelve men who compose the jury.

In answer to Mr. Collins, Kytka said that he considered the individuality of the handwriting the only safe test. He was asked if he did not consider the "complexion" of the document—that is its appearance as one looked at it as a whole. To get it clearly before him Mr. Collins drew the comparison of the impression made upon a person by another's complexion. In that regard the witness said that in some cases the person's complexion was powdered, and so it was with handwriting—it has a false complexion, and as a result the complexion of handwriting was no guidance to him in forming his opinion. He had to descend into details to establish the identity of the hand. He placed no force upon handwriting that looked similar. He was asked if in his opinion the disputed will was in the natural handwriting of the person who wrote it, or was a tracing or a drawing. He answered that it was in some particulars the natural handwriting of the person who wrote it with an attempt to disguise, and was in other points an attempted drawing from the handwriting of the person whose characteristics it was desired to simulate. He was asked

"Is the disputed document a tracing?"

"No, it is not a tracing; it is too 'Irish' a job."

The reply caused even His Honor to smile and the bailiff to seize his gavel, and the court ordered the latter part of the answer stricken out.

Kytka declared that another point in causing him to come to his opinion that the will was in some respects an attempted drawing was owing to the uneven flow of ink in the formation of many of the letters. He declared that the writer had both attempted to imitate and disguise. In answer to questions propounded by the defense to test the extent of his claim to expertness, Kytka said that he could tell from handwriting the sex of the writer, ... [illegible] that caused by the fear in attempted fraud was apparent, the latter being designated as the tremor of fear. To substantiate his position he quoted numerous authorities. He could tell in some instances whether the writer was sane or insane, and whether in good or bad health, but he could not tell whether suffering from grief or transported with joy. No man he declared ever writes twice alike, but in every man's writing there always appear certain characteristics one of which is the manner of spacing.

Soon after court convened for the afternoon session, Expert Kytka was dismissed as a witness, and "Uncle" John Swearingen was called to the stand. That Swearingen and Garner would testify yesterday during the afternoon had been well noised about town and there was a crowded courtroom, many of the spectators being ladies. As "Uncle" John stepped up to the witness stand, every neck in the room would have been longer had they been of rubber, for it was expected that the old farmer might be called upon to give some testimony of a rather sensational nature. After the witness had seated himself comfortably in his chair, one leg swung over his cane, Attorney Collins arose and stated that during the examination of the witness some rather indecent matters might be touched upon and some of the ladies might desire to make their escape. Expecting to witness a rush for the door by the feminine members of the audience, the Court, attorneys and jurymen took what they thought would be a parting glance at the assembled millinery. A few of the ladies left, but the majority manifested no signs of a desire to go.

"Well," said District Attorney Sproul, "if they do not care to go, we may as well proceed."

Swearingen told of his having met Mrs. Houseworth in Chico in May, 1898, and went with her to her room in the Hallam House. She there told him that Alfred Fuller had left a will, bequeathing to her his property. The will, she said, was genuine, but was not witnessed. She also informed him that her lawyer had told her that all needed to make the will valid was the signatures of two witnesses. She told him that Rodley had agreed to sign as one of the witnesses, and he wanted another who was not a tramp. She then proposed that Swearingen be the second witness and she would pay him $5,000. She said that someone had told her that Fuller had given the will to R R Faught.

A few weeks after his first conversation with Mrs. Houseworth, she store there address the envelope in which she mailed the will to H. Carmack.

Witness and Mrs. Houseworth had a later conversation in the F W Miller Co. store. She asked him if he had said anything about what she had told him, and he replied that he had not. She declared that if he did she would kill herself.

From the witness Attorney Collins on cross-examination tried to draw out testimony to the effect that witness had made indecent proposals to Mrs. Houseworth, and to make it appear that because Mrs. Houseworth would not submit to his desires he sought revenge; also to establish that he was jealous of Alfred Fuller. Attention was called to his former testimony at the time of hearing on probate of will, that he had made indecent proposals to Mrs Houseworth. Witness said that when he thus testified he did not understand the question and was very much rattled.

Swearingen was asked regarding his having made the remark "If these people knew what I know, it would be worth $1000 to them," Collins making it appear that the remark indicated that he was inclined to accept a share of the estate. Swearingen replied that it was one of those fool remarks which people make sometimes unthinkingly.

He was asked if Richard White offered him $1000 to testify, and he replied that he did not. Swearingen withstood the searching cross-examination without swerving from his original story.

John Garner, the old farmer and stock raiser, who confessed his guilt a short time after his arrest and made a clean breast of his connection with the Fuller will, was next called. Since he went to the office of District Attorney Sproul and told the story of his own volition, he has been in the county jail awaiting sentence which will mean his going to the State prison. He feels the disgrace, but declares his satisfaction with his course in telling of the proposed steal. He testified that he was 57 years of age and has a wife and three children; that he has resided near Chico since 1861, where he was engaged in farming and stockraising. He rehearsed the story of Rodley having hailed him at the corner of Second and Broadway in May, 1898, and together they walked to the stairway in the Woods building. After going up two or three steps they sat down. Rodley told him that Fuller had made a will and left it unwitnessed; that there would be $500 in it for him if he would sign it with him. Garner refused. Rodley sought him several times after that to sign it, and in August, Rodley took him up to his office and urged him to sign. Rodley signed first and then Garner wrote his name. Rodley then wrote the attestation above the signatures. Garner identified the will, and declared that he did not sign the will in Fuller's presence; that Fuller was dead when he did sign it, and that his testimony at the hearing on probate of the will was false. He admitted that he had pleaded guilty to a charge of perjury, that he expected to go to State prison, and that he made the confession without promise of reward. Garner was a pitiful sight as he told of his guilt.

On cross-examination Collins went at the witness rough shod. He read to him the entire testimony given by the witness at the hearing on probate of the will, and attempted to entangle him but was not able to defeat his confession. He did draw out the testimony that during a trip of the witness and Constable Gee between Oroville and Chico, Gee gave to him details of the evidence against him, and told him that the best thing he could do would be to tell the truth, or they would cinch him; also, that Sheriff Wilson practically told him the same thing. This, Collins endeavored to make appear as being an offer of reward for a confession.

Throughout the examination the witness' testimony was unshaken.

Garner will be further cross-examined today.

JOHN M. GARNER

Cross examination

Special to The Record

OROVILLE, Feb. 1.—The trial of Dr. Rodley proceeded this morning with Expert Kytka on the [illegible] and Mr. Collins for the defense conducting the testing. The prosecution asked him no more direct questions and the cross-examination began at once. As was anticipated, the situation was at times truly enjoyable to the audience, and the technical tendency of the testimony was swallowed up in continual sparring between the attorney and the expert. Mr. Kytka at times was somewhat bothered to answer the questions in explicit English as he is a native of Vienna, but on the whole he came out very well and the defense did not in any material particular "rattle" him. He was bright enough and has been on the witness stand so many times in his experience, that he could occasionally give the attorney as good as he sent. In no way was the questioning and sparring otherwise than two bright men would indulge in, each seeking to place himself in the most favorable position before the twelve men who compose the jury.

In answer to Mr. Collins, Kytka said that he considered the individuality of the handwriting the only safe test. He was asked if he did not consider the "complexion" of the document—that is its appearance as one looked at it as a whole. To get it clearly before him Mr. Collins drew the comparison of the impression made upon a person by another's complexion. In that regard the witness said that in some cases the person's complexion was powdered, and so it was with handwriting—it has a false complexion, and as a result the complexion of handwriting was no guidance to him in forming his opinion. He had to descend into details to establish the identity of the hand. He placed no force upon handwriting that looked similar. He was asked if in his opinion the disputed will was in the natural handwriting of the person who wrote it, or was a tracing or a drawing. He answered that it was in some particulars the natural handwriting of the person who wrote it with an attempt to disguise, and was in other points an attempted drawing from the handwriting of the person whose characteristics it was desired to simulate. He was asked:

"Is the disputed document a tracing?"

"No, it is not a tracing: it is too 'bum' a job."

The reply caused even His Honor to smile and the bailiff to seize his gavel, and the court ordered the latter part of the answer stricken out.

Kytka declared that another point in causing him to come to his opinion that the will was in some respects an attempted drawing was owing to the uneven flow of ink in the formation of many of the letters. He declared that the writer had both attempted to imitate and disguise. In answer to questions propounded by the defense to test the extent of his claim to expertness, Kytka said that he could tell from handwriting the sex of the writer, and could in many particulars arrive approximately at the age of the writer. He could tell whether the writer had good or bad nerves and declared that the handwriting of a drunkard, an opium smoker or a cigarette fiend was characterized in their penmanship. The tremor of the writer's nerves whether wrecked by these habits or dismissed as a witness and "Uncle" John Swearingen was called to the stand. That Swearingen and Garner would be witnesses during the afternoon had been well noised about town and there was a crowded courtroom, many of the spectators being ladies. As "Uncle" John crippled up to the witness stand, every neck in the room would have been longer had they been of rubber, for it was expected that the old farmer might be called upon to give some testimony of a rather sensational nature. After the witness had seated himself comfortably in his chair, one leg swung over his cane, Attorney Collins rose and stated that during the examination of the witness some rather indecent matters might be touched upon and some of the ladies might desire to make their escape. Expecting to witness a rush for the door by the feminine members of the audience, the Court, attorneys and jurymen took what they thought would be a parting glance at the assembled millinery. A few of the ladies left, but the majority manifested no signs of a desire to go.

JOHN M. GARNER

"Well," said District Attorney Sprunt, "if they do not care to go, we may as well proceed."

Swearingen told of his having met Mrs. Housworth in Chico in May, 1898, and went with her to her room in the Hallam House. She there told him that Alfred Fuller had left a will, bequeathing to her his property. The will, she said, was genuine, but was not witnessed. She also informed him that her lawyer had told her that all needed to make the will valid was the signatures of two witnesses. She told him that Rodley had agreed to sign as one of the witnesses, and he wanted another who was not a tramp. She then proposed that Swearingen be the second witness and she would pay him $5,000. She said that someone had told her that Fuller had given the will to R. R. Fimple.

A few weeks after his first conversation with Mrs. Housworth, she again asked witness to go to her room and he went. She there informed him that she did not need him as a witness as Rodley had gotten John Garner to sign.

At a later time she told Swearingen how she had taken the will to San Francisco and had a clerk in a grocery not submit to his desires he sought revenge; also to establish that he was jealous of Alfred Fuller. Attention was called to his former testimony at the time of hearing on probate of will, that he had made indecent proposals to Mrs. Housworth. Witness said that when he thus testified he did not understand the question and was very much rattled.

Swearingen was asked regarding his having made the remark "If those people knew what I know, it would be worth $1000 to them," Collins making it appear that the remark indicated that he was inclined to accept a share of the estate. Swearingen replied that it was one of those fool remarks which people make sometimes unthinkingly.

He was asked if Richard White offered him $1000 to testify, and he replied that he did not. Swearingen withstood the searching cross-examination without swerving from his original story.

John Garner, the old farmer and stock raiser, who confessed his guilt a short time after his arrest and made a [illegible] in May, 1898, and together they walked to the stairway in the Woods building. After going up two or three steps they sat down. Rodley told him that Fuller had made a will and left it unwitnessed; that there would be $5000 in it for him if he would sign it with him. Garner refused. Rodley sought him several times after that to sign it, and in August, Rodley took him up to his office and urged him to sign. Rodley signed first and then Garner wrote his name. Rodley then wrote the attestation above the signatures. Garner identified the will, and declared that he did not sign the will in Fuller's presence; that Fuller was dead when he did sign it, and that his testimony at the hearing on probate of the will was false. He admitted that he had pleaded guilty to a charge of perjury, that he expected to go to State prison, and that he made the confession without promise of reward. Garner was a pitiful sight as he told of his guilt.

On cross-examination Collins went at the witness rough shod. He read to him the entire testimony given by the witness at the hearing on probate of the will, and attempted to entangle him, but was not able to defeat his confession. He did draw out the testimony that during a trip of the witness and Constable Gee between Oroville and Chico, Gee gave to him details of the evidence against him, and told him that the best thing he could do would be to tell the truth, or they would cinch him; also, that Sheriff Wilson practically told him the same thing. This, Collins endeavored to make appear as being an offer of reward for a confession.

Throughout the examination the witness' testimony was unshaken.

Garner will be further cross-examined today.

SAYS SHERIFF WILSON MADE LOVE TO HER

Mrs. Rodley Takes the Stand for Her Husband.

THE DOCTOR EXPLAINS

He Endeavors to Clear Himself of Damaging Contradictions.

[Special Dispatch to "The Examiner."]

OROVILLE, February 6.—The defense to the Rodley case undertook to-day to shake the force of the testimony given against the doctor by Sheriff Wilson of Butte county, and the result was not pleasant for the Sheriff. He was held up to public scorn as a man who had used his official position in an endeavor to corrupt a suffering woman, the wife of his prisoner. More than that, he is charged by inference with perjury, in that he denied on the stand that he had done this thing.

Mrs. Rodley was the medium of these charges.

When Sheriff Wilson was on the stand Monday he was asked if he had made improper advances to Mrs. Rodley while her husband was in his custody, and he emphatically denied that he had. It was surmised at the time that the defense would put Mrs. Rodley on the stand, and there was not much surprise when the lady was called to the witness chair to-day. There was a momentary stir in the courtroom, however, and then absolute quiet while she told her story. It was a story such as no woman would care to repeat, especially in a crowded assemblage, but Mrs. Rodley wore a sprightly air and seemed little abashed by the nature of the tale she was there to unfold.

Mrs. Rodley began by testifying that she never asked Wilson to pursuade her husband to confess, but that he had often asked her to do so. She detailed two conversations on this subject, one at her attorney's office, the other at her home, where Mr. Wilson called by appointment next morning. Asked by her attorney regarding Mr. Wilson's actions toward her, she said she would have to go back farther, and then she stated that on an occasion when she had visited her husband at the County Jail, and after she had an unpleasantness with him, Mr. Wilson advised her in his private office to drop Rodley. The Sheriff, she said, bent over her and kissed her on the forehead and made advances that could bear only one construction. She said she protested at this.

On the subsequent meeting in Chico, she said, the Sheriff embraced her and kissed her, saying he would look out for her and would take care of her.

The story created a decidedly bad impression and injured the doctor's case. He is blamed for permitting his wife to sacrifice herself.

Sheriff Wilson declares the whole story is false. He says he was told on Friday that if he testified against Rodley this would be his punishment.

The defense also offered the testimony of Mrs. McLennan of Chico, who declared she saw Colonel Batchelder at Rodley's office at the time Batchelder swore he visited it alone in connection with the will matter, and that he was accompanied by a woman, supposedly his wife.

The final move of the prosecution in rebuttal was a shot from a big gun concealed until to-day in the shape of a certified copy of the proclamation of Governor Budd setting apart February 21, 1898, as a day of mourning for the victims of the Maine disaster. The proclamation was dated February 18th, one day later than the letter to Batchelder, which Rodley claims was written in connection with the memorial exercises to be held in Chico in accordance with the proclamation.

Following the introduction of this important testimony, which was admitted over strenuous objections on the part of Rodley's attorney, Mrs. E. H. Fowler of Mulberry, San Benito county, was placed upon the stand. Mrs. Fowler was formerly Mrs. Cal Hogan, and she it was whom Dr. Rodley claimed to have visited in Biggs on the date when Colonel Batchelder says Rodley first approached him in reference to the alteration of Fuller's will. Mrs. Fowler testified that she had not been in Biggs since November, 1897, and that on December 16, 1898, she was in Mulberry at the home of her mother. She said Dr. Rodley had been her physician while she lived in Biggs, but had never called at the house where she lived.

The last witness was Rodley himself, called in sur-rebuttal to explain about that Biggs visit. He explained that it might have been some patient other than Mrs. Cal Hogan whom he visited on February 16, 1898. He was sure the trip was on professional business. On cross-examination he was asked to name one patient whom he had in Biggs at that time and could not do it. The witness he had named had proved a boomerang and the doctor did not name any more.

COL. BATCHELDER STILL UNDER FIRE

Chico Enterprise

But Gives His Testimony In a Straightforward Way.

Jan 27, 1900

THERE ARE SLIGHT DISCREPANCIES

But Witness Explained Them In a Convincing Manner—Mental Strain Under Which He Had Suffered Was Responsible for Oversight.

Special to the ENTERPRISE.

OROVILLE, Jan. 27.—Col. H. T. Batchelder was again called to the stand this morning in the Rodley trial, and was from the time of opening court to the time of adjournment under a severe cross-fire of questions from Attorney Collins. While it is true that there are some slight discrepancies in the testimony given before the Grand Jury and that given in the present case, the witness explained those differences in a manner which carried conviction of the truth of his statements, to all who heard him.

The absolute confidence which the people of Butte county repose in H. T. Batchelder is not shaken in the least by the fact that at the time he appeared before the Grand Jury he made some statements which vary slightly from those made yesterday. That the witness on both occasions told the truth as he knew it, no one will question, and the appearance of the man while giving his testimony is in keeping with the general character of the man—straightforward and honest.

During the cross-examination this morning Attorney Collins again referred to the tin box in which the Rodley letter had been kept, and asked if it was not a box for the safe keeping of valuable papers. The box, which was an ordinary tin affair, was produced in court. Collins asked witness if he did not think there might be another letter from Rodley in the box, and upon an examination being made another letter was found which had been written by Rodley to Col. Batchelder in 1898.

For a time a wave of excitement swept over the court room, the crowd evidently expecting a sensation, but the letter only proved to be one relating to Col. Batchelder's illness.

Witness was then asked why he believed the letter of Rodley inviting witness to come to Chico, had connection with the will, to which Batchelder replied that when he arrived at Dr. Rodley's office in response to the letter, the will was shown him the first thing. "Mr. Batchelder, what was your motive," was asked, to which the witness replied: "My motive, sir, was the exact truth."

"Did you consider the construction you put upon the letter was unfavorable to the defendant?" was asked.

"I am sorry to say, sir, that it seems to be so," was the reply.

Attorney Collins then turned his attention to the identification of the will, and asked witness what peculiarity of the will attracted his attention, whereby he could identify it. Witness stated that the misspelled words were what attracted his attention to the document. Witness stated that, although the will was on file in the Clerk's office, and he had access to it at any time, he had not seen it since it was filed.

Witness was asked as to whether he had asked Rodley for his (Rodley's) reason for offering witness a bribe, to which he replied, that he had never asked such a question.

One discrepancy in the testimony given before the Grand Jury and that given at present, was that when before the Grand Jury, Col. Batchelder stated that Rodley had never offered him any fixed sum as a compensation for signing the will, while he now testifies that Rodley offered him $3000.

The witness, with much feeling stated that when testifying before the Grand Jury, he was called upon to give testimony that might send one of his dearest friends to the State prison, and in his state of mental distress at that time it was a wonder that he testified at all.

Attorney Collins then took a new line of questioning and asked witness if there had been anything transpired between his (Batchelder's) and Rodley's families which had alienated the previous friendly feeling existing between them, to which witness replied that there had not.

District Attorney Sproul then recalled Col. Batchelder on re-cross-examination in order that he might more fully explain the seeming differences in some of his testimony, but before many questions could be asked court adjourned until 10 o'clock on Monday morning, at which time Col. Batchelder will be recalled.

RODLEY TRIAL IS EXPENSIVE

Probable Cost to the County Over Two Thousand Dollars

Armory Opera House Sold to Mrs. A. A. Morehead—Binney Wants Bail

Special to the RECORD.

OROVILLE, February 3.—Theodore Kytka, the handwriting expert in the Rodley trial, drew down the neat sum of $311.50, on Friday from the county treasury as compensation for his services in experting the handwriting which figured in the trial. Conservative estimates of the cost of the trial are being made about the courthouse. Most agree that the cost of the present trial will exceed $2000, and the trials to follow will add to this sum from $4000 to $5000 more. A. Fuller has turned out to be about as expensive a citizen as the county ever possessed, and he has cost more dead than alive.

The property known as the Armory Opera House in Chico was sold at public auction to-day in front of the Court House door by Julius Rosenburg, Commissioner, appointed by the court to sell. The property was bid in by Mrs. A. A. Morehead, who held the mortgage, for the sum of $4,397.50, the amount of judgment and costs.

Geo E. Gardner, attorney for Schuyler Binney, the Bangor man charged with the murder of Devol, has served notice on the District Attorney, that he will on Tuesday, February 6th, at 10 o'clock, a. m., make application to the Superior Court for the admission to bail of the defendant.

Three suits have been filed in the Superior Court entitled C S Wright vs J J Clark, F W Wright vs G V Myrick, and W C Wright vs C E T Reanor. The suits are brought to have the Superior Court take evidence in the matter and adjudge that the plaintiffs are entitled to purchase certain government lien land described in the complaints. The plaintiffs allege that the defendants named made application to purchase the lands and that such application was not made in good faith as they did not seek to purchase for their own use. A contest followed and the matter is now before the Surveyor General. The suit is brought for the purpose of determining who are the entitled to purchase.

RODLEY'S STORY FLATLY DENIED

Strong Testimony Given Against Chico's Former Mayor.

[Special Dispatch to "The Examiner."]

OROVILLE, February 5.—The Rodley trial is practically ended, so far as the introduction of evidence is concerned. But two witnesses remain to be examined and what their testimony will be is known.

The day has not been without its surprises, the principal one of which was the introduction of rebuttal testimony to show that the person to whom Dr. Rodley claimed to have made a professional visit at Biggs on February 16, 1898, was not there at that time. That is the date when Colonel Batchelder says the offer of [illegible] for his signature to the will was made at Biggs. Dr. Rodley did not deny being in Biggs on that date, but claimed he was called there to see a patient, a Mrs. Hogan. His story seemed to be plausible enough, but it had some of the plausibility knocked out of it to-day when Mrs. Thomas McDonald of Chico was placed on the stand by the prosecution and testified that Mrs. Hogan, who is her sister, was not in Biggs at that time. Mrs. Hogan has since remarried and is now Mrs. E. H. Fowler of Mulberry, San Benito county. She will reach Oroville to-night and in court to-morrow will testify that she was not in Biggs on February 16, 1898, nor for months before or after the date on which Dr. Rodley says he visited her.

As had been expected, Sheriff Wilson was placed upon the stand by the prosecution and [illegible] the statement made to him by Rodley on the evening of the arrest. This statement was to the effect that Rodley had signed a will, which was lost; that the original he made a copy of it and took it to Biggs, where he showed it to Batchelder, who would have nothing to do with it; that upon this he destroyed the copy while returning to Chico.

Attorney [illegible] tried to convey the impression that Sheriff Wilson had made improper advances toward Mrs. Rodley. He asked the Sheriff if he (Wilson) had requested Mrs. Rodley to get her husband to confess, saying he would take care of her, if he had embraced and kissed her on a certain stated occasion, and made [illegible] for the same purpose. To all these questions Mr. Wilson made emphatic denial. When they began, Mrs. Rodley left her husband's side and the room. As the defense have stated that they have but one more witness, and that is not Mrs. Rodley, it is plain that these questions are asked [illegible] to show improper conduct on the part of the Sheriff and were merely by play.

On redirect examination, the Sheriff testified that Mrs. Rodley asked him to advise her husband to confess. He said he promised to do so, but, finding the doctor had engaged attorneys, he wrote her that it would be useless and did not approach Rodley. He declared he had not used his office in [illegible].

Mrs. [illegible] of Chico testified that she was in Rodley's office when Batchelder [illegible] the letter and that Mrs. Batchelder [illegible] him. The remaining witness for the [illegible] is Mrs. McLennan of Chico, who will [illegible] the story of Mrs. [illegible] testified that he was [illegible].

Mrs. Batchelder, called in rebuttal to-day, did not know on what date she went to Chico with her husband, but was positive that she had never heard the conversation which Dr. Rodley testified took place before her.

RODLEY RETELLS THE FULLER WILL STORY

His Word is Placed in the Balance as Against Garner's and Batchelder's

HE DENIED HIS OWN ADMISSIONS

Told Sheriff Wilson Soon After Arrest Another Story Regarding the Mysterious Trip to Biggs

Special to the RECORD

OROVILLE, Feb. 30.—The defense in the trial of Dr. Rodley has fired its first gun and the theory of the defense is apparent. It is, plainly speaking, that Dr. Rodley tells the truth and that the other direct witnesses against him, Batchelder and Garner, are perjurers. He has told his story, that is the direct part of it, and his personal contradiction of the charge against him is with the jury. Whatever effect it made upon the body which is to judge him, no man knows, but it was not necessary to go far from the court room to learn its effect on the audience which has followed closely the course of the trial. Suffice it to say that Dr. Rodley has not yet established to the minds of those who have heard all the evidence so far adduced, his innocence.

The trial was resumed with Garner on the stand under cross-examination. He reiterated the fact that the consideration for his becoming a witness was for the promise of payment to him of $5000, to be paid when the estate had been distributed to Mrs. Housworth. He never had a conversation with her about it, and she never promised him anything. He said he was a relative of Batchelder, Mrs. Batchelder being a cousin of his. In no way was his testimony broken down, and he retired from the stand.

Mr. Sproul then announced that the people rested and for the present had no more witnesses.

Before calling his first witness Mr. Collins moved to strike out all of Swearingen's testimony and all the expert's testimony relative to either Fuller's or Mrs. Housworth's handwriting. The court took the matter under advisement.

Dr. Rodley took the stand and he was duly sworn. He was seemingly suffering from a cold and his voice was at times rather husk, but he gave his testimony in a positive and direct manner. He stated that his name was J. Ellis Rodley; that he had lived in Chico since 1885, and that he had a wife and two children. He was first shown the letter from him to Batchelder dated Feb. 17, 1898. He admitted its authorship, and that he wrote and mailed it on the date named. What occasioned him to write it was the fact that Jo D. Sproul on the day before had called him up on the telephone and told him that he had heard from Sacramento that the Governor had set aside Monday, the 21st as a day of mourning in commemoration of the disaster to the Maine, and he suggested that it was the duty of the defendant as Mayor of the city to call a meeting for the purpose of arranging for the proper exercises. The name of Batchelder was suggested as orator. Afterward defendant spoke to C. E. Canfield, a Trustee, about it and he agreed also that it was the proper thing to do. Canfield told him that it would be well to get Batchelder up there without his knowing anything about it, for if he was to know beforehand he might decline. Rodley agreed and wrote the letter. Batchelder and his wife came to Chico that night and to the people of Biggs. He offered to pay his expenses for coming up but Batchelder refused to take anything. At this time nor at any other time did he show Batchelder the will or ask him to become a signer thereon. He also told of the visit to Biggs. He was called there he said to see a patient, Mrs. O'Hagan. After seeing her he put up his team and went to the hotel. He met Batchelder in the office and accompanied him and Mrs. Batchelder to supper. After supper at Batchelder's suggestion, they went over and called on Geo. Ditzler at his place of residence. While there a man came from the stable and told him one of his horses was sick. The three men went to the stable where Rodley spent several hours working with the horse. Batchelder then went to bed, as did the witness later. In the morning he arose early and started back to Chico without seeing Batchelder again. This was on February 16th, for he was able to fix the date by the blowing up of the Maine. He said that neither at this time was the matter of signing the will, or anything regarding the Fuller will, ever mentioned. He denied absolutely the testimony of Batchelder in every particular.

Dr. Rodley was shown the will by his attorney and identified it as the one he had signed at Fuller's request and in the manner he testified to on the probate proceedings. He repeated the story of Fuller coming to his office and asking him to become a witness, and of the circumstances of Garner's appearance and his also signing. The testimony which he gave and which is made a part of the indictment was read to him and he stated that it was true, and that he told the truth at that time. He never had the will in his possession and that it was attested exactly in the manner in which he first said it was.

The direct examination of Rodley was resumed at the afternoon session. He was asked by Collins if he had not a few days after the death of Fuller stated to several parties in Chico that he and Garner had witnessed a will signed by Alfred Fuller. To this question the prosecution objected, holding that under the rule any statements which Rodley might have made are inadmissible as he might have made them in pursuance of the scheme of fraud. District Attorney Sproul quoted numerous authorities in support of his objection, and his objection was sustained.

Rodley stated that he had had but one conversation with Mrs. Housworth concerning the will; that for more than a year previous to the time when the will appeared he had not been on friendly terms with her, in fact, not on speaking terms. Sometime after Fuller's death she met him as he was seated in his buggy in front of the drug store. She asked him if he had witnessed a will of Alfred Fuller in which she was the devisee. He replied that he had, and she asked him to state the contents. He refused, saying that when the proper time should come he would tell all he knew. He never conversed thereafter with Mrs. Housworth.

The witness was then turned over to District Attorney Sproul for cross-examination. In response to questions he said that he had doctored Fuller for three or four months during the winter before he died. He prescribed no medicine, but gave him electrical treatment. He never loaned to or borrowed money from Fuller, nor had he any business or social relations with him.

The object of this line of questioning was to show that there was nothing in the relations of Fuller and Rodley that would impel Fuller to have that degree of confidence in Rodley which would lead him to confide in him such an important

Rodley was considerably embarrassed when District Attorney Sproul asked him if, on the day he was arrested, he did not tell Sheriff Wilson that the story of his visit to Biggs was true; that he went with a copy of the will in his pocket; that Fuller had made a will and the will was lost, that he (Rodley) had made a copy of the will and asked Batchelder if the signature was that of Alfred Fuller and Batchelder said he thought it was not; that on his way home he (Rodley) tore the will into pieces and threw it away. Rodley acknowledged that he had told such a story to the Sheriff.

He admitted that he had a telephone in his office by which he might have talked to Batchelder regarding the invitation to attend the Maine memorial services.

Witness was closely questioned regarding his being on the Maine Memorial Committee and upon the committee appointed to arrange the program, but he could not say whether he had anything to do with the arranging of that program. This questioning was to show that Rodley's position on the committee did not warrant the writing of the letter to Batchelder urging him to come to Chico.

Asked if he was positive that Mrs. Batchelder was in his office with Mr. Batchelder when the interview was had, and he said he was. (Batchelder's testimony was to the effect that Mrs. Batchelder was not there.)

At this point Sproul reverted to the statement which Rodley had admitted making to Sheriff Wilson. Rodley had changed his mind regarding that statement and declared that he did not remember having made any such statement. Rodley was ill at ease and his feeling was clearly depicted in his face.

He said that he had heard John Garner's story and declared that it was not true.

The Court having held that the testimony of witnesses concerning what Rodley may have said to them shortly after the death of Fuller is inadmissible, five or six witnesses for the defense are shut out. The Court also held that the testimony of Thos. Hindman regarding the statements made by Alfred Fuller concerning his deep gratitude to Mrs. Housworth is inadmissible.

Attorney Collins having lost several witnesses, stated that he would not be able to get other witnesses desired before Monday morning.

An adjournment was therefore taken until that time.

It is thought that the case will go to the jury about Wednesday evening.

MANY DENIALS FROM RODLEY.

THE ACCUSED ON THE STAND AT OROVILLE.

SAYS FULLER CAME TO HIS OFFICE AND ASKED HIM TO WITNESS HIS WILL

After That, He Declares, He Never Saw the Document, but He Makes Damaging Admission Under Fire.

Special Dispatch to the "Chronicle."

OROVILLE, February 2.—John Garner occupied the stand in the Rodley forgery trial this morning. His testimony was a repetition of that given before. He stated that he was urged to sign the will by Dr. Rodley, and that after two or three interviews he did sign it under promise of getting $5000 from Mrs. Housworth, a woman he did not know until some months later, when the will was probated. He made a confession, but it was when he was out on bail, and not while in charge of the Sheriff.

Curiosity to hear the defendant himself testify brought out a large crowd. Dr. Rodley stated that Jo D. Sproul, the present District Attorney, called him on the telephone in Chico on February 17, 1898, and said word had been received that the Maine had been blown up, and urged that some steps be taken to show the feelings of the people. At the suggestion of Mr. Canfield, a City Trustee, he had written to Colonel Batchelder on the night of the 17th, urging him to come to Chico and deliver an address. It was this letter that had been made so much of in the courts. He stated that he went to Biggs on February 15th to see a patient, and visited Colonel Batchelder, but saw him only in the presence of others, and that they spent the evening at the home of George Ditzler of that place. He denied that he ever said a word to Mr. Batchelder about a will, or mentioned the name of Fuller in any manner. When Colonel Batchelder came to Chico on the 18th, witness swore that Mrs. Batchelder was with him, and that Mrs. L. M. Dunn was in the outer office or reception room when they came in together. He denied positively that he then or at any other time said a word to Mr. Batchelder about the will. He swore positively that Alfred Fuller came to his office and asked him to sign the will and further asked J. M. Garner to do so. He said that he had never had the will in his possession, and had never seen it from the day he signed it till he saw it in court when being probated.

On cross-examination Dr. Rodley made a damaging admission. He was unwilling to deny that he told Sheriff Wilson the night he was arrested that he had taken a copy of the will to Biggs, but said he had destroyed it coming home. First he did not remember making any such statement, then he thought he had. After the substance of the matter had been stated to him he admitted that he had said this to the Sheriff.

The court adjourned till Monday next.

Arrest Another Story Regarding the Mysterious Trip to Biggs

Special to the Record.

OROVILLE, Feb. 30.—The defense in the trial of Dr. Rodley has fired its first gun and the theory of the defense is apparent. It is, plainly speaking, that Dr. Rodley tells the truth and that the other direct witnesses against him, Batchelder and Garner, are perjurers. He has told his story, that is the direct part of it, and his personal contradiction of the charge against him is with the jury. Whatever effect it made upon the body which is to judge him, no man knows, but it was not necessary to go far from the court room to learn its effect on the audience which has followed closely the course of the trial. Suffice it to say that Dr. Rodley has not yet established in the minds of those who have heard all the evidence so far adduced, his innocence.

The trial was resumed with Garner on the stand under cross-examination. He reiterated the fact that the consideration for his becoming a witness was for the promise of payment to him of $5,000, to be paid when the estate had been distributed to Mrs. Housworth. He never had a conversation with her about it, and she never promised him anything. He said he was a relative of Batchelder, Mrs. Batchelder being a cousin of his. In no way was his testimony broken down, and he retired from the stand.

Mr. Sproul then announced that the people rested and for the present had no more witnesses.

Before calling his first witness Mr. Collins moved to strike out all of Swearingen's testimony and all the expert's testimony relative to either Fuller's or Mrs. Housworth's handwriting. The court took the matter under advisement.

Dr. Rodley took the stand and he was duly sworn. He was seemingly suffering from a cold and his voice was at times rather husk, but he gave his testimony in a positive and direct manner. He stated that his name was J. Ellis Rodley; that he had lived in Chico since 1885, and that he had a wife and two children. He was first shown the letter from him to Batchelder dated Feb. 17, 1898. He admitted its authorship, and that he wrote and mailed it on the date named. What occasioned him to write it was the fact that Jo D. Sproul on the day before had called him up on the telephone and told him that he had heard from Sacramento that the Governor had set aside Monday, the 21st as a day of mourning in commemoration of the disaster to the Maine, and he suggested that it was the duty of the defendant as Mayor of the city to call a meeting for the purpose of arranging for the proper exercises. The name of Batchelder was suggested as orator. Afterward defendant spoke to E. E. Canfield, a Trustee, about it and he agreed also that it was the proper thing to do. Canfield told him that it would be well to get Batchelder up there without his knowing anything about it, for if he was to know beforehand he might decline. Rodley agreed and wrote the letter. Batchelder and his wife came to Chico that night and to defendant's office. They went into the reception room, and Mrs. I. M. Dunn was in the reception room at the same time. He asked Mr. and Mrs. Batchelder into his office and made the proposition to him. Batchelder was unable to give him an answer for he received a similar request from residence. While there a man came from the stable and told him one of his horses was sick. The three men went to the stable where Rodley spent several hours working with the horse. Batchelder then went to bed, as did the witness later. In the morning he arose early and started back to Chico without seeing Batchelder again. This was on February 16th, for he was able to fix the date by the blowing up of the Maine. He said that neither at this time was the matter of signing the will, or anything regarding the Fuller will, ever mentioned. He denied absolutely the testimony of Batchelder in every particular.

Dr. Rodley was shown the will by his attorney and identified it as the one he had signed at Fuller's request and in the manner he testified to on the probate proceedings. He repeated the story of Fuller coming to his office and asking him to become a witness, and of the circumstances of Garner's appearance and his also signing. The testimony which he gave and which is made a part of the indictment was read to him and he stated that it was true, and that he told the truth at that time. He never had the will in his possession and that it was attested exactly in the manner in which he first said it was.

The direct examination of Rodley was resumed at the afternoon session. He was asked by Collins if he had not a few days after the death of Fuller stated to several parties in Chico that he and Garner had witnessed a will signed by Alfred Fuller. To this question the prosecution objected, holding that under the rule any statements which Rodley might have made are inadmissible as he might have made them in pursuance of the scheme of fraud. District Attorney Sproul quoted numerous authorities in support of his objection, and his objection was sustained.

Rodley stated that he had had but one conversation with Mrs. Housworth concerning the will; that for more than a year previous to the time when the will appeared he had not been on friendly terms with her, in fact, not on speaking terms. Sometime after Fuller's death she met him as he was seated in his buggy in front of the drug store. She asked him if he had witnessed a will of Alfred Fuller in which she was the devisee. He replied that he had, and she asked him to state the contents. He refused, saying that when the proper time should come he would tell all he knew. He never conversed thereafter with Mrs. Housworth.

The witness was then turned over to District Attorney Sproul for cross-examination. In response to questions he said that he had doctored Fuller for three or four months during the winter before he died. He prescribed no medicine, but gave him electrical treatment. He never loaned to or borrowed money from Fuller, nor had he any business or social relations with him.

The object of this line of questioning was to show that there was nothing in the relations of Fuller and Rodley that would impel Fuller to have that degree of confidence in Rodley which would lead him to confide in him such an important matter as the will, which, according to Rodley's story, Fuller wanted to keep an absolute secret.

Rodley was asked about the woman, Mrs. Hogan, whom he claimed he went to Biggs to visit on professional business. He knew but little about her, and stated that he believed she had left the State.

He admitted that he had a telephone in his office by which he might have talked to Batchelder regarding the invitation to attend the Maine memorial services.

Witness was closely questioned regarding his being on the Maine Memorial Committee and upon the committee appointed to arrange the program, but he could not say whether he had anything to do with the arranging of that program. This questioning was to show that Rodley's position on the committee did not warrant the writing of the letter to Batchelder urging him to come to Chico.

Asked if he was positive that Mrs. Batchelder was in his office with Mr. Batchelder when the interview was had, and he said he was. (Batchelder's testimony was to the effect that Mrs. Batchelder was not there.)

At this point Sproul reverted to the statement which Rodley had admitted making to Sheriff Wilson. Rodley had changed his mind regarding that statement and declared that he did not remember having made any such statement. Rodley was ill at ease and his feeling was clearly depicted in his face.

He said that he had heard John Garner's story and declared that it was not true.

The Court having held that the testimony of witnesses concerning what Rodley may have said to them shortly after the death of Fuller is inadmissible, five or six witnesses for the defense are shut out. The Court also held that the testimony of Thos Hindman regarding the statements made by Alfred Fuller concerning his deep gratitude to Mrs. Housworth is inadmissible.

Attorney Collins having lost several witnesses, stated that he would not be able to get other witnesses desired before Monday morning.

An adjournment was therefore taken until that time.

It is thought that the case will go to the jury about Wednesday evening.

DR. RODLEY IS CONTRADICTED

District Attorney Sproul Springs a Surprise.

A HARD BLOW TO THE DEFENSE

Mrs. Col. Hogan Was Not In Butte County On the Day Dr. Rodley Claims to Have Visited Her. Sheriff Wilson Subjected to Insinuations.

Special to the ENTERPRISE

OROVILLE, February 5.—This has been one of the most interesting days during the trial of Dr. Rodley, and the "audience" has been kept thoroughly awake throughout the day. It now seems that District Attorney Sproul has sprung a surprise on the defense which has weakened their case to a great extent, particularly regarding the statements of Rodley while on the stand.

E. E. Canfield of Chico was the first witness called to-day and his testimony was to the effect that he and Rodley had talked of inviting Col. Batchelder to deliver an address at the Maine memorial service at Chico. It was agreed that Rodley should write to Col. Batchelder, but he could not remember telling Rodley not to notify Col. Batchelder why he was invited to Chico. He was shown the letter and said that such a letter might have been written in connection with the matter, but witness knew nothing about what Rodley did.

On cross-examination District Attorney Sproul brought out the fact that witness was not sure of having a talk with Rodley about the Maine memorial service until Saturday, the day of Batchelder's trip to Chico. He knew he talked with him that day, but could not tell whether or not he did before that day. Witness did not know whether or not Batchelder came to Chico in response to a letter and remembered no subsequent conversation regarding it.

R. A. Anderson, W. Stevens, H. W. Heath, A. G. Eames, H. W. Crew, T. B. Hart, L. Sherman and Dr. G. W. Burk were called to testify to the previous good character of Rodley. Each was asked questions about as follows:

"How long have you known Dr. Rodley?"

"What is his reputation for truth, honesty and integrity?"

"Would you believe him under oath?"

"Do you consider him a man likely to commit perjury?"

District Attorney Sproul cross-examined each of the character witnesses severely. He asked Mr. Anderson if, on Saturday last, in discussing the case with A. G. Simpson at Chico, he did not say that a certain statement made by Rodley to him was a queer statement for a man to make. The witness replied that he did, but was later recalled and stated that he did not understand the question. He denied having made such a statement to Mr. Simpson.

The cross-examination of the other witnesses was to show that their replies to questions were founded on personal opinion and not what had been said by other parties, and that they were biased in favor of the defendant.

Mrs. Houseworth was brought into the court-room, but refused to testify, on the ground that she might incriminate herself.

Mrs. Lark Dunn was next called and testified that one evening, two or three days before the Maine memorial service, she was in Rodley's office when Col. Batchelder and a lady whom he addressed as "mother" came into the waiting room, and from there passed into the consultation room. Witness testified that Mrs C. McLennan was also present.

During a rigid cross-examination District Attorney Sproul asked the witness to whom she had talked about ... [illegible] and questioned regarding the remark Dr. Rodley had made to him on the evening of his (Rodley's) arrest. Wilson said that Rodley made the following remark to him: "Dutch, that don't amount to anything. I did go to Biggs; I had signed a will, but it was lost and I made a copy of it and put it into my pocket and took it to Batchelder and asked him to sign it. He would not have anything to do with it and told me not to have anything to do with it, as it was a dangerous business. On the road home I tore it up and threw it away. That is all there is to it, and it don't amount to anything."

Mr. Wilson was cross-questioned at great length, and asked if he ever advised Rodley to confess. He replied that he had not, but at the request of Garner's bondsmen had told him (Garner) that the bondsmen believed him to be guilty.

Here the line of questioning took a rather sensational turn. Witness was asked if he had told Mrs. Rodley that the Doctor ought to plead guilty and witness would take care of her; if witness had ever embraced Mrs. Rodley and kissed her and if he did not at one time tell her to lock the door on the inside and rest on the lounge. To all of these questions Sheriff Wilson answered with a vehement "No."

Continuing the cross-examination, Attorney Collins asked witness if he had not been assisting the prosecution, to which he replied that he had to the extent of serving subpoenaes, &c. He was asked as to whom he had talked about Rodley's statement regarding the will, and he mentioned several.

Witness was then asked on re-direct examination if he had ever made or attempted to make improper proposals to Mrs. Rodley, to which he replied that he had not.

Asked if he had ever asked Mrs. Rodley to use her influence to induce the defendant to plead guilty, witness stated that he had not, but that Mrs. Rodley had asked him to use his influence to get the accused to plead guilty.

"What did you say to her?" was asked.

"I told her that I would talk to her husband and would drop her a note, but that I would not ask him to plead guilty. I did write to her and told her that Rodley was in the hands of his attorneys."

It was here that District Attorney Sproul sprung his surprise and it was a staggering one for the defense.

Mrs. T. McDaniel of Chico was called and stated that she was a sister of Mrs. Col. Hogan. She testified that Mrs. Hogan had lived in Mulberry, San Benito county, California, since Nov. 10, 1897, and she had not been to Biggs in February, 1898. She was sure of that, for her sister was married in San Benito county in February, 1898.

This is a direct denial to the statement of Rodley that he visited Mrs. Hogan at Biggs in February, 1898.

Mrs. Wm. Rowe, an intimate friend of Mrs. Hogan, was next called and gave testimony substantially the same as Mrs. McDaniels.

Mrs. Batchelder was called and the conversation which Rodley says passed between himself and Col. Batchelder, in her presence, was read to her. She stated that she had frequently been in Dr. Rodley's office with her husband, but positively denied that the conversation read to her had ever been held in her presence, either in Dr. Rodley's office or anywhere else.

Col. Batchelder was recalled and in answer to questions stated that no Maine memorial services were held in Biggs on Feb. 21, 1898, and that he did not speak there on that date.

MRS. RODLEY ON THE STAND

Contradicts the Testimony of Sheriff Wilson.

HER TESTIMONY WAS VERY SPICY

She Says Wilson Did Say That He Would Take Care of Her and Keep Her Boy in School.—The Evidence All In—The Case is Now Being Argued

Special to the ENTERPRISE

OROVILLE, Feb. 6.—Court was called at 9:30 this morning and the few witnesses whose testimony was to close the evidence in the long and tedious trial of Dr. J. Ellis Rodley, on the charge of forgery, were soon examined and cross-examined, and at 10:45 the attorneys announced that all evidence was in. The evidence given the last few days of the trial has been of a character to convince all who heard it that Dr. Rodley was fighting a hopeless case and that in his endeavor to free himself he went so far as to sacrifice his wife's honor, the character of Sheriff Wilson and to "fix" evidence that he might gain his freedom.

If Dr. Rodley has had any sympathy in and around Oroville it has been replaced by a feeling of universal disgust and loathing since the defense opened their case.

The evidence given this morning by Mrs. Rodley in regard to her relations with Sheriff Wilson—given with pouts, smiles and semi-dramatic actions—did not produce the effect which was sought for. It appeared to be a part of the defense's scheme, in line with other evidence given, to sacrifice everything—truth, honor, character and integrity, to clear Rodley. Rodley himself was again put upon the stand and again succeeded in convincing those who could hear and see him that he was so badly "mixed" he didn't know "where he was at."

Mrs. McLennan was the first witness called this morning, and her testimony was corroborative of that given by Mrs. Lark Dunn yesterday. She testified that she was in Dr. Rodley's office a short time before the holding of the memorial exercises, on the 21st of February, 1898; that she saw Col. Batchelder enter the reception room of Dr. Rodley, with some one he called "Mother," but heard no conversation between Rodley and Batchelder. On cross-examination she was asked if she was a married woman, to which she replied yes; if she was living with her husband, to which she replied no. Here Attorney Collins made an objection to the character of the questions asked and Sproul dismissed the witness.

The defense announced that their case was in.

Attorney Sproul then re-opened the case for the People, by introducing evidence in rebuttal.

He offered in evidence the proclamation issued by Governor Budd, dated February 18th, 1898, setting apart the 21st day of February, 1898, as a day of mourning in honor of the Maine's dead; and in doing so called attention to the date of the letter Rodley wrote to Batchelder, which was dated Feb 17, 1898, and that the letter could not have been written in regard to the memorial exercises, as the proclamation therefor was not issued until the day following Rodley's letter to Batchelder.

Mrs. Fowle, formerly Mrs. Hogan, was then placed upon the stand for the purpose of contradicting the evidence of Dr. Rodley in regard to his visit to see her on Feb. 15, 1898.

Mrs. Fowle testified that she lived in Mulberry, San Benito county; that she had lived there since 1897; that she had not been in Biggs since November 10th, 1897, and that she was in Mulberry, San Benito county, on the 15th day of February, 1898, the day on which Rodley says he visited her at Biggs.

On cross-examination she testified that Rodley had been her physician, but that he had never visited her at ... [illegible]

he would see the Doctor about the matter but he was afraid the Doctor would get mad about it, but afterwards said that he would see him anyway, and have him confess, remarking: "It is a damn shame for you to spend your money."

She further testified that there was no unpleasantness existing between her and Sheriff Wilson, that the matter did not go that far. Here her attorney pressed her to tell the whole story of her relations with Mr. Wilson. In response to this question her evidence was in direct contradiction to that given yesterday by Sheriff Wilson. The spectators held their breath for some spicy testimony, and it was not long in coming.

She was in Sheriff Wilson's private office soon after Rodley had been put in jail. She had some unpleasantness with her husband, and was crying. Wilson was with her and told her not to mind it. He pulled the curtain down and asked her to lie down on the couch and then he locked the door on the inside. She told him it would not look well to have the door locked and being there together. He replied it was his private office and that they would not be disturbed. She insisted that the door be opened. The door was finally opened.

"Did Mr. Wilson ever kiss or caress you?"

"Yes, sir; he came up behind me while I was in his office, took hold of my hand and kissed me on the forehead." Afterwards, at her home in Chico, he put his arms around her and kissed her. He said he would take care of her, and see that her boy was kept in school. The first time he kissed her was in the cell occupied by Dr. Rodley.

This was about all of her testimony and the prosecution dismissed her without asking a question.

Dr. Rodley was then recalled by the defense to explain his testimony given about his trip to Biggs to see Mrs. Hogan. He testified that he was a pension examiner for the Government and in such capacity often went to Biggs, being instructed by the Government to do so; that he had other patients there besides Mrs. Hogan, and that he might have been mistaken when he said that it was Mrs. Hogan whom he visited on the 15th of February, 1898. The witness was then turned over to District Attorney Sproul and that gentleman gave him a cross-examination that was a rattler, and Rodley came out of it very much confused and rattled. Sproul asked the witness to name one patient upon whom he had called in Biggs. The witness failed. "Name one man you went to Biggs to see on pension business." Another failure to respond—memory not good.

Sproul then called for witness' books, a subpoena having been issued to Mrs. Rodley, directing her to bring the books into court. Mrs. Rodley did not bring them, acting on the advice of her counsel, and the witness could not tell anything the books contained.

This concluded the evidence on both sides and Assistant District Attorney A. F. Jones opened the argument for the State. He referred to all the testimony given, compared the character of the witnesses, and their manner of testifying, particularly did he dwell upon the manner in which Mrs. Dunn and Mrs. McLennan gave their testimony and compared their manner while on the stand with that of Mrs. H. T. Batchelder, referring to Mrs. Batchelder he said: "You, gentlemen of the jury, observed the manner of that noble woman while upon the witness stand. God bless her, a woman whom we all know and whom we all respect."

He then spoke of the "cut and dried" testimony of Mrs. Dunn and Mrs. McLennan, their evasive manner, and stereotyped answers. Shielding themselves behind "I did not."

Mr. Collins followed with his argument for the defendant, but owing to being taken suddenly sick was compelled to stop and the Court adjourned until to-morrow morning at 9:30, when the arguments will be concluded and the case will perhaps go to the jury to-morrow night.

OROVILLE, February 6.—This has been one of the most interesting days during the trial of Dr. Rodley, and the "audience" has been kept thoroughly awake throughout the day. It now seems that District Attorney Sproul has sprung a surprise on the defense which has weakened their case to a great extent, particularly regarding the statements of Rodley while on the stand.

E. E. Canfield of Chico was the first witness called to-day and his testimony was to the effect that he and Rodley had talked of inviting Col. Batchelder to deliver an address at the Maine memorial service at Chico. It was agreed that Rodley should write to Col. Batchelder, but he could not remember telling Rodley not to notify Col. Batchelder why he was invited to Chico. He was shown the letter and said that such a letter might have been written in connection with the matter, but witness knew nothing about what Rodley did.

On cross-examination District Attorney Sproul brought out the fact that witness was not sure of having a talk with Rodley about the Maine memorial service until Saturday, the day of Batchelder's trip to Chico. He knew he talked with him that day, but could not tell whether or not he did before that day. Witness did not know whether or not Batchelder came to Chico in response to a letter and remembered no subsequent conversation regarding it.

R. A. Anderson, W. Stevens, H. W. Heath, A. G. Eames, H. W. Crew, T. B. Bart, L. Sherman and Dr. G. W. Burk were called to testify to the previous good character of Rodley. Each was asked questions about as follows:

"How long have you known Dr. Rodley?"

"What is his reputation for truth, honesty and integrity?"

"Would you believe him under oath?"

"Do you consider him a man likely to commit perjury?"

District Attorney Sproul cross-examined each of the character witnesses severely. He asked Mr. Anderson if, on Saturday last, in discussing the case with A. G. Simpson at Chico, he did not say that a certain statement made by Rodley to him was a queer statement for a man to make. The witness replied that he did, but was later recalled and stated that he did not understand the question. He denied having made such a statement to Mr. Simpson.

The cross-examination of the other witnesses was to show that their replies to questions were founded on personal opinion and not what had been said by other parties, and that they were biased in favor of the defendant.

Mrs. Houseworth was brought into the court-room, but refused to testify, on the ground that she might incriminate herself.

Mrs. Lark Dunn was next called and testified that one evening, two or three days before the Maine memorial service, she was in Rodley's office when Col. Batchelder and a lady whom he addressed as "mother" came into the waiting room, and from there passed into the consultation room. Witness testified that Mrs C. McLennan was also present.

During a rigid cross-examination District Attorney Sproul asked the witness to whom she had talked about this visit to Rodley's office, and she replied that she had never told it to anyone from the day of its occurrence to the present time. She admitted that Attorney Kennedy had been to her house and told her that she would probably be subpoenaed, but she did not tell him of the visit to Dr. Rodley's office. Mr. Sproul also questioned Mrs. Dunn very closely regarding her movements since arriving at Oroville. She said that on arriving at the Union Hotel she went to Mrs. Rodley's room, and not finding Mrs. Rodley there had returned to her own room.

Col. Batchelder was recalled to emphasize his previous testimony regarding his visit to Rodley's office, and he stated emphatically that he went there alone.

Dr. Rodley was recalled and cross-examined regarding the conversation with Mr. Sproul, for the purpose of showing that at the time of day that Rodley says Sproul telephoned to him the Governor had not issued his proclamation setting apart a day for the memorial service.

He was also asked why Fuller came to him, and what was the matter with him. Rodley refused to answer this on the ground that it was unprofessional to divulge such secrets, but stated that Fuller did not want his regular physician to know anything about his trouble.

Sheriff Wilson was called in rebuttal ... rather sensational turn. Witness was asked if he had told Mrs. Rodley that the Doctor ought to plead guilty and witness would take care of her; if witness had ever embraced Mrs. Rodley and kissed her and if he did not at one time tell her to lock the door on the inside and rest on the lounge. To all of these questions Sheriff Wilson answered with a vehement "No."

Continuing the cross-examination, Attorney Collins asked witness if he had not been assisting the prosecution, to which he replied that he had to the extent of serving subpoenas, &c. He was asked as to whom he had talked about Rodley's statement regarding the will, and he mentioned several.

Witness was then asked on redirect examination if he had ever made or attempted to make improper proposals to Mrs. Rodley, to which he replied that he had not.

Asked if he had ever asked Mrs. Rodley to use her influence to induce the defendant to plead guilty, witness stated that he had not, but that Mrs. Rodley had asked him to use his influence to get the accused to plead guilty.

"What did you say to her?" was asked.

"I told her that I would talk to her husband and would drop her a note, but that I would not ask him to plead guilty. I did write to her and told her that Rodley was in the hands of his attorneys."

It was here that District Attorney Sproul sprung his surprise and it was a staggering one for the defense.

Mrs. T. McDaniel of Chico was called and stated that she was a sister of Mrs. Cat. Hogan. She testified that Mrs. Hogan had lived in Mulberry, San Benito county, California, since Nov. 10, 1897, and she had not been in Biggs in February, 1898. She was sure of that, for her sister was married in San Benito county in February, 1893.

This is a direct denial to the statement of Rodley that he visited Mrs. Hogan at Biggs in February, 1898.

Mrs. Wm. Rowe, an intimate friend of Mrs. Hogan, was next called and gave testimony substantially the same as Mrs. McDaniels.

Mrs. Batchelder was called and the conversation which Rodley says passed between himself and Col. Batchelder, in her presence, was read to her. She stated that she had frequently been in Dr. Rodley's office with her husband, but positively denied that the conversation read to her had ever been held in her presence, either in Dr. Rodley's office or anywhere else.

Col. Batchelder was recalled and in answer to questions stated that no Maine memorial services were held at Biggs on Feb. 21, 1898, and that he did not speak there on that date.

... special to the Enterprise

OROVILLE, Feb. 8.—Court was called at 9:30 this morning and the few witnesses whose testimony was to close the evidence in the long and tedious trial of Dr. J. Ellis Rodley, on the charge of forgery, were soon examined and cross-examined, and at 10:45 the attorneys announced that all evidence was in. The evidence given the last few days of the trial has been of a character to convince all who heard it that Dr. Rodley was fighting a hopeless case and that in his endeavor to free himself he went so far as to sacrifice his wife's honor, the character of Sheriff Wilson and to "fix" evidence that he might gain his freedom.

If Dr. Rodley has had any sympathy in and around Oroville it has been replaced by a feeling of universal disgust and loathing since the defense opened their case.

The evidence given this morning by Mrs. Rodley in regard to her relations with Sheriff Wilson—given with pouts, smiles and semi-dramatic actions—did not produce the effect which was sought for. It appeared to be a part of the defense's scheme, in line with other evidence given, to sacrifice everything—truth, honor, character and integrity, to clear Rodley. Rodley himself was again put upon the stand and again succeeded in convincing those who could hear and see him that he was so badly "mixed" he didn't know "where he was at."

Mrs. McLennan was the first witness called this morning, and her testimony was corroborative of that given by Mrs. Lark Dunn yesterday. She testified that she was in Dr. Rodley's office a short time before the holding of the memorial exercises, on the 21st of February, 1898; that she saw Col. Batchelder enter the reception room of Dr. Rodley, with some one he called "Mother," but heard no conversation between Rodley and Batchelder. On cross-examination she was asked if she was a married woman, to which she replied yes; if she was living with her husband, to which she replied no. Here Attorney Collins made an objection to the character of the questions asked and Sproul dismissed the witness.

The defense announced that their case was in.

Attorney Sproul then re-opened the case for the People, by introducing evidence in rebuttal.

He offered in evidence the proclamation issued by Governor Budd, dated February 18th, 1898, setting apart the 21st day of February, 1898, as a day of mourning in honor of the Maine's dead; and in doing so called attention to the date of the letter Rodley wrote to Batchelder, which was dated Feb 17, 1898, and that the letter could not have been written in regard to the memorial exercises, as the proclamation therefor was not issued until the day following Rodley's letter to Batchelder.

Mrs. Fowls, formerly Mrs. Hogan, was then placed upon the stand for the purpose of contradicting the evidence of Dr. Rodley in regard to his visit to see her on Feb. 15, 1898.

Mrs. Fowls testified that she lived in Mulberry, San Benito county; that she had lived there since 1897; that she had not been in Biggs since November 10th, 1897, and that she was in Mulberry, San Benito county, on the 15th day of February, 1898, the day on which Rodley says he visited her at Biggs.

On cross-examination she testified that Rodley had been her physician, but that he had never visited her at her home at Biggs.

Here the prosecution closed their case, and the prosecution called Mrs. Rodley in sur-rebuttal.

Mrs. Rodley testified that she had never asked Sheriff Wilson to see the doctor about confessing, further that Wilson advised her not to spend any money on the case. She said that she had two conversations with Wilson, the first one being at Attorney Kennedy's office in Chico. Wilson asked her what she intended to do about the case. She said she knew the doctor was innocent and proposed to stand by him. Wilson told her it would be useless and money thrown away to fight the case, and advised her to have the doctor confess. He told her to think the matter over and he would call at her residence the next morning and see her about it. He did call the next morning and urged upon her the advisability of having the Doctor confess and told her that Judge Gray would try the case and that her husband would not be afforded a chance of properly presenting his side of the case. She said that Judge Gray would not try the case. Wilson replied that he knew what he was talking about and that he knew Judge Gray would try the case, and again asked her to have the Doctor confess. Wilson said the ...

... into it. He pulled the curtain down and asked her to lie down on the couch and then he locked the door on the inside. She told him it would not look well to have the door locked and being there together. He replied it was his private office and that they would not be disturbed. She insisted that the door be opened. The door was finally opened.

"Did Mr. Wilson ever kiss or caress you?"

"Yes, sir; he came up behind me while I was in his office, took hold of my hand and kissed me on the forehead." Afterwards, at her home in Chico, he put his arms around her and kissed her. He said he would take care of her, and see that her boy was kept in school. The first time he kissed her was in the cell occupied by Dr. Rodley.

This was about all of her testimony and the prosecution dismissed her without asking a question.

Dr. Rodley was then recalled by the defense to explain his testimony given about his trip to Biggs to see Mrs. Hogan. He testified that he was a pensioner examiner for the Government and in such capacity often went to Biggs, being instructed by the Government to do so; that he had other patients there besides Mrs. Hogan, and that he might have been mistaken when he said that it was Mrs. Hogan whom he visited on the 15th of February, 1898. The witness was then turned over to District Attorney Sproul and that gentleman gave him a cross-examination that was a rattler, and Rodley came out of it very much confused and rattled. Sproul asked the witness to name one patient upon whom he had called in Biggs. The witness failed. "Name one man you went to Biggs to see on pension business." Another failure to respond—memory not good.

Sproul then called for witness' books, a subpoena having been issued to Mrs. Rodley, directing her to bring the books into court. Mrs. Rodley did not bring them, acting on the advice of her counsel, and the witness could not tell anything the books contained.

This concluded the evidence on both sides and Assistant District Attorney A. F. Jones opened the argument for the State. He referred to all the testimony given, compared the character of the witnesses, and their manner of testifying, particularly did he dwell upon the manner in which Mrs. Dunn and Mrs. McLennan gave their testimony and compared their manner while on the stand with that of Mrs. H. T. Batchelder, referring to Mrs. Batchelder he said: "You, gentlemen of the jury, observed the manner of that noble woman while upon the witness stand. God bless her. A woman whom we all know and whom we all respect."

He then spoke of the "cut and dried" testimony of Mrs. Dunn and Mrs. McLennan, their evasive manner, and stereotyped answers. Shielding themselves behind "I did not."

Mr. Collins followed with his argument for the defendant, but owing to being taken suddenly sick was compelled to stop and the Court adjourned until to-morrow morning at 9:30, when the arguments will be concluded and the case will perhaps go to the jury to-morrow night.

CLIMAX REACHED IN THE RODLEY CASE

The Wife Sacrificed for the Purpose of Discrediting Sheriff Wilson

CAN DEFENDANT TELL THE TRUTH?

Testimony Advanced Proving He Lied Regarding Purpose of His Biggs Visit—Character Witnesses Heard.

Special to the Record.

OROVILLE, Feb. 5.—The trial of Dr. Rodley was resumed this morning at half-past ten o'clock. The crowd was not as large as on previous days but the fact that it was Monday and from tradition "wash day" did not prevent a large proportion of the women of Oroville from occupying the front seats. It is presumed by some, from the large attendance of women at the trial, and the absence therefrom of their husbands, that the washing of dishes and the general routine of household duties for the past two weeks in Oroville has been largely attended to by the male members of the family.

The defendant appeared looking as if the interval of time between Friday and Monday had not worn on his nerves particularly. The jurymen also looked as if their semi-imprisonment was not irksome.

The case was with the defense and the first witness was E E Canfield. He testified that he was a resident of Chico and had been for 23 years, and had known Rodley all the time of the latter's residence in that city. He and the defendant were in February, 1898, members of the city council. He had had a talk with defendant about the Maine memorial services in which the name of Col. Batchelder was mentioned for orator, and he had suggested that Rodley write to Batchelder inviting him to be present, but not to state the nature of the business wanted when he wrote. He could not say positively what date it was when the conversation occurred. He had one talk Saturday the 19th and may have had a talk previous thereto, but could not say for sure.

R A Anderson was sworn and asked if he knew the reputation of the defendant for truth, honesty and integrity in the community where he resided. He said he did and that it was good. He would believe the defendant under oath and did not think that defendant was a man likely to commit perjury.

Under cross-examination witness was asked if he did not on Saturday last have a conversation with A. G. Simpson in Chico in which he made a remark that certain statements made by Rodley seemed "queer." The defense interposed an objection and the objection was sustained.

Warren Stevens, H. W. Crew, H. W. Heath, L. Sherman, A. G. Eames, T. H. Barr and Dr. O. Stark were called to testify to the good character of Rodley, and the same questions were propounded to them as to Anderson. They all testified that his reputation was good and they would believe him under oath. In cross-examination none of them were able to tell whom they had heard discuss his reputation. The line of questions propounded to Mr. Crew were an effort to show that his opinion was in a measure influenced by the business relations sustained between him and Rodley. Mr. Heath stated that he was a relative by marriage of Mr. Canfield and a relative by blood of Mr. Crew. The defense being limited to eight witnesses to prove good character she did so on the advice of her attorneys, and for the reason that she was a defendant in two criminal actions and her testimony might tend to incriminate her. Judge Gray held that for these reasons he had no power to compel her to testify.

At the opening of the afternoon session Mr. Collins read the names of twenty-one witnesses by whom he expected to prove the previous good character of Dr. Rodley, but the court held to its former ruling of allowing but eight witnesses.

Robert Anderson was recalled to correct some minor statement in his testimony.

Mrs. L M Dunn of Chico was called and testified that sometime in February 1898, in company with Mrs. Charles McLennan, she was in Rodley's office. Mr and Mrs. Batchelder came in and were taken by Rodley into his front office. After they went out, Rodley told witness that they were there because he wished to extend Col. Batchelder an invitation to deliver an oration at the Maine Memorial exercises.

Mrs. Dunn was severely cross-examined by Sproul, who sought to draw out that she had discussed her testimony with Attorney Kennedy and her husband, who was interested in Rodley's behalf, and had been furnished money to aid his cause. Mrs. Dunn swore absolutely that she had never told a living soul what she knew about the case—not even her husband. She came into Court with Mrs. Rodley and Mrs. Hanck, and this she acknowledged, but all else she denied.

Col Batchelder was recalled. He denied seeing Mrs. Dunn or Mrs. McLennan at Rodley's office on the evening of February 18th, and was positive that no one other than himself and Rodley was present.

Rodley was recalled for further cross-examination. He was questioned particularly about the date on which he claims Sproul called him up by telephone to talk with him about arranging for memorial exercises according to the proclamation of the Governor. He said that the date was February 17th. Rodley had testified that Sproul told him that the Governor had fixed February 21st as a day of mourning on account of the Maine disaster. Rodley saw the trap that Sproul had laid for him, and he changed his testimony to the effect that the Governor "was going" to fix the 21st as the day of mourning. The import of this questioning was that the Governor had not fixed the day when Rodley claimed Sproul told him that he had. Sproul was prepared to show these facts with documentary evidence, but Rodley's change made the introduction of the documents unnecessary. Rodley was further questioned regarding the details of his treatment of Fuller, but nothing of importance was developed.

Collins announced that Mrs. McLennan had been subpoenaed, and was on her way to Oroville.

Sheriff Wilson was called in rebuttal by District Attorney Sproul. He testified that on the 25th of October he went to Rodley's office and arrested him. Something about the testimony given before the Grand Jury was spoken of, and Rodley volunteered the information that the testimony about his going to Biggs did not amount to anything. Rodley told him that he did go to Biggs on business to [illegible]; that he had a will of Fuller which he had signed; the original was lost and he had made a copy; that he took the will to Batchelder and asked him about the signature; that Batchelder told him it was bad business; that on his way home he tore the will into pieces and threw it away.

Collins took the Sheriff in hand for cross-examination and adopted the policy of scandalizing the Sheriff. [illegible] Rodley to plead guilty, promising him that he would get a seven-year sentence instead of fourteen. He wrote to Mrs. Rodley that Rodley was in the hands of his attorneys.

Collins then adopted another line of questioning which caused the audience to rise on their tip-toes of expectancy.

"Did you not take Mrs. Rodley in your arms and kiss and caress her and tell her that you would look out for her and see that her children were cared for?" was asked.

"No, Sir," replied Wilson.

"Did you not in Mr. Kennedy's office in Chico kiss and embrace her?"

"No, Sir," I did not.

Mrs. Rodley blushingly tripped out of the room.

In answer to further questions along the same line, Wilson denied that at any time he had made any improper proposals to Mrs. Rodley, or acted in any way other than a gentleman should act. He denied that he was assisting the prosecution in any manner beyond the requirements of his office.

On redirect examination he said that he never used his office in any attempt to procure confessions from Rodley, Garner or Mrs. Housewörth. He reaffirmed his statement that Mrs. Rodley requested him to use his influence to get Rodley to confess.

Mrs. T. Daniels of Chico, sister of the Mrs. Cal. Hogan, whom Rodley claimed to have visited in Biggs on his famous trip, was the next witness in rebuttal, and her testimony was another proof of Rodley's utter disregard for the truth. She testified that Mrs. Hogan had resided in Mulberry, San Benito county, since Nov. 10, 1897, and she was certain that her sister was not in Biggs in February, 1898.

Mrs. William Rowe of Chico gave testimony to the same effect, that Mrs. Hogan was not in Biggs in February, 1898.

Mrs. Batchelder was called, and the testimony to the effect that she was with Col. Batchelder in Dr. Rodley's office on February 18th, was read to her. She denied that she was there or that any such conversation took place in her presence. She remembered of being in Rodley's office but once with her husband, and that was when Mr. Batchelder went there on account of his having a lame leg.

After Col. Batchelder was recalled to testify regarding the fact that there were no memorial exercises in Biggs, the court adjourned.

Mrs. McLennan will be called by the defense tomorrow morning, and Mrs. Cal Hogan, who arrived on tonight's train will be called by the prosecution to testify that she was not in Biggs when Rodley claimed to have visited her. This will conclude the testimony.

The course pursued by the defense to gain a point in the examination of Sheriff Wilson, did not come as a surprise to the prosecution. In fact, it was known a day or so ago that an attack would be made upon Wilson, the threat having been made.

Regarding the somewhat sensational line of questioning adopted by the defense, Sheriff Wilson was interviewed this evening by the Record's correspondent.

"I was informed before I was called to testify that if I told the story regarding Rodley's conversation with me soon after his arrest to the effect that he admitted having a will of Fuller to which he signed Fuller's name, an attack would be made upon me to the effect that I had made improper proposals to her. I told several persons of the threats which had been made, among them being my Under-Sheriff, Mr. Gildery, and my wife. I was not surprised after having the threats brought to me. Any person is not desirous of such attacks; they are not pleasant, but I have no fear of public opinion in this case. No person, other than a fiend, would be so low as to be other than a gentleman to a woman who was thrown into such a trying trouble as was Mrs. Rodley. The story was concocted to make an impression upon the jury. What that impression is, I care not."

The general opinion is that entertained by Sheriff Wilson, and no one, other than the immediate friends of Rodley, entertain the story as being based upon one truth.

Ap 4. 1900

A FULLER HEIRS' DEMURRER

Fifteen Jointly Attack the Indian Boy's Complaint

Trial of Mrs Minnie Housewörth Again Postponed—A B Smith Estate Ordered Distributed

Special to THE RECORD.

OROVILLE, April 2.—On Saturday last Franklin Fuller through his attorney Richard White, demurred to the complaint of Wm Fuller the alleged son of Alfred Fuller, solely on his own accord. This morning the other 15 heirs through their attorney Carleton Gray, also demurred to the complaint of the Indian boy, first on statutory grounds, and specially on the following grounds. That the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in "that it does not appear therefrom that Alfred Fuller ever received the plaintiff as his child or otherwise into his family." Further, that the complaint is ambiguous, in that it does not appear whether Alfred Fuller in his lifetime declared to his friends and associates and publicly acknowledged plaintiff to be his child and that he furnished and provided him with clothes, money and other necessaries and that he otherwise treated him as a legitimate child, or that he did either or any of said acts while Wm Fuller was under the age of 21 years. Further that the complaint for various reasons is uncertain and unintelligible.

A return and account of sale of real estate of the A. Ringsleben estate has been filed and confirmation asked for. The property was sold to John Gildery for $150.

The cases against Mrs. Housewörth were again passed as she was too ill to appear in Court.

Rodley was resumed this morning at half-past ten o'clock. The crowd was not as large as on previous days but the fact that it was Monday and from tradition "wash day" did not prevent a large proportion of the women of Oroville from occupying the front seats. It is presumed by some, from the large attendance of women at the trial, and the absence therefrom of their husbands, that the washing of dishes and the general routine of household duties for the past two weeks in Oroville has been largely attended to by the male members of the family.

The defendant appeared looking as if the interval of time between Friday and Monday had not worn on his nerves particularly. The jurymen also looked as if their semi-imprisonment was not irksome.

The case was with the defense and the first witness was F. E. Canfield. He testified that he was a resident of Chico and had been for 23 years, and had known Rodley all the time of the latter's residence in that city. He and the defendant were in February, 1898, members of the city council. He had had a talk with defendant about the Maine memorial services in which the name of Col. Batchelder was mentioned for orator, and he had suggested that Rodley write to Batchelder inviting him to be present, but not to state the nature of the business wanted when he wrote. He could not say positively what date it was when the conversation occured. He had one talk Saturday the 19th and may have had a talk previous thereto, but could not say for sure.

R. A. Anderson was sworn and asked if he knew the reputation of the defendant for truth, honesty and integrity in the community where he resided. He said he did and that it was good. He would believe the defendant under oath and did not think that defendant was a man likely to commit perjury.

Under cross-examination witness was asked if he did not on Saturday last have a conversation with A. G. Simpson in Chico in which he made a remark that certain statements made by Rodley seemed "queer." The defense interposed an objection and the objection was sustained.

Warren Stevens, H. W. Crow, H. W. Heath, L. Sherman, A. G. Eames, T. B. Hart and Dr. G. Rurk were called to testify to the good character of Rodley, and the same questions were propounded to them as to Anderson. They all testified that his reputation was good and they would believe him under oath. In cross-examination none of them were able to tell whom they had heard discuss his reputation. The line of questions propounded to Mr. Crow were an effort to show that his opinion was in a measure influenced by the business relations sustained between him and Rodley. Mr. Heath stated that he was a relative by marriage of Mr. Canfield and a relative by blood of Mr. Crow. The defense being limited to eight witnesses to prove good character, the above completed all their witnesses on that line.

Mrs. Minnie Hollingsworth was the last witness before the noon recess. She took the stand, and in answer to the first question, refused to testify. When asked her reasons she said that office. Mr. and Mrs. Batchelder came in and were taken by Rodley into his front office. After they went out, Rodley told witness that they were there because he wished to extend Col. Batchelder an invitation to deliver an oration at the Maine Memorial exercises.

Mrs. Dunn was severely cross-examined by Sproul, who sought to draw out that she had discussed her testimony with Attorney Kennedy and her husband, who was interested in Rodley's behalf, and had been furnished money to aid his cause. Mrs. Dunn swore absolutely that she had never told a living soul what she knew about the case—not even her husband. She came into Court with Mrs. Rodley and Mrs. Hauck, and this she acknowledged, but all else she denied.

Col. Batchelder was recalled. He denied seeing Mrs. Dunn or Mrs. McLennan at Rodley's office on the evening of February 18th, and was positive that no one other than himself and Rodley was present.

Rodley was recalled for further cross-examination. He was questioned particularly about the date on which, he claims Sproul called him up by telephone to talk with him about arranging for memorial exercises according to the proclamation of the Governor. He said that the date was February 17th. Rodley had testified that Sproul told him that the Governor had fixed February 21st as a day of mourning on account of the Maine disaster. Rodley saw the trap that Sproul had laid for him, and he changed his testimony to the effect that the Governor "was going" to fix the 21st as the day of mourning. The import of this questioning was that the Governor had not fixed the day when Rodley claimed Sproul told him that he had. Sproul was prepared to show these facts with documentary evidence, but Rodley's change made the introduction of the documents unnecessary. Rodley was further questioned regarding the details of his treatment of Fuller, but nothing of importance was developed.

Collins announced that Mrs. McLennan had been subpoenaed, and was on her way to Oroville.

Sheriff Wilson was called in rebuttal by District Attorney Sproul. He testified that on the 28th of October he went to Rodley's office and arrested him. Something about the testimony given before the Grand Jury was spoken of, and Rodley volunteered the information that the testimony about his going to Biggs did not amount to anything. Rodley told him that he did go to Biggs on business to see a patient; that he had a will of Fuller which he had signed; the original was lost and he had made a copy; that he took the will to Batchelder and asked him about the signature; that Batchelder told him it was bad business; that on his way home he tore the will into pieces and threw it away.

Collins took the Sheriff in hand for cross-examination and adopted the policy of scandalizing the Sheriff. Wilson denied that he ever tried to get Rodley or Garner to confess. He said that Mrs. Rodley had requested him to use his influence to get Rodley to confess and plead guilty. He denied that he had offered any inducements to

(Continued on 4th Page.)

"No, Sir," replied Wilson.

"Did you not in Mr. Kennedy's office in Chico kiss and embrace her?"

"No, Sir," I did not.

Mrs. Rodley blushingly tripped out of the room.

In answer to further questions along the same line, Wilson denied that at any time he had made any improper proposals to Mrs. Rodley, or acted in any way other than a gentleman should act. He denied that he was assisting the prosecution in any manner beyond the requirements of his office.

On redirect examination he said that he never used his office in any attempt to procure confessions from Rodley, Garner or Mrs. Hollingsworth. He reaffirmed his statement that Mrs. Rodley requested him to use his influence to get Rodley to confess.

Mrs. T. Daniels of Chico, sister of the Mrs. Cal. Hogan, whom Rodley claimed to have visited in Biggs on his famous trip, was the next witness in rebuttal, and her testimony was another proof of Rodley's utter disregard for the truth. She testified that Mrs. Hogan had resided in Mulberry, San Benito county, since Nov. 10, 1897, and she was certain that her sister was not in Biggs in February, 1898.

Mrs. William Rowe of Chico gave testimony to the same effect, that Mrs. Hogan was not in Biggs in February, 1898.

Mrs. Batchelder was called, and the testimony to the effect that she was with Col. Batchelder in Dr. Rodley's office on February 18th, was read to her. She denied that she was there or that any such conversation took place in her presence. She remembered of being in Rodley's office but once with her husband, and that was when Mr. Batchelder went there on account of his having a lame leg.

After Col. Batchelder was recalled to testify regarding the fact that there were no memorial exercises in Biggs, the court adjourned.

Mrs. McLennan will be called by the defense tomorrow morning, and Mrs. Cal Hogan, who arrived on tonight's train will be called by the prosecution to testify that she was not in Biggs when Rodley claimed to have visited her. This will conclude the testimony.

The course pursued by the defense to gain a point in the examination of Sheriff Wilson, did not come as a surprise to the prosecution. In fact, it was known a day or so ago that an attack would be made upon Wilson, the threat having been made.

Regarding the somewhat sensational line of questioning adopted by the defense, Sheriff Wilson was interviewed this evening by the [illegible]'s correspondent.

"I was informed before I was called to testify that if I told the story regarding Rodley's conversation with me soon after his arrest to the effect that he admitted having a will of Fuller to which he signed Fuller's name, an attack would be made upon me to the effect that I had made improper pro-

TAKING OF TESTIMONY HAS BEEN FINISHED

Wife of Defendant Renews the Attack on Wilson for Some Unknown Purpose

OPENING ARGUMENT BY A. F. JONES

Throws the Mantle of Charity About Mrs. Rodley—Collins' Address to be Concluded This Morning

Special to The Record

OROVILLE, February 6.—After a period of time covering two weeks the last bit of testimony in the case of the people vs J. Ellis Rodley, was submitted to the jury at fifteen minutes past ten o'clock this morning, and a few minutes later the argument to the jury commenced.

Mrs. Bernice McLennan was the first witness and she kept the court waiting for fifteen minutes before she appeared. She testified that she was a resident of Chico and was acquainted with Dr. Rodley. One evening some time in February, 1898, she in company with Mrs. L. M. Dunn were in the reception room of Rodley's office; Batchelder and an elderly lady whom Batchelder spoke of as "mother" and whom she presumed was Mrs. Batchelder, came in and were ushered into the main office by the physician. She heard no conversation between them. Sproul asked her only one or two questions and she was dismissed from the stand.

Mr. Sproul then offered in evidence a certified copy of the proclamation issued by Governor Budd relative to the observance of the 21st of February, 1898, as a day of mourning in honor of the Maine victims. The object of this was to rebut the testimony of Rodley that Mr. Sproul had called him up on the telephone on the 17th and told him that the Governor had set aside the 21st as a day of mourning. The copy of the proclamation showed that the same was not issued until February 19th and not until the letter written to Batchelder was already on its way to Biggs.

Mrs. Minnie Fowles, of Mulberry, San Benito county, was next sworn. She testified that she was formerly Mrs. Cal Hogan; that her husband died in 1895, and that on March 12, 1898, she married her present husband. She had been treated by Dr. Rodley at various times during her residence in Butte county. She left Chico for her present home on November 10, 1897, and since that time until now she had not been in Butte County. She was not a resident of Biggs on the 15th of March 1898, and was not there during that year. In fact, she said that Dr. Rodley, while he had treated her for a considerable period of time, had never paid a visit to her at Biggs. She was asked but few questions on cross-examination.

Mrs. J. E. Rodley was called by the defense. She testified that she knew S. H. Wilson; she denied that she had ever asked Wilson to secure a confession from Rodley. She said Wilson came to her in Chico and proffered the advice that as Judge Gray would try the case and the testimony was such that he was bound to be convicted, and that she was foolish to spend her money in his defense. She said to him that if he thought so why didn't he go to the doctor and try and get him to confess; that she was confident of his innocence ... show it at leaving he put his arm around her waist and told her he would look out for her; for her to let the Doctor go and he would see that the children were educated; another time in the jail he put his arm around her and drawing her head back, kissed her on the forehead. To all of these advances she said she refused to accede to his requests. Mr. Sproul dismissed Mrs. Rodley from the stand without cross-examination.

Defendant Rodley was again called to the stand and asked by Mr Collins if he did not have other patients in Biggs at the time of the visit of February 15, 1898. He said that he had. He said that he testified as to only his recollection whether it was Mrs Hogan he called to see or not.

On cross-examination Sproul handled the defendant without gloves. He read from the transcript of testimony where he positively affirmed that it was Mrs. Cal Hogan whom he had called to see. Rodley squirmed and twisted and said that now it was to the best of his recollection, he might have gone to see some other patient or it might have been on pension business for the government. He could not name a single person in Biggs whom he had examined for pension nor could he give the name of any other patient in that place. The testimony of Mrs. Hogan was indisputable and struck the defense a sledge hammer blow.

Both sides here announced that their cases were closed, and Assistant District Attorney Jones commenced the opening argument for the State.

He began his address with the usual compliment to the jury, giving them to understand that they were looked upon as intelligent gentlemen who would render a verdict according to the law and evidence. He then spoke in a general way of the importance of the case at hand to Butte county and the State of California, in that there is a pressing necessity of putting a stop to the looting of dead men's estates. The whole circumstances surrounding the Fuller will case and the consequent details, he said, are reeking with rottenness. Five families have been ruined, and, no matter what the outcome of this trial may be, the defendant has been irretrievably ruined in name and fortune. The fair names of others, which, previous to the trial, had stood without the slightest suspicion of reproach, are suffering from attempted ...

ASSISTANT DISTRICT ATTORNEY A. F. JONES

ence to his visit to Biggs to visit Mrs Cal Hogan, he showed the falsity of the story. He also called attention to the testimony that he talked with Sproul regarding the call of Governor Budd for Maine memorial exercises. According to Rodley's claim the conversation took place a day before the call for the memorial exercises was made by Governor Budd. If this be true, Jones declared that it made Sproul a mind reader or Budd had taken him into his confidence and told him what he was intending to do. Jones held that these two facts should be enough to show the falsity of Rodley's testimony. He said that no man on the jury could doubt the testimony of Sheriff Wilson.

Regarding Mrs. Rodley's testimony he said it is best to throw the mantle of charity about her, for it was a threadbare attempt to bring a woman into the case and besmirch her to save the man.

Garner he held up as a trustworthy old man who knows he must go to State prison for his error. He had no object in telling of his guilt and the guilt of others except to follow the promptings of his conscience. The testimony he held to have been fully corroborated. He spoke briefly of the testimony of Theodore Kytka as having fully established the authorship of the will, and it had not been refuted; that this testimony went to show the conspiracy around which the crime of perjury was woven. There was but one thing for the defense to do, and that was to reaffirm the original story, and the whole story must be viewed with distrust. In conclusion he asked the jury to weigh the evidence carefully, and expressed the belief that they would find a verdict of guilty.

Jones' speech occupied about two hours.

Attorney Collins was suffering from a severe cold when he began his argument about 2 o'clock. Introductory to his argument, he said that he did not intend to attempt to sway the jury through sympathy, but would seek a verdict for his client upon broader grounds. He quoted the law which says that no man shall be convicted of perjury on the direct testimony of less than one credible witness. He held that Garner is not a credible witness, having confessed that he is a perjurer. He dwelt at some length upon this point, and then passed on to show the improbability of Rodley committing such a crime. His high standing in the community and his general reputation for truth and veracity, and the fact that he did not need money, were all spoken of.

The interest of the spectators was greatly aroused when he began to deal with the supposed mystery in the case. He declared that there is a mystery behind the whole affair, that the suspicion exists, but not strong enough to allege. What it was he could not say, but that mystery, if cleared up, would explain some of the most extraordinary circumstances in connection with the case.

Mr. Collins then devoted sometime to a discussion of the legal aspects of the case. Shortly after 3 o'clock his voice failed him and a recess was taken for an hour. In the meantime his condition did not improve, and an adjournment was taken until tomorrow morning at 9:30 o'clock, when he will resume his argument. It is probable that Sproul will finish his argument tomorrow afternoon, and the case will go to the jury tomorrow evening.

Jack on Wilson for Some Unknown Purpose

OPENING ARGUMENT BY A. F. JONES

Throws the Mantle of Charity About Mrs. Rodley—Collins' Address to be Conclud-ed This Morning

Special to The Record.

OROVILLE, February 6.—After a period of time covering two weeks the last bit of testimony in the case of the people vs J. Ellis Rodley, was submitted to the jury at fifteen minutes past ten o'clock this morning, and a few minutes later the argument to the jury commenced.

Mrs. Bernice McLennan was the first witness and she kept the court waiting for fifteen minutes before she appeared. She testified that she was a resident of Chico and was acquainted with Dr. Rodley. One evening some time in February, 1898, she in company with Mrs. L. M. Dunn were in the reception room of Rodley's office; Batchelder and an elderly lady whom Batchelder spoke of as "mother" and whom she presumed was Mrs. Batchelder, came in and were ushered into the main office by the physician. She heard no conversation between them. Sproul asked her only one or two questions and she was dismissed from the stand.

Mr. Sproul then offered in evidence a certified copy of the proclamation issued by Governor Budd relative to the observance of the 21st of February, 1898, as a day of mourning in honor of the Maine victims. The object of this was to rebut the testimony of Rodley that Mr. Sproul had called him up on the telephone on the 17th and told him that the Governor had set aside the 21st as a day of mourning. The copy of the proclamation showed that the same was not issued until February 18th and not until the letter written to Batchelder was already on its way to Biggs.

Mrs. Minnie Fowles, of Mulberry, San Benito county, was next sworn. She testified that she was formerly Mrs. Cal Hogan; that her husband died in 1895, and that on March 12, 1899, she married her present husband. She had been treated by Dr. Rodley at various times during her residence in Butte county. She left Chico for her present home on November 10, 1897, and since that time until now she had not been in Butte County. She was not a resident of Biggs on the 15th of March 1898, and was not there during that year. In fact, she said that Dr. Rodley, while he had treated her for a considerable period of time, had never paid a visit to her at Biggs. She was asked but few questions on cross-examination.

Mrs. J. E. Rodley was called by the defense. She testified that she knew S. H. Wilson; she denied that she had ever asked Wilson to secure a confession from Rodley. She said Wilson came to her in Chico and proffered the advice that as Judge Gray would try the case and the testimony was such that he was bound to be convicted, and that she was foolish to spend her money in his defense. She said to him that if he thought so why didn't he go to the doctor and try and get him to confess; that she was confident of his innocence and that he would be able to show it at the trial. Wilson told her that he would go to the doctor—that it was a damn shame that she should spend her money for him. One day in the Sheriff's office he asked her to sit on the lounge and he got up and locked the door; he made proposals to her which she would not entertain, and he said he would see her again. At her house in Chico he called to see her and had a talk about the defendant. As he was [illegible] forehead. In all of these advances she said she refused to accede to his requests. Mr. Sproul dismissed Mrs. Rodley from the stand without cross-examination.

Defendant Rodley was again called to the stand and asked by Mr Collins if he did not have other patients in Biggs at the time of the visit of February

ASSISTANT DISTRICT ATTORNEY A. F. JONES

15, 1898. He said that he had. He said that he testified as to only his recollection whether it was Mrs Hogan he called to see or not.

On cross-examination Sproul handled the defendant without gloves. He read from the transcript of testimony where he positively affirmed that it was Mrs. Cal Hogan whom he had called to see. Rodley squirmed and twisted and said that now it was to the best of his recollection; he might have gone to see some other patient or it might have been no business for the government. He could not name a single person in Biggs whom he had examined for pension nor could he give the name of any other patient in that place. The testimony of Mrs. Hogan was indisputable and struck the defense a sledge hammer blow.

Both sides here announced that their cases were closed, and Assistant District Attorney Jones commenced the opening argument for the State.

He began his address with the usual compliment to the jury, giving them to understand that they were looked upon as intelligent gentlemen who would render a verdict according to the law and evidence. He then spoke in a general way of the importance of the case at hand to Butte county and the State of California, in that there is a pressing necessity of putting a stop to the looting of dead men's estates. The whole circumstances surrounding the Fuller will case and the consequent details, he said, are reeking with rottenness. Five families have been ruined, and, no matter what the outcome of this trial may be, the defendant has been irretrievably ruined in name and fortune. The fair names of others, which, previous to the trial, had stood without the slightest suspicion of reproach, are suffering from attempted besmirchment. The moral effect of this case can not die out this generation. Mr. Jones referred to the testimony of Col. H. T. Batchelder, and asked the jurymen if they could form the slightest idea why Batchelder, the warmest friend of the defendant, should commit perjury against him, a man whom he declared had saved his life. Referring to the testimony of Rodley, especially that part of it in ref[illegible] versation took place a day before the call for the memorial exercises was made by Governor Budd. If this be true, Jones declared that it made Sproul a mind reader or Budd had taken him into his confidence and told him what he was intending to do. Jones held that these two facts should be enough to show the falsity of Rodley's testimony. He said that no man on the jury could doubt the testimony of Sheriff Wilson.

Regarding Mrs. Rodley's testimony he said it is best to throw the mantle of charity about her, for it was a threadbare attempt to bring a woman into the case and be-smirch her to save the man.

Garner he held up as a trustworthy old man who knows he must go to State prison for his error. He had no object in telling of his guilt and the guilt of others except to follow the promptings of his conscience. The testimony he held to have been fully corroborated. He spoke briefly of the testimony of Theodore Kytka as having fully established the authorship of the will, and it had not been refuted, that this testimony went to show the conspiracy around which the crime of perjury was woven. There was but one thing for the defense to do, and that was to reaffirm the original story, and the whole story must be viewed with distrust. In conclusion he asked [illegible] history to his argument, he said that he did not intend to attempt to sway the jury through sympathy, but would seek a verdict for his client upon broader grounds. He quoted the law which says that no man shall be convicted of perjury on the direct testimony of less than one credible witness. He held that Garner is not a credible witness, having confessed that he is a perjurer. He dwelt at some length upon this point, and then passed on to show the improbability of Rodley committing such a crime. His high standing in the community and his general reputation for truth and veracity, and the fact that he did not need money, were all spoken of.

The interest of the spectators was greatly aroused when he began to deal with the supposed mystery in the case. He declared that there is a mystery behind the whole affair, that the suspicion exists, but not strong enough to allege. What it was he could not say, but that mystery, if cleared up, would explain some of the most extraordinary circumstances in connection with the case.

Mr. Collins then devoted sometime to a discussion of the legal aspects of the case. Shortly after 3 o'clock his voice failed him and a recess was taken for an hour. In the meantime his condition did not improve, and an adjournment was taken until tomorrow morning at 9:30 o'clock, when he will resume his argument. It is probable that Sproul will finish his argument tomorrow afternoon, and the case will go to the jury tomorrow evening.

RODLEY SENTENCED TO SERVE TWELVE YEARS

Such is the Price For Falsely Swearing to Rob an Estate

Feb 12 1900

FOUNDATIONS FOR APPEAL LAID

Usual Motions Made by Defense to Perfect Plans for Final Test—Forgery Charge Dismissed

Chico R.

Special to the RECORD.

OROVILLE, February 9.—Dr. J. Ellis Rodley stood up in the Superior Court yesterday forenoon and received the sentence of the Judge who tried him that he spend the next twelve years of his life in the garb of a felon at the State prison at San Quentin. The scene in the crowded court room was one of dramatic interest. It marked the end of a long and closely contested trial, the most important in many particulars, of any in the history of the county. The man at the bar had been one of the county's most prominent and respected citizens, and many of those who heard the words pronounced which were to bar him from future association with honest men, had been his intimate friends and close associates.

Dr. Rodley was accompanied to the courtroom by his wife and counsel, and he showed no signs of having passed a restless night as a result of the verdict pronounced against him the day before. In fact, all through the long trial and during the rendition of the findings of the jury, which meant so much to him, Dr. Rodley has been to all outward appearance the most cool and unconcerned of men. He must have been under great mental strain, and yet the impenetrable calm of his countenance gave no sign. It was so yesterday, and those of the morbidly curious, who, with almost innate savagery haunt court rooms at the moment of the crisis of a criminal trial, eyeing the human who has been brought to bay, in order that they may gloat and find satisfaction in the final thrust of the dagger of justice, went away without feeling that he had given one sign that he suffered.

It being the day set for the trial of Rodley for forgery, his counsel asked that the trial be immediately proceeded with. Mr. Sproul stated that he was not ready to proceed to trial at this time, and stated that he was willing to have the charge of forgery dismissed, stating also, that if it was found advisable another indictment against him on the same charge could be had. Mr. Collins of course had no objection to the dismissal of the indictment, and it was so ordered by the Court.

After this had been disposed of, Rodley was told to stand. He stepped quickly forward and stood between his counsel, and placing his hands behind him, faced the Judge. In the purely legal form prescribed, Judge Gray said:

"Are there any motions for this morning? This is the time set for the sentence of J. Ellis Rodley. You may stand up. An indictment was found against you by the Grand Jury of Butte charging you with the crime of perjury; upon being arraigned in this court, you entered a plea of not guilty and afterwards went to trial before a jury of your own selection. That jury, after hearing all the evidence and carefully considering the same, returned a verdict of guilty as charged. Have you any legal reason to show why the sentence of the Court should not be pronounced upon you?"

Then at a signal from his counsel, Rodley stepped back and seated himself. Mr. Collins then proceeded to make and file his motions for a new trial and for an arrest of judgment. As the basis for his motion, he stated that the court erred in matters of law occurring at the trial; that the court erred in its instructions to the jury; that evidence was admitted contrary to law, that there was misconduct on the part of the District Attorney and the Assistant District Attorney during the course of the trial, consisting of remarks made in the presence of the jury and to the jury in the course of the argument; Mr. Collins also held that the indictment was not drawn in conformity to the Statutes, and was therefore void; that the verdict was contrary to law and evidence, and that there was misconduct on the part of the jury. All of these were formal motions in order to get the case in proper condition for appeal, and he made but brief argument in support of them. The motions were promptly overruled, and continuing, Judge Gray said:

"No legal objection having been presented here why the sentence of the Court should not now be pronounced upon you, the judgment of the Court is that you be confined in the State prison of the State of California at San Quentin for the term of twelve years."

At the conclusion of the sentence, Rodley coolly took his seat and Collins presented to the Judge a writ of probable cause, which is intended to act as a stay of the commitment, and results in defendant's not being removed to the State prison until after the Supreme Court has passed upon the appeal. If it is affirmed, he will then be taken to the penitentiary. In the meantime he will remain in the county jail.

PRISON YAWNS FOR HIM.

Conviction of Former Mayor Rodley of Chico Upheld

A case that not long ago caused a sensation in Northern California was decided by the Supreme Court yesterday. [illegible] J. Ellis Rodley, a physician and former Mayor of Chico, will have to spend a number of years in the penitentiary.

About two years ago Arthur Fuller died in Chico leaving a valuable estate. Mrs. Minnie Housworth [illegible] Fuller's last will, in which she was made the legatee of his estate. Dr. Rodley's name was attached to the will as one of the witnesses to Fuller's signature. When the will was offered for probate he swore to the genuineness of the document. He was indicted for perjury and convicted. The lower court found that the will had been written by Mrs. Housworth, that she had forged Fuller's signature and had got Rodley and another man to witness the signature.

COLLIN'S MYSTERIOUS "SOMETHING IS UNTOLD"

Rodley's Attorney Spent the Day In Abusing Witnesses For Prosecution

DEEP CONSPIRACY HIS DEFENSE

Hours Spent in Analyzing Testimony of Colonel Batcholder, to Show the Unreasonableness of It

Special to the RECORD.

OROVILLE, February 7.—As far as can be determined in the Superior Court of this county, the fate of Dr. J. Ellis Rodley, the trial of whom on a charge of perjury in connection with the Fuller will has been the absorbing topic of conversation in every home in this county, will soon be known. The jurors have the testimony, have listened to the opening argument by the Assistant Prosecuting Attorney, and have been talked to for a day and a half by the leading counsel for the defense. Tomorrow morning Collins will finish and Jo D. Sproul will make the final argument for the People, and it is quite probable that during the evening a verdict will be reached.

All of today and evening was taken up by Attorney Geo. D. Collins in arguing the case for the defense, and he was listened to throughout with patience. The theory he has advanced is in many respects unique, but whether or no it will have its effect upon the jury in Rodley's favor, it only meets with favor with those who are Rodley's friends.

The theory advanced by Collins is that Rodley is the victim of a huge conspiracy, the depths of which can not be fathomed now, that Rodley is the snow-white angel while the others who have testified against him are the arch-villains with Sheriff Wilson as a little devil. He contends that there is a mysterious something behind the whole prosecution which has been unexplained, yet is apparent.

The speaker took up the testimony of Col. H. T. Batchelder and devoted the greater part of the day to roasting this witness. He read the testimony sentence by sentence, and analyzed it, with a view to making it appear that he is in truth the archfiend who is trying to ruin Dr. Rodley and who is not the friend he professed to be. He ridiculed the idea of Batchelder's friendship for Rodley and denied that Batchelder was the unwilling witness. Referring to Batchelder's statement that he had never told a living person of the offer made to him by Rodley, he declared that Batchelder lied. He held that the testimony of Batchelder deviated materially from the truth, and should therefore be viewed with distrust. The letter of Rodley to Batchelder was an innocent one in every respect, but Batchelder for a purpose construed it wrongly. He endeavored to make it appear entirely unreasonable to believe Batchelder the friend of Rodley, instead of a party to the conspiracy.

Theodore Kytka he handled in a humorous way, holding him before the jury as a paid witness whose testimony came in response to the salary paid him. He went with some detail into handwriting matters, combatting some of the pet theories of the expert, whose testimony only was given to show a conspiracy between Rodley and Mrs. Housworth.

Swearingen, he said, was also brought in to show the conspiracy. The attorney's first impression was that Swearingen was insane, but finally concluded that he was a consummate rascal. He believed him to be but the easy dupe of some designing person, an easy man to secure for a money consideration to testify to anything, no matter how improbable.

Garner he denounced as being unworthy of belief, he being a confessed perjurer, and he pointed out the inconsistency of the supposition that Rodley, a man of means, position and a nice family, should confide in such a man as Garner his entire future. Garner, he said, was another creature of the prosecution, and his latest story was for the purpose of sending a man to prison.

He referred to the fact that Garner had not been sentenced though he had long since pleaded guilty, and he insinuated that this was an indication of a promise of reward. With much emphasis he declared that the prosecution of Rodley was a diabolical conspiracy, the like of which would not be tolerated in the realm of the Czar of Russia, and alongside of which the Dreyfus case was but a circumstance.

Tonight Mr. Collins devoted to an analysis of Dr. Rodley's testimony.

MRS. HOUSEWORTH ILL

SUDDEN ATTACK OF HEART FAILURE

Continued Close Confinement and Mental Strain Have at Last Prostrated the Woman Accused of Double Crime.

Special to the ENTERPRISE.

OROVILLE, Feb. 23.—Mrs. Minnie Houseworth, yesterday morning, suffered a sudden attack of heart failure, and despite the constant attendance of a physician she is yet in a precarious condition.

It has been noticed for some time that Mrs. Houseworth was failing, but she uttered no complaint, and with almost unheard-of will power has kept up. The close confinement of the past few months, coupled with the severe mental strain, have gradually told upon her until at last her strength gave way. Dr. Reardan was hastily summoned and has since been in almost constant attendance upon her. Her son, J. P. West, who was in Chico, was sent for, and he went to the county jail yesterday afternoon, and will remain with his mother until she is past all danger.

This afternoon at 2 o'clock there appeared to be a slight change for the better in her condition, and it is intended to remove her to the County Hospital as soon as she is strong enough to endure the trip.

In the matter of the estate and guardianship of Claud Richardson, an order has been entered appointing the father guardian. The estate consists of cash in the sum of $139.73 left to him by his uncle Godfrey Richardson.

The final account of J. V. Williams, administrator of the estate of Henry Pursell, has been filed. It shows the receipt of $305 and the expenditure of a like amount. Set for hearing March 5.

In the case of Eastman vs. Ward the demurrer of defendant has been overruled.

Simpson vs. Wyrick—Motion to strike out certain words in the complaint filed.

RODLEY IS CONVICTED

Jury Agreed Upon a Verdict of Guilty on the First Ballot

Special to The Record.

OROVILLE, February 8.—The trial of Dr. J. Ellis Rodley was concluded this afternoon at 3:20 o'clock, when the jury, after being out but fifteen minutes returned a verdict of guilty as charged.

This morning Attorney Collins resumed his argument on behalf of the defendant, and concluded about 10 o'clock. A short recess was then taken after which District Attorney Sproul began the closing argument for the People. Mr. Sproul was in prime condition.

He had with him no rolls of testimony nor stacks of law books, but, for three solid hours he reviewed the testimony and the character of the witnesses in a manner that drove every point for the prosecution home with the jury. The courtroom was packed to the doors, and every person within maintained absolute quiet that they might not miss one word of the eloquent attorney's address. Of all the speechs Sproul has ever made, and he has made many, this was the gem.

Mr Sproul dwelt particularly on the defense of H T Batchelder, of whom there had been nothing too mean for Attorney Collins to say. He held Batchelder up as the true friend of Dr. Rodley who had been brought unwillingly into the case, but when it came to the final test, he had stood up for right and justice, and he thanked God that there are such men left in the world as Col. Batchelder who would not perjure themselves to save a friend from deserved punishment.

JO D SPROUL.

Prefacing, however, his remarks regarding the details of the testimony, he called attention to the frequency of attempted lootings of estates of men who were lonely and eccentric in life as was Alfred Fuller. It is also strange that the looting of such estates is most frequently accomplished by persons who have the advantage of good reputations. Regarding the testimony of Expert Kytka, he said that it was not necessary to deny that such testimony could be bought, as the exhibits produced of the handwritings were sufficient to convince that the will was a forgery.

Mr. Sproul made a telling point when he replied to the abuse heaped upon ... by Attorney Collins.

His picture of John Garner, who had confessed his guilt, was most touching, and not only were the ladies in the audience moved to tears, but the men and several of the members of the jury. He referred to the old farmer as having been duped and led into the wrong by Rodley, who had convinced him that it was all right and having him in his power, held the club over him for a year and a half. But Garner, knowing full well the consequences, knowing that he must bid his wife and family good-bye to enter prison, told the story of his error and freed his conscience.

DR. J. ELLIS RODLEY, CONVICTED PERJURER.

The District Attorney treated the testimony of Mrs. Dunn and Mrs. McLennan with ridicule. He pictured to the jury Dr Rodley sitting in his office outlining, before the Governor had issued his proclamation, a program of his own for the Maine memorial exercises. He selected his old friend Batchelder to deliver the oration. He next selected two ladies, who, adorned with tinsel and tin crowns would be seen in a golden chariot, and across the crown on the head of Mrs. Dunn would appear the word "Truth," and on the tin crown of Mrs McLennan would appear the word "Justice." Thus he disposed of their testimony.

As for the love passages between Sheriff Wilson and Mrs Rodley, he said they had no bearing on the case, but denounced the testimony on this point as an unjust attack upon a man who had sought only to tell the truth.

He referred to the fact that Canfield's talk with Rodley regarding Batchelder's expenses was in reference to other than Batchelder's visit on the evening of February 18th.

He then declared that it was not his purpose to persecute, for Rodley had been his friend, but the duties of his office demanded that he should prosecute for wrong doing.

In conclusion he emphasized again the importance of the case, and expressed confidence that a verdict of guilty would be found.

It was 3:05 o'clock when Judge Gray finished his instructions to the jury and they went into the jury room to deliberate. They proceeded at once to elect J M Nelson foreman, and without one word of discussion regarding the merits of the testimony, took a ballot. The first ballot showed all twelve for conviction.

desired trial at once. This matter will also be settled tomorrow morning.

Judging from history, Rodley will not be shown any leniency in the matter of sentence. The maximum sentence is fourteen years.

Labors of Attorneys White and Gray in the Big Case

Without detracting in the least from the credit due District Attorney Sproul for his vigorous and successful prosecution of Dr. J. Ellis Rodley, it is but timely to note that had it not been for the foundation work accomplished by Attorney Richard White, aided by Attorney Carleton Gray of Oroville, Dr. Rodley, Mrs. Minnie Houseworth and John M Garner, all of whom are now in jail, would be at present free, and at least one of them would be enjoying the estate of Alfred Fuller.

Messrs. White and Gray were retained by the heirs soon after Fuller's death to defend their interests in the estate. A few months after the death of Fuller, the rumor became general that Alfred Fuller made a will bequeathing his estate to Mrs. Houseworth, but months passed by without the will being brought to light. Mr. White at first worked on the theory that the will was being brought forward in the interests of the large debts existing against the estate, but when the will was displayed, and he had read it through carefully, he was convinced that it was a forgery and absolutely fraudulent. In fact, there were circumstances of eight months previous brought to his mind by the wording of that peculiar document which made him absolutely certain that the will was fraudulent, and it was for him ... that would sustain the purpose that the parties to the attempted looting of the estate might become more at ease over the matter and therefore more easily approached. One old gentleman of unquestioned standing, who has not been mentioned in the case, but who has dug more testimony than all others, was continually at work. Attorneys White and Gray were securing testimony for the purpose of contesting the will, not for the prosecution of the parties to the attempted steal, but in defense of the estate.

RICHARD WHITE.

When Uncle John Swearingen came down from Trinity county his first stopping place in Chico was at the law office of Attorney White and there he made affidavit to what he would and did later testify to. It was Attorneys White and Gray who came to the conclusion that Col. H. T. Batchelder, being the closest friend of Dr. Rodley, knew something about the will, and upon their suggestion the trap that forced Batchelder to desert his old friend was laid.

It was not upon the advice of these attorneys, however, that the Grand Jury returned indictments, for they preferred to try the will case previous to any arrests. The Grand Jury preferred to act at once and they did so, with the now well known result.

By their honest handling of this estate which they could have as well plundered as many estates in this community have been, Attorneys White and Gray have won for themselves the confidence of every man of means in this county.

CARLETON GRAY.

District Attorney Sproul's able prosecution of the case of Rodley before a jury was testified to yesterday when the jury, without a word of discussion, voted the defendant guilty as charged.

Verdict of Guilty on the First Ballot

Special to The Record.

OROVILLE, February 8.—The trial of Dr. J. Ellis Rodley was concluded this afternoon at 3:20 o'clock, when the jury, after being out but fifteen minutes returned a verdict of guilty as charged.

This morning Attorney Collins resumed his argument on behalf of the defendant, and concluded about 10 o'clock. A short recess was then taken after which District Attorney Sproul began the closing argument for the People. Mr. Sproul was in prime condition.

He had with him no rolls of testimony nor stacks of law books, but, for three solid hours he reviewed the testimony and the character of the witnesses in a manner that drove every point for the prosecution home with the jury. The courtroom was packed to the doors, and every person within maintained absolute quiet that they might not miss one word of the eloquent attorney's address. Of all the speeches Sproul has ever made, and he has made many, this was the gem.

Mr. Sproul dwelt particularly on the defense of H. T. Batchelder, of whom there had been nothing too mean for Attorney Collins to say. He held Batchelder up as the true friend of Dr. Rodley who had been brought unwillingly into the case, but when it came to the final test, he had stood up for right and justice, and he thanked God that there are such men left in the world as Col. Batchelder who would not perjure themselves to save a friend from deserved punishment.

JO D. SPROUL

Prefacing, however, his remarks regarding the details of the testimony, he called attention to the frequency of attempted lootings of estates of men who were lonely and eccentric in life as was Alfred Fuller. It is also strange that the looting of such estates is most frequently accomplished by persons who have the advantage of good reputations. Regarding the testimony of Expert Kytka, he said that it was not necessary to deny that such testimony could be bought, as the exhibits presented of the handwritings were sufficient to convince that the will was a forgery.

Mr. Sproul made a telling point when he replied to the abuse heaped upon John Swearingen by Attorney Collins. He spoke of Swearingen as being one of those old citizens who formed the backbone of Butte county; that although he came into court in clothes not of the best, with his beard untrimmed, his check is good at any bank for $10,000, and his word is as good as his bond. He came into the case to save his old friend Carmack from being besmirched by those would rob the estate of Alfred Fuller.

...his going, was most touching, and not only were the ladies in the audience moved to tears, but the men and several of the members of the jury. He referred to the old farmer as having been duped and led into the wrong by Rodley, who had convinced him that it was all right and having him in his power, held the club over him for a year and a half. But Garner, knowing full well the consequences, knowing that he must bid his wife and family good-bye to enter prison, told the story will also be settled tomorrow morning.

Judging from history, Rodley will not be shown any leniency in the matter of sentence. The maximum sentence is fourteen years.

Without detracting in the least from the credit due District Attorney Sproul for his vigorous and successful prosecution of Dr. J. Ellis Rodley, it is not untimely to note that had it not been for the foundation work accomplished by Attorney Richard White, aided by

DR. J. ELLIS RODLEY, CONVICTED PERJURER.

of his error and freed his conscience.

The District Attorney treated the testimony of Mrs. Dunn and Mrs. McLennan with ridicule. He pictured to the jury Dr. Rodley sitting in his office outlining, before the Governor had issued his proclamation, a program of his own for the Maine memorial exercises. He selected his old friend Batchelder to deliver the oration. He next selected two ladies, who, adorned with tinsel and tin crowns would be seen in a golden chariot, and across the crown on the head of Mrs. Dunn would appear the word "Truth," and on the tin crown of Mrs. McLennan would appear the word "Justice." Thus he disposed of their testimony.

As for the love passages between Sheriff Wilson and Mrs. Rodley, he said they had no bearing on the case, but denounced the testimony on this point as an unjust attack upon a man who had sought only to tell the truth.

He referred to the fact that Canfield's talk with Rodley regarding Batchelder's expenses was in reference to other than Batchelder's visit on the evening of February 18th.

He then declared that it was not his purpose to persecute, for Rodley had been his friend, but the duties of his office demanded that he should prosecute for wrong doing.

In conclusion he emphasized again the importance of the case, and expressed confidence that a verdict of guilty would be found.

It was 3.05 o'clock when Judge Gray finished his instructions to the jury and they went into the jury room to deliberate. They proceeded at once to elect J. M. Nelson foreman, and without one word of discussion regarding the merits of the testimony, took a ballot. The first ballot showed all twelve for conviction.

After the return of the verdict, Attorney Collins stated that the defendant would waive time for passing sentence, and asked that sentence be pronounced at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, and it was so ordered.

District Attorney Sproul said that the People are not ready to proceed with the trial of the forgery case, and Collins said that the defense was, and Attorney Carleton Gray of Oroville, Dr. Rodley, Mrs. Minnie Housworth and John M. Garner, all of whom are now in jail, would be at present free, and at least one of them would be enjoying the estate of Alfred Fuller.

Messrs. White and Gray were retained by the heirs soon after Fuller's death to defend their interests in the estate. A few months after the death of Fuller, the rumor became general that Alfred Fuller made a will bequeathing his estate to Mrs. Housworth, but months passed by without the will being brought to light. Mr. White at first worked on the theory that the will was being brought forward in the interests of the large note existing against the estate, but when the will was displayed, and he had read it through carefully, he was convinced that it was a forgery and absolutely fraudulent. In fact, there were circumstances of eight months previous brought to his mind by the wording of that peculiar document which made him absolutely certain that the will was fraudulent, and it was for him to secure testimony that would sustain his convictions. He sought not to interview those who might know something of the history of the will, but interviews were had by those who could approach prospective witnesses. Intentionally the filing of a contest of the will was delayed for months and public opinion was made that no contest would be instituted, but this was all to the purpose that the parties to the attempted looting of the estate might become more at ease over the matter and therefore more easily approached. One old gentleman of unquestioned standing, who has not been mentioned in the case, but who has dug more testimony than all others, was continually at work. Attorneys White and Gray were securing testimony for the purpose of contesting the will, not for the prosecution of the parties to the attempted steal, but in defense of the estate.

RICHARD WHITE.

Labors of Attorneys White and Gray in the Big Case

When Uncle John Swearingen came down from Trinity county his first stopping place in Chico was at the law office of Attorney White and there he made affidavit to what he would and did later testify to. It was Attorneys White and Gray who came to the conclusion that Col. H. T. Batchelder, being the closest friend of Dr. Rodley, knew something about the will, and upon their suggestion the trap that forced Batchelder to desert his old friend was laid.

It was not upon the advice of these attorneys, however, that the Grand Jury returned indictments, for they preferred to try the will case previous to any arrests. The Grand Jury preferred to act at once and they did so, with the now well known result.

By their honest handling of this estate which they could have as well plundered as many estates in this community have been, Attorneys White and Gray have won for themselves the confidence of every man of means in this county.

CARLETON GRAY.

District Attorney Sproul's able prosecution of the case of Rodley before a jury was testified to yesterday when the jury, without a word of discussion, voted the defendant guilty as charged.

Chico

MRS. HOUSEWORTH MAY BE NEAR UNTO DEATH

Her Condition Was So Serious Yesterday As To Cause Alarm

BUT SMALL HOPE FOR RECOVERY

Suffering From an Ailment Which Heroic Treatment Failed to Conquer—Now In County Hospital

Special to the Record.

OROVILLE, March 9.—Mrs. Minnie Houseworth, one of Butte's star prisoners who was removed yesterday to the County Hospital on account of her serious illness, was again near unto death's door this morning, and it may be truthfully stated that those in a position to judge, believe that she can never recover from her ailment.

Several months before Mrs. Houseworth's arrest, she subjected herself to a very delicate operation which was necessary to save her life. The operation gave her only temporary relief, but it is feared that her ailment is the same as before, and if such is the case there is no hope for her.

Sheriff Wilson appeared before the Supervisors today and stated that by reason of Mrs. Houseworth being removed to the County Hospital, he is burdened with the extra expense of hiring a nurse, as he cannot leave her unguarded, she being held in custody in the absence of $15,000 bonds. He asked the Board to supply a nurse for the night time. The Board decided to employ Mrs. J. R. Preston. The Board then discussed the advisability of asking the Judge to reduce the bond or release her during her serious illness.

MRS. BOTKIN A WITNESS.

Testifies in a Divorce Suit and Draws a Crowd.

HAS A CHANCE FOR REVENGE ON MRS. PRICE.

THE LATTER GAVE TESTIMONY IN THE POISONED CANDY CASE.

Jail Life Has Not Altered the Appearance or Manners of the Woman Convicted of Murder.

Mrs. Cordelia Botkin, who was found guilty of murdering Mrs. John P. Dunning with poisoned candy, was the chief attraction in the Price divorce case yesterday, and men crowded into Judge Daingerfield's courtroom to see her. She was called as a witness against Mrs. Birdie Price, the plaintiff in the case. Mrs. Price was the landlady at the Victoria, a boarding-house on California and Hyde streets, when Mrs. Botkin resided there in 1898. The defendant in the suit, A. G. Price, accused his wife of undue intimacy with W. W. Barnes, and Mrs. Botkin was brought from the County Jail to support this allegation. Mrs. Botkin was sentenced to life imprisonment, but an appeal to the Supreme Court has stayed her journey to the penitentiary. Mrs. Price and Barnes were witnesses against her on the murder trial, and she partly evened the score yesterday.

The County Jail, where she has been for a year and a half, has not altered Mrs. Botkin's appearance. She still has her embonpoint, her English accent and idioms and her peculiar lifting of the upper lip which exposes a row of white teeth in a manner that suggests cruelty. She was gowned, veiled and gloved in quiet colors. Mrs. Botkin was indisposed to talk of her own trouble while she was on the stand. She first got revenge on Barnes, who had been described as the manager of the house for Mrs. Price. Previous testimony had given the impression that he lived in luxurious idleness at the Victoria, with his face as his fortune.

"I merely knew Barnes as an attache of the house," said Mrs. Botkin, as if she were discussing some one who did not interest her in the least. "He was a porter, I believe. His duties, apparently, were washing windows and laying carpets. Part of the time he attended to the cookery, but I never saw him at that, as I did not take my food at the house. Mrs. Price is a very delicate woman physically. I felt sorry for her. I feel sorry for any woman's misfortunes."

Attorney Reddy wondered why, with this sorrow, she [illegible] to Price's lawyers a statement which she said that Mrs. Price made to her, but which was used to Mrs. Price's moral detriment. Reddy asked her if Mrs. Price was a witness in the case of the People vs. Botkin.

"The records so indicate," Mrs. Botkin replied, the lifted lip showing that she did not like the reference to that case. Judge Daingerfield inquired if she remembered, and she answered: "The court records will show you who were called as witnesses." She fenced with Reddy and the Court for ten minutes on the point. "There was such a [illegible] of witnesses in petticoats that I can't remember any particular one," she said, but she would not say that she did not recollect that Mrs. Price was a witness.

"Do you decline to answer?" asked Judge Daingerfield when in response to one question she said "I have no answer." "No, I do not decline," she returned. Finally the Court elicited from her, "I suppose Mrs. Price was a witness," and this answer was accepted as enough. Mrs. Botkin seemed to realize that being already under sentence of life imprisonment, she had no reason to fear a term in jail for contempt of court. Reddy inquired whether she remembered if Mrs. Smith was a witness against her. Mrs. Smith was a cook at the Victoria and she is on the side of Mrs. Price in the divorce case.

"I refuse to answer any more questions bearing on my case until my attorney, Mr. Heggerty, is present," said Mrs. Botkin, looking annoyed. "If I could remember that she was a witness I would not recall it. I did not come here to go over my case. I had no malevolent feeling toward anyone, and have not now."

Reddy asked her if she had been convicted of a felony. "The records of the court so indicate," she replied. "Please say yes or no, and then we'll say no more about it," urged Reddy. "We'll say no more about it anyhow, for I am not going to give any such answer," she responded. Then the discussion of her self ended. In her testimony she referred to "my apartments" and to the "rentals" that she paid at the Victoria.

Mrs. Esther McPherson, who was the housekeeper at the Victoria from July to December, 1897, testified strongly about the intimacy of Mrs. Price and Barnes and she gave Reddy some sharp answers on cross-examination. Mrs. Price charged her husband with infidelity with Martha Lynde.

WOMAN WHO MAILED THE POISONED CANDY.

DOCTOR RODLEY,

Indicted at Chico for Perjury, Seeks His Liberty.

The Supreme Court has denied a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, made up in behalf of Dr. J. P. Rodley of Chico. Dr. Rodley, who will be remembered as having been one of the most prominent practitioners of the Butte county metropolis, was charged with being in collusion with Mrs. Minnie Houseworth to fraudulently [illegible] by an alleged will, the estate of the late Alfred Fuller.

Dr. Rodley testified as to the genuineness of the alleged false will, and was indicted by the Grand Jury for perjury. He [illegible] being [illegible] to jail. He now seeks to recover his liberty, but the Supreme Court denies it.

[illegible] Mrs. Houseworth, the alleged fraudulent [illegible], was arrested here some months since and taken to Chico.

WOODMAN IS GIVEN WARNING

Fuller's Half-breed Son Tells Him to Hold the Money

As Claimant of the Estate He Demands That Attorneys Fees Be Not Paid

Special to The Record.

OROVILLE, April [illegible].—The Attorney for William Fuller, the young Indian who [illegible] to be the son of Alfred Fuller, over whose estate there has been so much sensational litigation, has given Public Administrator Woodman formal notice that in case he is declared entitled to the estate, he will hold him (Woodman) and his bondsmen accountable for all moneys paid out of the estate upon the order of the Superior Court of which [illegible] had [illegible]. He especially notified him not to pay [illegible] to Attorney Richard White and Carleton Gray and a similar amount to Knight & Heggerty, being the amount allowed by the Superior Court [illegible] as attorneys for the defendant in the estate. Indian Fuller claims that these claims are void and unauthorized by law.

Notice has been given by the defendant in the suit of William Miller et al. vs. J. P. Carlisle and Paul Hugg, that they will on May [illegible], move for a dismissal of the case on the ground that the Court had not acquired jurisdiction.

The [illegible] of property belonging to the Alfred Fuller [illegible] to William [illegible]

DR. BURNES-GEHRICKE ACCUSED OF PERJURY.

Ex. Mar 4, 1900

Dr. Gehricke in the Police Court.

The preliminary hearing of Dr. Frances B. Gehricke, charged by C. de Witt Spencer with perjury, was commenced yesterday morning in Judge Mogan's Court. Frank Vernon read from his stenographic notes the testimony of Dr. Gehricke given on January 25th last before Judge Conlan, upon which the present charge is based. At that time, when Spencer was answering a charge preferred by Dr. Gehricke, which was dismissed, she swore that she had not given a general power of attorney to Spencer. J. M. McDonald, a money-lender, was called to attest the genuineness of a bill of sale which figures in the present issue. At this point the case went over until to-day at 2 o'clock, when a court reporter can again be in attendance.

A WOMAN OF MANY ROLES

Mrs. Dr. Burnes Gehricke Goes to Court Again.

OLD ENEMY CHARGES HER WITH PERJURY.

REVELATIONS MAY COME OUT OF THE HEARING ON THIS COMPLAINT.

Prisoner Was a Witness in a Sensational Murder Case—Befriended Peter J. Cox, Bogus Millionaire.

Dr. Frances Burnes-Gehricke was arrested yesterday afternoon just as she was leaving the Alcazar Theater on a complaint sworn to by Charles de Witt Spencer, who alleged that she committed perjury on December 28, 1899, before Judge Conlan when she made oath that she had not given Spencer a power of attorney. This was during the trial of Spencer, who had been arrested on complaint of Dr. Gehricke charging him with perjury in making an affidavit that he held a bill of sale for Dr. Gehricke's household effects. The present arrest and that which figures on the December calendar of the Police Court are but two mild expressions of a controversy, which has an indefinite number of phases and from which sensational developments may be expected.

Dr. Gehricke's charge against Spencer was dismissed, and now he comes back with a similar charge to show her, as he says, that she cannot drag him into court with impunity. Spencer has a fat packet of documents with which his attorneys, Lennon & Hawkins and W. J. Waldheimer, will go armed to the trial. They expect to show that Dr. Gehricke proved the charge against herself when she said she had revoked the power of attorney which, in former testimony, she claimed she had never given. Among Spencer's papers are said to be receipts for the recording of the power of attorney in question, both in this city and in Newcastle, Pa., where Dr. Gehricke's share of her father's estate was situated.

This is not the first time Dr. Gehricke has been in the public eye. She is a daughter of the late R. W. Cunningham, a wealthy resident of Newcastle, Pa., who died in 1890. She married P. D. Burnes in 1859 and parted from him in 1870. Her first public appearance in this city was in February, 1892, when she secured a divorce from Otto Gehricke, whom she had married in 1883. There was no personal service on him, as he had deserted her and gone to Europe. She was next heard of in July, 1893, when she was a witness in the trial of Martin O'Neil, charged with complicity in the shocking murder of Mrs. Kate Griffes in a water-front saloon. During the trial it developed that Dr. Gehricke's daughter, Mrs. Lou D. Bates, was the person who introduced Mrs. Griffes to the proprietor of the saloon and that she had been there with her several times drinking. Mrs. Griffes' husband testified that his wife came to the city on the Monday before her death to see "Dr. Burnes," and that on the day of the death she said that she was again coming over "to see the doctor" and had gathered flowers for her. When O'Neil was arrested he said "somebody will be glad of this," but when he was placed on trial he kept his peace. He was finally convicted of manslaughter and sentenced to ten years in prison. With good credits he was released last year, just before Mrs. Bates and her husband went to Porto Rico, where she has since died.

Dr. Gehricke made another appearance when Peter J. Cox, the "gold brick from the frozen north," came to town. He was the man who announced himself as the possessor of three millions of pocket money which he was trying to find a way to spend. In his story he hailed from a place not on the map and when the truth came out he was found to be a butcher and the son of a butcher. He had simply run away from his young wife, taking the thousand or so dollars they had saved. He fell in with Dr. Gehricke's daughter, Mrs. Bates, while en route to this city and she passed him on to her mother, who took him under her protecting wing. This devotion to the young man brought her into conflict with Mrs. Woodhull, then living at 600 Montgomery street. Mrs. Woodhull was willing to take the young millionaire for her son-in-law and she went to Dr. Gehricke and accused her of spiriting him away. Both sides told their grievances to the public. In the meantime Cox was away on a mining venture for Dr. Gehricke, who was advancing money for his support.

In appearance and in the flow of her conversation Mrs. Dr. Gehricke, who is 61 years of age, resembles Mrs. Davidson, who exploded the bombshell in the household of the Rev. C. O. Brown. Up to a late hour last night Dr. Gehricke had not given bonds. She denies all the charges and insinuations made by Spencer and in turn claims that the shoe is on the other foot. She says that Spencer owes her money and that this arrest is to intimidate and humiliate her.

Chron Rec May 9 - 1900

RODLEY CASE HEARING SET FOR NEXT FRIDAY

Arguments on the Appeal to the Supreme Court Will Then Be Presented

EARLY DECISION WILL BE ASKED

Prominence of Defendant as a Physician and Citizen Will be Urged as Grounds for Haste

Next Friday arguments will be heard by the Supreme Court on the appeal of Dr. J. Ellis Rodley. The defendant will be represented by Gen D Collins, who, with his assistant in the case, Attorney Guy R Kennedy, feels confident that the decision of the higher tribunal will be in favor of the defendant.

The appeal, it will be remembered, is from the order of the lower court denying the defendant a new trial, also from the order denying the motion of the defendant for an arrest of judgment.

Dr. Rodley, who has been in the county jail since his arrest last fall, is buoyed up by the hope that the Supreme Court will give him the decision, and an early one.

Attorney Kennedy stated last evening that an early decision is expected. This will be contrary to the general rule followed by the Supreme Court, though the law requires that a decision shall be given within sixty days from the time of final submission of the case. The arguments which will doubtless be made in requesting exceptional haste in deciding the case, are that the defendant is a prominent physician whose services are needed by his people; that he is in jail and entitled to an early and final settlement of the case.

GREAT WOLFSOHN MYSTERY WHICH HAS STARTLED LOS ANGELES.

THIS IS the story of Aaron Wolfsohn, mystic and cause of mysteries. It has puzzled the detectives of St. Louis, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles. It has mystified the shrewd agents of insurance companies accustomed to piercing every kind of fraud. It has nonplussed handwriting experts. It has baffled lawyers. It is a sort of perpetual motion or 4-11-44 mystery, which is no nearer solution now than at first. Indeed every new development of the case adds to the mystery of it.

Job's question was, "If a man die, shall he live again?" Wolfsohn's case is almost a parallel. It is the case of a man dead and buried suddenly springing to life at a distant place and coming back to deny that he had ever died. But if that were all there would be no unsolvable mystery. Wolfsohn went further, and just after convincing everybody that he was alive and in robust health he suddenly disappeared as completely as though the earth had swallowed him again. Behind him, confusing every expert who has examined his case, he left evidence of two or three personalities. He was L. Reuter at one time and Arthur Wolfson at another. Then he was Aaron Wolfsohn, and then A. Wolfson. In 1898 he is at Port Elizabeth, South Africa, writing love letters to a Los Angeles widow. In 1899 he is in Los Angeles denying that he ever wrote the letters. As L. Reuter he wrote letters speaking [illegible]. As Wolfsohn he loathed the thought of

is the positiveness with which each investigator sticks to his theory until it is knocked into a cocked hat. There are persons who say that Wolfsohn never will be deader than he is now, lying in the Los Angeles cemetery in a suicide's grave. Others are sure that Wolfsohn is alive. They are willing to take oath that they have seen and talked with him. Others are sure that Wolfsohn neither died nor reappeared, that the suicide was not Wolfsohn and that the newly appeared Wolfsohn is an impostor. The reader of the following statements of fact will be left entirely free to take sides as he pleases. He may take the pieces making up the puzzle and shift them into any position desired to suit any theory he may form. If he arrive at a solution of the problem he will be smarter than the detectives of four cities.

Aaron Wolfsohn, aged 22 years, took out a policy for a $10,000 life insurance in the New York Life Insurance Company at Los Angeles on March [illegible] 1899. The agent insuring him was S. A. D. Jones. The policy was made payable to Wolfsohn's estate. He was unmarried, and his nearest relative was his father, Benjamin Wolfsohn of 715 L[illegible] street, St. Louis. Wolfsohn loved Mrs. May O'Neil of Los Angeles, and was engaged to marry her.

On July 10, 1899, a man committed suicide by inhaling gas in Mrs. O'Neil's boarding-house on Main street, Los Angeles. Mrs. O'Neil was in San Francisco at the time. When she returned to Los Angeles she positively identified the body as that of Wolfsohn. She paid the funeral expenses and heaped his coffin with flowers. She had known him from childhood and pointed out how she identified the body. The landlady, heard that Wolfsohn was alive in Chicago. They [illegible] to the home office in New York. The result was a notice from the insurance company to the Public Administrator at Los Angeles, directing him not to pay the $[illegible] to Wolfsohn's heirs pending an investigation.

Jones, the agent, who had insured Wolfsohn, and Dr. Karl Kurtz, who had made the medical examination, [illegible] went over the proofs of death again [illegible] before [illegible] found dead in Mrs. O'Neil's home. They [illegible] considered [illegible] doubt that the dead man was Wolfsohn. [illegible] Attorney O'Bryan in Chicago [illegible] for the new Wolfsohn to [illegible] up. Though the rumor that Wolfsohn was alive was spread early in August, the man did not [illegible] in Chicago [illegible] of November. He [illegible] his absence by [illegible] just returned from Europe. [illegible] O'Bryan [illegible] appearance [illegible] as to whether he was [illegible] [illegible] supposedly in company with [illegible] screened from [illegible] the new Wolfsohn [illegible] his signature with [illegible] was the Wolfsohn insured by the New York Life Insurance Company [illegible] the photograph was taken [illegible] 19, 1899, in Chicago. The [illegible] witnessed by Attorney O'Bryan and H. Hesselberg, Wolfsohn's uncle. [illegible] was positive that [illegible] was his nephew [illegible] Wolfsohn [illegible] Wolfsohn.

But the Public Administrator at Los Angeles insisted upon seeing him, and the new Wolfsohn declined to meet her. He declared that they had never been childhood friends, that he had never written to her, that he was not engaged to her, that he had seen her only once or twice, and that he had never visited her rooms, and that [illegible] never died there.

Mrs. O'Neil went to the Van Nuys Hotel to insist upon an interview with the new Wolfsohn. She stood at the elevator when Wolfsohn and O'Bryan came down. The [illegible] her and [illegible] the elevator boy to go to a lower floor, where Wolfsohn stepped out and got away before Mrs. O'Neil [illegible] him. That night he took the train back to Chicago, according to O'Bryan. At any rate, he disappeared and has not been seen since.

The Public Administrator had been convinced by the new Wolfsohn that he [illegible] who had been insured. When the newcomer refused to meet Mrs. O'Neil, however, the official [illegible] stated that the [illegible] before he would pay the $[illegible] back to the company. But the insurance company [illegible] affidavits from [illegible] people identifying the new man as Wolfsohn, that the Administrator [illegible] company an indemnity bond securing him from [illegible] in case Wolfsohn's [illegible] after all, that their [illegible].

Then the Public Administrator, through his attorney, Leon Moss, and the insurance company took steps to get at the bottom of the mystery. Their [illegible] up to the present time has not [illegible]. Mrs. O'Neil produced letters [illegible] that Wolfsohn was her lover and expected even to marry her. The handwriting is a known [illegible] Wolfsohn's [illegible] the handwriting of the new Wolfsohn [illegible] far as [illegible] expert examination can determine. It [illegible] Wolfsohn [illegible] The [illegible] mystifying matters is [illegible] A. Wolfsohn, Arthur Wolfson, L. Reuter and Aaron Wolfsohn [illegible] in the opinion of experts, written by the same man.

The [illegible] the new Wolfsohn [illegible] the fog enveloping the case. [illegible] arrived at Los Angeles [illegible].

"After ceasing [illegible] I went into business in Chicago and at once hunted up the insurance people and put myself at their service. I offered to pay my own expenses and come out here to settle the matter, for I did not like the notoriety I was getting and wished to put a stop to the talk about my name. Mr. O'Bryan, the attorney for the company, [illegible] would not listen to this, but brought me here as his guest. I have seen S. A. D. Jones, the agent from whom I got the insurance, Dr. Karl Kurtz, who made the medical examination of me, and Mrs. Collins, the keeper of the lodging-house where the body of the suicide was found. The two first say positively that I am the man they insured, while Mrs. Collins said that she never met me before, and that I am not at all like the man who had a room at her place and who killed himself there.

"She describes him as being 35 years old, while I am out of [illegible]. He had black hair, and mine is [illegible] brown. We have seen Mr. Moss, the attorney for the Public Administrator, and he says he is thoroughly satisfied that I am the Aaron Wolfsohn insured under the policy.

"Mrs. Margaret O'Neil is mistaken when she says she knew me for many years, or that I borrowed $[illegible] from her. I met her for the first time in my life in a street car in this city a day or so before I took out the policy. We were company would pay $[illegible]. Then he said that the company's detectives in London were shadowing Wolfsohn, and that within two weeks Wolfsohn would be in Los Angeles. In exactly thirteen days from the time of making that statement O'Bryan and the reputed Wolfsohn appeared in Los Angeles. It is significant that Wolfsohn was O'Bryan's guest, and apparently under the latter's orders, to some extent.

O'Bryan positively refused to permit Mrs. O'Neil to see Wolfsohn. "She has made enough trouble," he said. "She can see me if she likes, but Wolfsohn is through with her." Mrs. O'Neil pleaded to see Wolfsohn. "Tie me hand and foot," she said, "if you think I mean to injure him. Keep me under guard, but just let me see him for five seconds, and I'll tell you whether or not he is Wolfsohn."

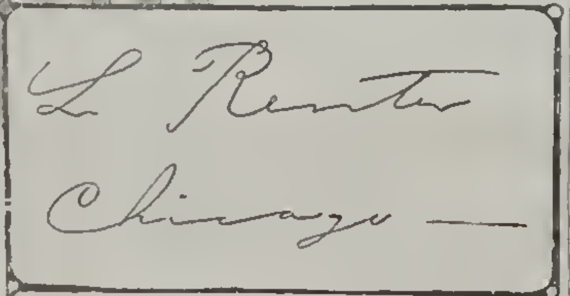
After Public Administrator Kellogg had been convinced that Wolfsohn was really alive, that mysterious person suddenly disappeared. O'Bryan gave out that he and Wolfsohn were going to San Diego. There is reason to believe that they did not go there. By 6 o'clock that night Wolfsohn was on his way East. There was some talk of attempting to hold him by legal process, long enough to investigate him further. O'Bryan, hearing of this, stormed and defied anybody to touch Wolfsohn. "The millions of the New York Life are behind that man," he shouted. "I dare anybody to lay a finger upon him. We've got more money than you, and we'll beat you."

While Wolfsohn was in Los Angeles he refused to be photographed, and refused the request of detectives and reporters for samples of his handwriting. He pointed to his signature on the hotel register, and said that was sufficient to prove his identity. Photographic copies of that signature, compared with Wolfsohn's acknowledged signature to notes in favor of the insurance company, show a similarity that is startling.

The amount returned by Public Administrator Kellogg to the insurance company was $[illegible]. Nearly $1500 was retained by him for alleged expenses. This fact, with the fact that O'Bryan was very free with his money while in Los Angeles, gave rise to certain theories to fit the strange case.

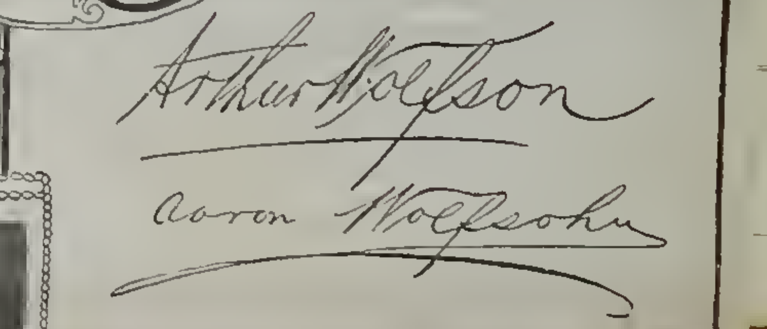
Investigation of Wolfsohn's former life revealed several facts. It was proved beyond question that he was an adventurer. He had traveled in Australia, South Africa, Europe and Russia. O'Bryan said Wolfsohn was educated in Russia. The man had several names. He was at outs with his father to such an extent that he spoke bitterly against the old man. The father, in

The Genuine Wolfsohn

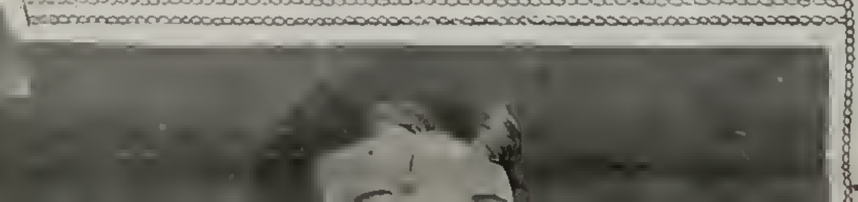


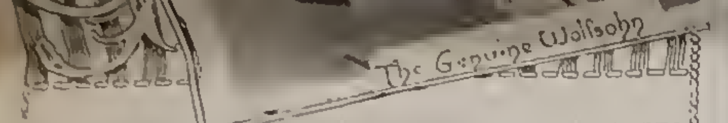
Genuine Signature of Reuter

The Alleged Wolfsohn

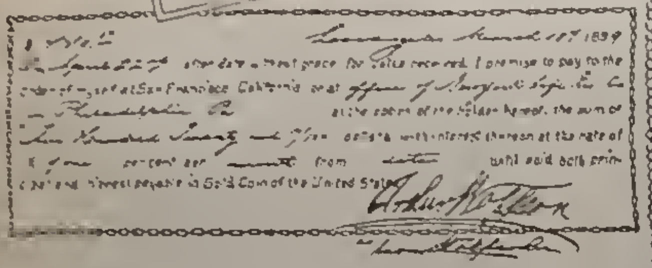


Admitted Signature of the Genuine Wolfsohn.





The Genuine Wolfsohn



Signature of the Genuine Wolfsohn.

deals, bestowing his attention upon a pretty woman ... and ... and other things incompatible with the knell and shroud. As Arthur Wolfsohn he was a prospective husband keeping up insurance for the benefit of his bride to be. As A. Wolfsohn he was purely a business man, writing letters that spoke of nothing but ... affairs.

This Wolfsohn in his time played many parts. He seems to have died in one—that of Reuter. When this ... duplicated Jekyll-Hyde became Reuter he ... melancholy as a sponge soaks up water. His letters were poetical, mystical, dreamy, and his thought ... He was half in love with death.

One peculiarity of the Wolfsohn case ... Mrs. Collins, also identified the body as that of Wolfsohn. No one had been aware that Wolfsohn was in Los Angeles. On a hotel register, however, was the name "L. Reuter, Chicago," and in the dead man's effects was a diary signed L. Reuter. In spite of this, Mrs. O'Neil insisted that the suicide was Wolfsohn, and letters were produced showing the startling similarity between Wolfsohn's handwriting and Reuter's. Letters written under the name of Reuter foreshadowed suicide, and it was argued that Wolfsohn, always masquerading under false names, took that means of concealing his identity.

The testimony of Mrs. O'Neil and others with documentary proofs of death satisfied the insurance company that Wolfsohn was dead, and it paid over $10,000 to the Public Administrator at Los Angeles, to be handed to Wolfsohn's heirs upon application.

A few days afterward Edward O'Bryan, attorney for the insurance company at Chicago, received a letter stating that Wolfsohn was not dead and that for the sum of $3500 Wolfsohn himself, in the flesh, would be produced. About the same time Sale & Sale, attorneys for Wolfsohn's father in St. Louis, Angeles had been instructed by his attorneys to demand further proof of the identity of the ... before admitting that he was Wolfsohn. As the insurance company could not recover its $10,000 without furnishing this proof, the next move was to take the alleged Wolfsohn to Los Angeles to prove ... that he was what he claimed to be. This was done.

O'Bryan and Wolfsohn arrived at Los Angeles December ... company's attorney, after ... and talking with the new man admitted that he was mistaken in thinking that Wolfsohn was dead. He said the new man was the identical person he had insured. Dr. Karl Kurtz also changed his views, and admitted that Wolfsohn was before him in the flesh. But Mrs. O'Neil, Wolfsohn's fiancee, and Mrs. Collins, the landlady, repudiated the new man and declared him an impostor. Mrs. O'Neil to Pittsburg and other places and finally ... an agent of the insurance company in Philadelphia, but the policy had not ... I was in a hurry to go to Europe on business, so I tore up the binding receipt I had and told them to keep their policy. I did not know I was insured, and about the first of May I sailed for Europe from Baltimore. A week ago to-night I returned and arrived quite friendly for a few days, and when I was about to start for the East she took a ticket, which she bought herself, and went as far as Kansas City on the same train. Her sister, Mrs. Barrows, saw us off at the depot. Since then I have never seen the woman and never intend to again. I am going from here to Europe again and intend to return to Chicago, where I shall be married and enter into business."

The Suicide

Admitted Signature of the Genuine Wolfsohn.

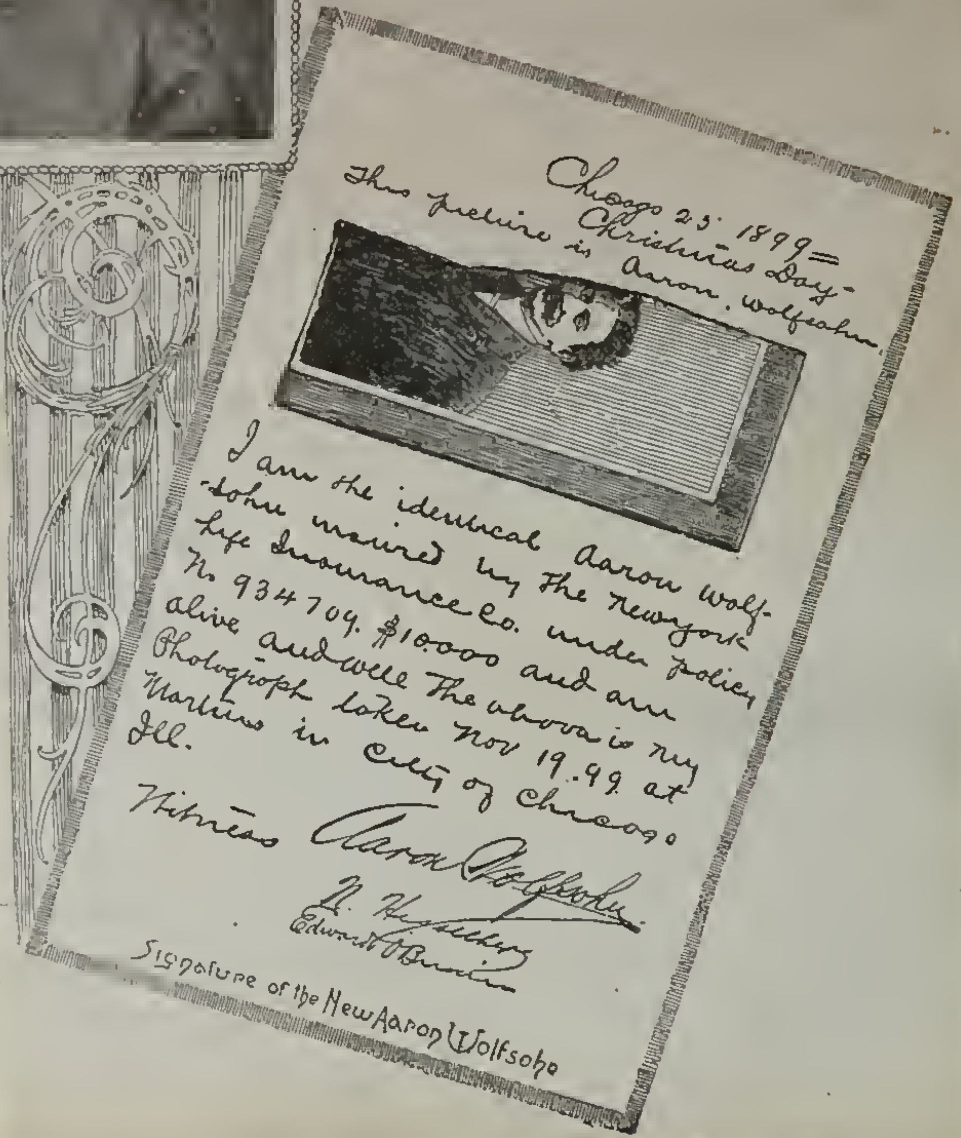
Edward O'Bryan, attorney for the New York Life in Chicago, told a story to a number of people which, patched together, makes a remarkable addition to the mystery. He said that he had been approached by an offer to produce Wolfsohn alive, providing the turn, took so little interest in his son that he declined to meet him, and showed no special desire to get the insurance money. He readily waived claim to it when affidavits were shown to him that his son was alive. The old man said he did not care whether the boy was alive or dead.

No post-mortem examination was made of the body of the suicide. Death by asphyxiation was assumed from the fact that the gas jet was wide open and the room full of gas. Doctors said the swollen lips were an indication of death by gas inhalation.

These are the facts regarding the strange case. Now, what is the solution of the mystery?



Signature of the New Aaron Wolfsohn

THE LIFE AND MARVELOUS WORK OF THE GREAT ARMLESS PAINTER

Created Masterpieces With His Feet Where Other Artists' Hands Have Made Dismal Failures.

LAST week the dispatches announced the death of Monsieur Charles Francois Felu, the armless Belgian artist. Had M. Felu been born with arms he would have been accounted a painter of note. Armless from birth, this wonderful man [illegible] painted and [illegible] with his feet.

[illegible] in California. It is a copy of Van Dyke's "Crucifixion" and is owned by Mrs. W. Cashman of Alameda.

This painting by M. Felu is the most valued of the many beautiful art treasures that decorate the Cashman home. It is so highly prized by Mrs. Cashman and her two daughters, Miss Madeline and gradually gaining such dexterity that [illegible] he overcame the mechanical difficulties and could give true expression to his artistic feelings.

"Charles Francois Felu.

M. Felu is acknowledged the greatest copyist of Van Dyke. Artists have smiled [illegible] to sit in the shadow of Van Dyke's masterpieces; they [illegible] worked early and late to catch a glimpse of the soul of the paintings and transfer it to their canvases. But one [illegible] caught that elusive "something" that is ingrained in all originals and [illegible] to be caught by the copyist. And that one was M. Charles Francois Felu, a painter who with his feet has succeeded where men [illegible] with arms and hands have failed.

M. Felu [illegible] Van Dyke [illegible] with the great master himself, for his work has so nearly caught the genius of the master that only a connoisseur of great artistic discernment can tell an original Van Dyke from one of Felu's copies.

This armless [illegible] succeeded [illegible] with [illegible] it is his Van Dyke copies that [illegible]

Miss Helen, because they met M. Felu while living in Antwerp, and like all others who have had the privilege of knowing him, they learned to admire the man even more than the painter.

It was Miss Helen Cashman who courteously admitted a Sunday Call reporter and artist. Miss Cashman kindly consented to allow the painting photographed, and while the artist was busy doing this she told many interesting recollections of M. Felu.

"I shall never forget the first time I saw M. Felu," said Miss Cashman. "I was a little girl at the time, probably [illegible] years old. Mamma and I were walking down one of the principal streets of Antwerp when a kindly-faced gentleman stopped us, spoke to mamma and smiled at me. With childish curiosity I could scarcely wait until he had passed to ask mamma why his sleeves were tucked in his coat in that peculiar limp manner. You can imagine how startled I was when told that the gentleman was armless.

"We were shortly to leave Antwerp and [illegible] his mother and father [illegible]

"M. Felu sat at his easel chatting and painting. The sandals were placed by his side, showing the feet in mitten socks. In order to enable him to raise his foot to the level of the canvas he leaned slightly his coattail pocket with the easy manner and slight flourish that gentlemen often use. Later he extracted something from his breast pocket with just as little difficulty. He managed his drinking glass that he was using feet instead of hands so naturally did he make them do duty for the missing members.

"There was nothing weird or gruesome about it. I have since seen so-called arm-

A Copy of Van Dyke's Famous Masterpiece, Painted by the Late prize this painting. I believe M. Felu was near 70 when he died, and I am sure all Belgium mourns his death. We ourselves were grieved and shocked at the news of his death. I am sure his dying hours must have been as calm and beautiful as his life."

The painting owned by Mrs. Cashman is a copy of Van Dyke's famous Crucifixion. When looking at the picture painted by this extraordinary man it is quite impossible to realize that it was done by foot and not by hand, so firm is the drawing and so well is the color laid.

Felu told an intimate friend that one of his earliest recollections was sitting in the garden while his mother taught him to grasp with his baby toes the bright flowers for which he cried. Very soon he learned to gather them for himself, and steadily pursuing this form of instruction his feet soon became flexible and useful. His parents were people of high birth and breeding, his father a retired French officer living at the time of his birth at Waermaede, near Courtrai, North Flanders. The armless child was at first a source of great grief, but his parents gradually realized that he had unusual talents that more than compensated his physical deficiencies.

He was given the best education and graduated in letters with high honors. Circumstances prevented M. Felu's taking an expected official position in Ghent. With joy he turned attention to art, which had always attracted him, beginning the study of painting at Antwerp when already 25 years old.

In all M. Felu has copied some hundred of the best masterpieces. Specimens of his work, originals and copies, are to be found all over the world. Her Majesty, the Queen Regent of Spain, bought one of M. Felu's pictures in 1886.

sent him the cross of a chevalier of the Order of Christ of Portugal.

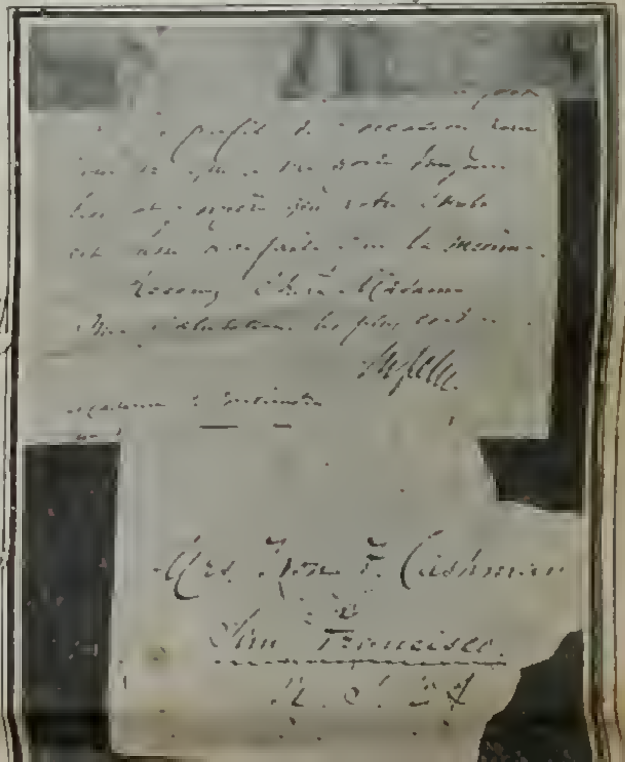
Those who knew him say that the deeds of M. Felu placed him beyond the pale of pity. He inspired those who came within the radius of his personality to better and bigger work. Besides his paintings, this wonderful man wrote a number of verses of literary merit and composed several comedies, one of which was played in Antwerp with great success.

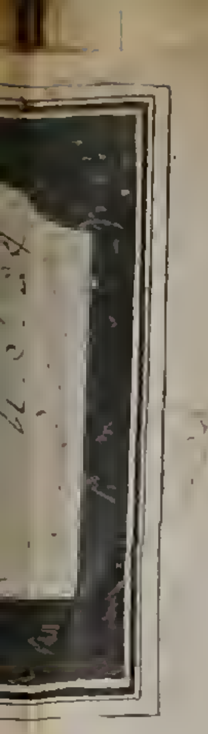
The world has lost Monsieur Charles Francois Felu and the half of the world that loves art and the half that applauds courage mourns. But the lesson which the fruitful life of this armless painter teaches will live on forever. Surely his life work is a proof of what can be done by a stout heart even under the most adverse circumstances.

Gunpowder explosions have one remarkable feature. The bodies of persons killed in such accidents are always found without clothing, but frequently one foot will have the shoe on. This is true of horses also. If one of the feet is in the air and another on the ground, the shoe will be found torn from the foot that was on the ground and not from the other.

When men are killed in powder explosions the foot that happened to be in the air when the shock came will be found wearing the shoe, while the other foot will be bare.

Engagement rings among the Egyptians were always of iron, to indicate the mutual sacrifices of liberty of the contracting parties. One of the very earliest adornments of betrothal rings was a lodestone, which symbolized the attractive force which drew a maid from her own family circle into that of her husband.





A Copy of Von Dyke's Famous Masterpiece, Painted by the Late Charles Francois Felu.

(Courtesy of Mrs W. Cashman, Alameda.)

Portion of Letter Written by the Armless Painter to Mrs. Cashman, Showing the Signature of Felu. The Address on the Envelope Illustrates How Well Felu Wrote English.

YDA ADDIS STORKE.

The Cross Examination of the Expert.

Herr Kytka Finds Counsel a Trying Interrogator but Evidently Being Bent on Truth and Nothing Extenuated, Bears the Brunt Passing Well.

MORNING.

The Storke trial is dragging its weary length, and how long it will last can at present not be conceived. The expert Herr Kytka continues to illustrate and enlighten the jury, and exemplars after exemplars are delineated. Handwriting is the expert's Fach fort or specialty, and being perfectly au fait he is nerved with self-reliance.

The jury, no matter how composed, is just as good as any other could be. The trial does not appeal to education, knowledge of law, etc., but requires the comprehension and judgment based entirely upon logic. Of all the trials we have attended, this one of Storke is the one we should consider ourself incapable of judging or passing an opinion on.

That Herr Kytka is perfectly at home in the premises no one can doubt, and interesting as the demonstrations may be, to us—being dull—the continued illustrations have no charm. One can not expect any refutation of the expert's testimony by a cross-examination, no matter how harrassing, be nor his instruments cannot lie.

To detect a forged name is easy compared with the many specimens and innumerable letters and figures as brought to the notice of the jury, and was upon the head that has a screw loose within, if upon such fabric depends a verdict. Evidently Herr Kytka can make a fac simile of any letter or figure, and should he imitate or forge our name we would not know the forged from the original. But as said, we are dull and can easily be imposed upon.

AFTERNOON.

On cross examination witness Herr Kytka says, the word "acknowledge" is an eleven times eleven enlargement.

Question. What do you desire to have established?

Answer. Claims to have established an enlightenment to the jury, but could not testify as to the identity of the writer.

Q. Again, what have you established?

A. It is my belief that all the exemplars were written by the same hand. Did not state there were three characteristics, but three different modes of writing. One is heavily shaded on the base line, one heavy scroll, and the other standard.

Q. Did not you in direct examination dwell upon shading and base?

Answered that it was necessary since the jury by observation were instructed.

Illustrates the letter A to show the stroke and position of the pen. Shows the jury an exemplar pertaining to the hold of the pen.

Can you point out a characteristic of a cramp or finger hand as to the capacity of the writer without resorting to your notes.

A. I can.

Attention is called to the letter as is illustrated, in Miss. Is asked to produce other specimens. Illustrates "yell" showing the writer was cautious.

A question in regard to the darkness of the ink is explained by crossing line or intersection.

The standard writing is discussed as one of the three groups and the witness is held to answer questions.

Is your opinion solely based upon the examination of the exemplars?

A. It is solely as a limit to duty.

RNIA, TUESDAY MORNING, JULY 11, 18

REPUTATIONS RUINED TO ORDER

That Pest of Creation the Anonymous Letter Writer Lurks Apparently in Our Midst.

DESPICABLE ACT REVEALED

San Quentin Yawns For the Perpetrator, Be They Discovered, and They May Be, For Murder Will Out.

Marysville has a rich ripe sensation at the present time. A sensation that before its tides have receded will leave high and dry upon the banks of public opinion reputations galore in feminine circles, and may even go farther and wind up in the courts if proceedings at present hinted of are brought.

On one side are arrayed a family whose feelings have been outraged by means of a series of anonymous letters, while on the other stands a wealthy woman born and raised in this community in which she has been noted for the prominent part she has taken in church matters and the many charitable acts that have characterized her life among the people of Marysville. It is entirely needless to say that in the accusations made which are to a certain extent said to have been supported by a report of the famous handwriting expert, Klevto, the citizens of this city believe that a grievous mistake has been made, and in view of the absolute denial of the lady in question will decline to pass judgment prejudicial to her upon other than direct evidence.

Early yesterday morning word reached this city that a sensation concerning Marysville people was to appear in the San Francisco Report, and it is needless to remark that many were the conjectures as to whom the expected sensation might concern. As the time for the arrival of the Knight's Landing train approached quite an assemblage gathered around the local news depot anxious to revel in "the latest."

By some unforeseen slip the desired papers failed to show up until a later train, and so for a time the sensation seekers were foiled. Those copies of the Report which arrive by mail were eagerly scanned by their owners, but when the contents of the alleged "scandal" had been digested, expressions of regret were heard on all sides that people of the standing of those discussed had become embroiled in such an affair.

The article in the Report, which plainly contains several inaccuracies, is as follows:

MARYSVILLE SOCIETY BADLY TORN UP

Over Anonymous Letters Received by Ex-Mayor Slattery's Daughters.

(From a Staff Correspondent.)

MARYSVILLE, July 10.—A sensation has just been brought to light here that promises to eclipse the notorious Yda Addis Storke case of Santa Barbara, which has created so much attention in this State.

At the time of the conviction of Mrs. Storke for sending anonymous letters to residents of Santa Barbara, several prominent and wealthy people of this city also received anonymous letters.

During the early part of the month of May, the Misses Kate and Annie Slattery, daughters of the late ex Mayor Slattery of this city, received anonymous letters at intervals of five days. The young ladies are prominent members of the Catholic church, and are affiliated with several societies of the local church on Seventh street in positions of trust.

The letters received by the young ladies charged them, it is alleged, with embezzlement of church moneys, immorality and with associating with disreputable characters. The communications were signed "A Friend of the Protest Church," and "A Non-Catholic."

Miss Annie Slattery worried over the anonymous communications, and was confined to her bed in the family home, 425 Seventh street, with nervous prostration.

About five letters were received altogether. The young ladies suspected a well-known and wealthy resident of the city, Mrs. C. Berg, 319 Seventh street, as the author of the letters.

Miss Kate Slattery consulted her attorney, W. H. Carlin, and upon his advice she procured copies of letters written and signed by Mrs. Berg. Counselor Carlin, armed with the communications, consulted M. E. Sanborn, attorney for Mrs. Berg, of Yuba City, and showed him the letters. Attorney Sanborn discussed the matter with his client, Mrs. Berg, and a few days later returned the letters to Mr. Carlin, stating that "there was absolutely nothing in it."

The letters were then sent to a hand-writing expert in San Francisco. On July 1 the expert filed the report of his findings with Miss Kate Slattery, stating that the anonymous letters had been written by the same hand which penned the two original exemplars bearing dates of April 30, 1899, and May 11, 1899, and signed "Mrs. C. Berg."

Attorney Carlin showed the expert's report to Mrs. Berg, but she strenuously denied knowing anything about the anonymous letters. She said she had placed the matter in the hands of her attorney.

Mrs. Berg is the widow of the late C. Baru, a wealthy hotel keeper and landowner of this county. New Western Hotel, a valuable building on Second street, is part of the estate. Mrs. Berg has also large holdings in Sutter county. The Slatterys are also very wealthy. The matter has been spoken of only in the family circles, and the utmost secrecy is observed. A great deal of excitement has been occasioned here by the news. Mrs. Berg is prominent in the Protestant Church.

Attorney Sanborn, who represents Mrs. Berg, was emphatic in his denial of the charges laid at her door, and believed, as will many others, that a great wrong has been done in connecting her name with the despicable action of indicting anonymous letters.

He was clearly of the belief that the article in the Report was of itself libelous, and that he should seriously consider the proposition of proceeding against that paper for giving publicity to a charge which, in his opinion, was clearly unfounded and most unjust to his client.

Attorney W. H. Carlin, who represents the Slatterys, stated that his clients had been pestered with anonymous letters, that their suspicions had fallen

MORNING.

The Starke trial is dragging its weary length, and how long it will last can at present not be conceived. The expert Herr Kytka continues to illustrate and enlighten the jury, and exemplars after exemplars are delineated. Handwriting is the expert's forte fort or specialty, and being perfectly au fait he is correct with self-reliance.

The jury, no matter how composed, is just as good as any other could be. The trial does not appeal to education, knowledge of law, etc., but requires the comprehension and judgment based entirely upon logic. Of all the trials we have attended, this one of Starke is the one we should consider ourself incapable of judging or passing an opinion on.

That Herr Kytka is perfectly at home in the premises no one can doubt, and interesting as the demonstrations may be, to us—being dull—the continued illustrations have no charm. One can not expect any refutation of the expert's testimony by a cross-examination, no matter how harassing, be not his instruments cannot lie.

To detect a forged name is easy compared with the many specimens and innumerable letters and figures as brought to the notice of the jury, and woe upon the head that has a screw loose within, if upon such fabric depends a verdict. Evidently Herr Kytka can make a fac simile of any letter or figure, and should he imitate or forge our name we would not know the forged from the original. But as said, we are dull and can easily be imposed upon.

AFTERNOON.

On cross examination witness Herr Kytka says, the word "acknowledge" is an eleven times eleven enlargement.

Question. What do you desire to have established?

Answer. Claims to have established an enlightenment to the jury, but could not testify as to the identity of the writer.

Q. Again, what have you established?

A. It is my belief that all the exemplars were written by the same hand. Did not state there were three characteristics, but three different modes of writing. One is heavily shaded on the base line, one heavy scroll, and the other standard.

Q. Did not you in direct examination dwell upon shading and base?

Answered that it was necessary since the jury by observation were instructed.

Illustrates the letter A to show the stroke and position of the pen. Shows the jury an exemplar pertaining to the hold of the pen.

Can you point out a characteristic of a cramp or finger hand as to the capacity of the writer without resorting to your notes.

A. I can.

Attention is called to the letter s as is illustrated, in Miss. Is asked to produce other specimens. Illustrates "yell" showing the writer was cautious.

A question in regard to the darkness of the ink is explained by crossing line or intersection.

The standard writing is discussed as one of the three groups and the witness is held to answer questions.

Is your opinion solely based upon the examination of the exemplars?

A. It is solely as a limit to duty.

Answers questions by metaphor as the growth of boys and girls varies and changes characteristics.

The writings as per the three groups does not indicate a superiority being but mechanical.

The witness holds that all writers show in the art an individual characteristic.

That Pest of Creation the Anonymous Letter Writer Lurks Apparently in Our Midst.

DESPICABLE ACT REVEALED

San Quentin Yawns For the Perpetrator, Be They Discovered, and They May Be, For Murder Will Out.

Marysville has a rich ripe sensation at the present time. A sensation that before its tides have receded will leave high and dry upon the banks of public opinion reputations galore in feminine circles, and may even go farther and wind up in the courts if proceedings at present hinted of are brought.

On one side are arrayed a family whose feelings have been outraged by means of a series of anonymous letters, while on the other stands a wealthy woman born and raised in this community in which she has been noted for the prominent part she has taken in church matters and the many charitable acts that have characterized her life among the people of Marysville. It is entirely needless to say that in the accusations made which are in a certain extent said to have been supported by a report of the famous handwriting expert, Khyte, the citizens of this city believe that a grievous mistake has been made, and in view of the absolute denial of the lady in question will decline to pass judgment prejudicial to her upon other than direct evidence.

Early yesterday morning word reached this city that a sensation concerning Marysville people was to appear in the San Francisco Report, and it is needless to remark that many were the conjectures as to whom the expected sensation might concern. As the time for the arrival of the Knight's Landing train approached quite an assemblage gathered around the local news depot anxious to revel in "the latest."

By some unforeseen slip the desired papers failed to show up until a later train, and so for a time the sensation seekers were foiled. Those copies of the Report which arrive by mail were eagerly scanned by their owners, but when the contents of the alleged "scandal" had been digested, expressions of regret were heard on all sides that people of the standing of those discussed had become embroiled in such an affair.

The article in the Report, which plainly contains several inaccuracies, is as follows:

MARYSVILLE SOCIETY BADLY TORN UP

Over Anonymous Letters Received by Ex-Mayor Slattery's Daughters.

(From a Staff Correspondent.)

MARYSVILLE, July 10.—A sensation has just been brought to light here that promises to eclipse the notorious Yda Addis Starke case of Santa Barbara, which has created so much attention in this State.

At the time of the conviction of Mrs. Starke for sending anonymous letters to residents of Santa Barbara, several prominent and wealthy people of this city also received anonymous letters.

During the early part of the month of May, the Misses Kate and Annie Slattery, daughters of the late ex Mayor Slattery of this city, received anonymous letters at intervals of five days. The young ladies are prominent members of the Catholic church, and are affiliated with several societies of the local church on Seventh street in positions of trust.

The letters received by the young ladies charged them, it is alleged, with embezzlement of church moneys, immorality and with associating with disreputable characters. The communications were signed "A Friend of the Protest Church," and "A Non-Catholic."

Miss Annie Slattery worried over the anonymous communications, and was confined to her bed in the family home, 125 Seventh street, with nervous prostration.

About five letters were received altogether. The young ladies suspected a well-known and wealthy resident of the city, Mrs. C. Berg, 319 Seventh street, as the author of the letters.

Miss Kate Slattery consulted her attorney, W. H. Carlin, and upon his advice she procured copies of letters written and signed by Mrs. Berg. Counselor Carlin, armed with the communications, consulted M. E. Sanborn, attorney for Mrs. Berg, at Yuba City, and showed him the letters. Attorney Sanborn discussed the matter with his client, Mrs. Berg, and a few days later returned the letters to Mr. Carlin, stating that "there was absolutely nothing in it."

The letters were then sent to a handwriting expert in San Francisco. On July 1 the expert filed the report of his findings with Miss Kate Slattery, stating that the anonymous letters had been written by the same hand which penned the two original exemplars bearing dates of April 30, 1899, and May 11, 1899, and signed "Mrs. C. Berg."

Attorney Carlin showed the expert's report to Mrs. Berg, but she strenuously denied knowing anything about the anonymous letters. She said she had placed the matter in the hands of her attorney.

Mrs. Berg is the widow of the late C. Berg, a wealthy hotel-keeper and land-owner of this county. New Western Hotel, a valuable building on Second street, is part of the estate. Mrs. Berg has also large holdings in Sutter county. The Slatterys are also very wealthy. The matter has been spoken of only in the family circles, and the utmost secrecy is observed. A great deal of excitement has been occasioned here by the news. Mrs. Berg is prominent in the Protestant Church.

Attorney Sanborn, who represents Mrs. Berg, was emphatic in his denial of the charges laid at her door, and believed, as will many others, that a great wrong has been done in connecting her name with the despicable action of indicting anonymous letters.

He was clearly of the belief that the article in the Report was of itself libelous, and that he should seriously consider the proposition of proceeding against that paper for giving publicity to a charge which, in his opinion, was clearly unfounded and most unjust to his client.

Attorney W. H. Carlin, who represents the Slatterys, stated that his clients had been pestered with anonymous letters, that their suspicions had fallen as the Report's article would indicate, that they had secured and submitted to Expert Khyte, without his knowledge at the time however, two original letters said to have been written by Mrs. Berg to parties in San Francisco together with the anonymous epistles and that Khyte had reported that the person who had written one had undoubtedly penned the other. He himself had no knowledge that the original letters alleged to have been written by Mrs. Berg and which had been submitted to Khyte for comparison with the anonymous missives, were genuine and in her handwriting, they were at present in his clients' possession and would of course stand for what they were worth. Mr. Carlin stated that in the absence of direct evidence in the matter that he should decline to believe Mrs. Berg had anything to do with the outrageous anonymous letters which have brought so much distress to the Slattery family. Apparently the end is not yet.

Insists That His Original Statement Concerning the Authorship of the Letters Was Correct.

LAWYERS UNCOMMUNICATIVE.

No Intimation Has Been Given as to Whether or Not Any Defence Other Than Simple Denial Will Be Made.

The principal topic of conversation, wherever two or three people are seen bunched, continues to be the Slattery-Berg imbroglio. The public generally have been expecting to hear ere this that the province of the law should have been invoked and the machinery put in motion that should decide which it is that has been wronged in the premises—the accused or the accusers. If Attorney Sanborn contemplates any action for the defamation of the character of his client he is preserving a Sphinx like silence regarding his intentions. On the other side Attorney Carlin is free in his conversation concerning the case, but no intimation can be gained from him as to whether or not his people purpose swearing to a complaint on the original charge.

The San Francisco Report of last evening insists that arrests will shortly follow, and also contains another interview with Expert Khytka, in which he contends that his original judgment in the premises was correct beyond peradventure. The Report's article was as follows:

PROF. KYTKA SAYS MRS. BERG DID IT.

Handwriting Expert Indignant at the Imputation That Has Been Cast Upon Him.

The first arrests in the Slattery-Berg scandal of Marysville will probably be made in a few days, and every movement or action is being watched with intense interest by residents of Sutter and Yuba counties.

Attorney Carlin's statement that he did not know whether not Handwriting Expert Kytka has seen the original admitted exemplars is given little credence.

Theodore Kytka, the expert, on Thursday morning said to a Report representative: "I saw the telegrams in the Report on the Marysville scandal, but I am not yet privileged to speak. Now since Attorney Carlin has given out my report for publication, I do not care to draw the detail studies of my work, but I would like to state that I have been very careful in my examinations, and I find that the writing ought to be easily recognized by any intelligent person. There is hardly any attempt to disguise the handwriting. The examination was certainly the easiest one that I have ever had in all my experience. All my exemplars, disputed or admitted, are stamped with my dies, and these I have made myself, and they cannot be imitated. I have no fear in this regard. Mrs. Berg's alleged handwriting was not the only style that I examined. A bunch of communications written by various suspected persons were sent to me, and I picked out the letters purporting to have been written and bearing the name of Mrs. Berg, without any trouble. So plain and so identical were the anonymous letters, and three communications that it did not require an expert to connect them.

"The detailed report that I rendered, and which was published in the Report is correct in every detail. Only one word was not exactly right. 'Here' was published instead of 'hereby,' as in the original."

Speaking of the notorious [illegible] case, Mr. Kytka said: "My experience in this line of work have taught me that a young woman or a girl will write one anonymous letter; that is, a saucy impertinent note to another person, and then send no further communications.

"When a woman attains the age of 40 years or over, and starts to write anonymous letters, she does not cease writing after sending the first one. She persistently sends these anonymous communications until such time as she is apprehended."

Mrs. Berg is, apparently from her appearance, over 40 years of age.

Mr. Kytka's studio has been furnished with scientific appliances at a cost of nearly $50,000, and judging by the diligent and careful manner in which he prosecutes his work, one may believe that he is not guilty of making errors in his findings.

PRISONERS ESCAPE ON A MERE TECHNICALITY

Mrs. Dora Fuhrig, Samuel Newman and Stephen Vaccari Dismissed by Judge Cook.

By virtue of a decision rendered by the Supreme Court, in which it is held that "a dying declaration is not admissible in evidence in a criminal prosecution unless the circumstances show it to have been made under the belief of impending death," Mrs. Dora Fuhrig, a notorious midwife, under conviction on a charge of murder in the second degree, and Samuel Newman and Stephen Vaccari, under indictment for the murder of [illegible] Tyson, were dismissed from custody by Judge Cook yesterday. The dismissal of the prisoners was the result of a motion made by Assistant District Attorney Hosmer, who stated that it was impossible to secure a conviction of the defendants under the recent Supreme Court decision in the case of Mrs. Dora Fuhrig, in which the judgment was reversed on the grounds [illegible].

Mrs. Fuhrig was convicted of the murder of Annie W. Walmsley on December 22, 189[illegible]. The deceased made a dying declaration in which she said that Mrs. Fuhrig caused her death, but as the declaration was written by [illegible] and only subscribed to by the deceased, when the circumstances proved was not in immediate fear of death, the Supreme Court held that it was insufficient upon which to base a verdict of guilty and reversed the judgment of the lower court. As the prosecution depended solely on the dying statement of [illegible] Tyson in the cases against Newman and Vaccari the court granted the motion to dismiss and the three defendants are now at liberty.

Although Mrs. Fuhrig has escaped punishment on what may be termed a "technicality," her conviction has to a certain extent frightened those engaged in a similar criminal occupation, and for a time at least they will refrain from practicing their chosen vocation.

EXPERT KYTKA REPORTS

Claims That the Exemplars and Anonymous Letters Were Written By the Same Hand.

THE PUBLIC IS SKEPTICAL

And They Are Slow to Believe the Charges Made Unless Backed Up By Direct Evidence--- A Hot Time Coming.

The matter of the anonymous letters recently received by the Slattery family in this city, together with many speculations as to whom their author may have been, was the principal topic of conversation all over town Tuesday. While everyone seemed unanimous on the proposition that the person who indicted and mailed the missives complained of should be ferreted out and punished, many there were who bitterly resented the accusations laid at the door of Mrs. Carlin Berg by the Slatterys and many others who were positive that Expert Kytka has also erred in his deductions. There can be no manner of doubt but the accusations made constitute a serious arraignment of the character of a prominent person, made by another equally prominent family, and it is hardly within the bounds of reason that the charges made will be allowed to stand unresented. To endeavor to [illegible] the character of a family by the means of anonymous letters is a serious matter, both from a moral as well as from a legal standpoint. To accuse a responsible person of such a crime is a matter no less serious [illegible] the accusation founded on anything short of indisputable facts. While the [illegible] of the present entanglement will be deplored by many the fact still remains that a grievous wrong has been committed and a serious charge therefor has been laid at the door of a model citizen. No simple unsupported affirmation will suffice to [illegible] upon an innocent person nor is it at all likely that her friends and relatives will consent to her assuming an attitude of silence under wrong. Up to the present time the attorneys on either side have failed to [illegible] what move they propose to make but certain it is that [illegible] and before the atmosphere clears up someone will be pretty well [illegible] in the meshes of the law.

The San Francisco Report of last evening contains another article concerning the exciting [illegible] in the course of which Expert Kytka's report of the evidence submitted to him is set out in full. The article is as follows:

A MAN IS A[illegible] THE BOTTOM OF IT.

Handwriting Expert Kytka Says Mrs. Berg Wrote the Marysville Letters.

From a Staff Correspondent.

MARYSVILLE, July 11.—The [illegible] publication of an article in the Report on Monday [illegible] the anonymous letters received during the [illegible] by the Misses Slattery, and the subsequent indirect [illegible] Mrs. [illegible] Berg, a wealthy resident of this district, of being the author, [illegible].

Attorney Carlin, who [illegible] by the Misses Slattery to represent them in the matter, was seen at his office, at Second and D streets, and [illegible]:

"If Mrs. Berg is the author of those anonymous letters it will be a [illegible]. The evidence will have to be conclusive [illegible] that she is guilty. I shall make a [illegible] investigation before being satisfied of her guilt. She is a woman of standing, whose reputation is good. Before any overt charge shall be made [illegible] her of being the author of the letters, a complete and thorough investigation will be made to the end that no injury should be done an innocent person. For myself, I have not yet arrived at the conclusion that she is guilty. The subject matter of the communications [illegible] the range of possibilities. The person who wrote these letters certainly has a diseased mind.

"There is no possible reason why she should have written them. I understand, however, that Mrs. Berg and the Misses Slattery had had a misunderstanding which resulted in a difficulty."

"Have you seen the expert's report?" was asked.

"Oh, yes," he [illegible], "I have it right here. When I received it I showed it to Mrs. Berg, and she stated that it was erroneous, and registered a strenuous denial of knowing anything regarding the anonymous letters whatever."

"Do you not think that this report is damaging in the extreme?" was interrogated.

"I certainly believe it is," he said, "because Mr. Kytka is an expert of handwriting who has a reputation, and is known to understand his business. I saw the [illegible] plate, which were to be sent to the expert for comparison with the anonymous letters, and must admit that there was great similarity in the writing. These [illegible] letters, to which I [illegible] were written by Mrs. Berg, but there is a possibility that the expert did not receive the identical exemplars that I saw. When they are returned to me I will be able to speak more fully in this matter. Mrs. Berg is not such an adept at handwriting that she can disguise it very much. Yes, I had a suspicion that she wrote the anonymous letters, otherwise I would not have laid the matter before her attorney originally. This is a serious matter, and [illegible] can be had criminally as well as civilly, [illegible] of the United States post [illegible]. My clients are satisfied that Mrs. Berg is the author of the letters, but I will not permit them to speak as yet."

The report of Handwriting Expert Theodore Kytka, now in the hands of Attorney Carlin, reads:

"SAN FRANCISCO, July 1, 1899.

"MISS KATE SLATTERY, Marysville, Cal.

"Dear Madame: I have carefully examined the handwriting which purports to be written and signed by Mrs. [illegible] Berg, dated April 30, 1899, and also May 11, 1899, and compared these letters with the five anonymous letters addressed to you and your sister, including the envelopes, and I have to report to you that the five anonymous letters and envelopes and [illegible] were written by the same hand. I have marked with my seal all admitted and anonymous letters, including envelopes, for further identification. I find that the writing in the anonymous letters and also on the envelopes is a very clumsy attempt to disguise the characteristic handwriting of the writer. Very respectfully,

"THEODORE KYTKA, Handwriting Expert."

The statement that Mrs. Berg is a Protestant is a mistake. Both the Slatterys and Mrs. Berg are Catholics. Mrs. Berg's pew in the church is directly behind that of the Misses Slattery. [illegible] a male character is the principal [illegible] in the [illegible], and that the [illegible] of the best families in this section.

All three parties are [illegible] of the best families in this section. Mrs. Berg is prominently interested in a number of charitable organizations.

THE MYSTERIOUS "FRANK."

Who Was the Prominent Citizen Mixed Up in the Slattery-Berg Embroglio?

BOTH SIDES ARE RETICENT

Whether or Not Legal Proceedings Will Ensue Is Still a Matter of Speculation.

Quite a number of chasers after rare and racy happenings were severely disappointed on the arrival of the Knights' Landing train last evening to find that the Evening S. F. Report which it had been rumored would present the text of one or more of the anonymous letters which have done so much to disrupt the peace of mind of the Slattery household, had come to hand containing only an account of the meanderings of the reporter of that paper while in Marysville last Sunday bent on securing interviews with the parties in interest.

After setting forth the ramifications of the reporter in his endeavor to locate Miss Kate Slattery, whom he sought to interview, after finally succeeding in bringing up with her the following conversation ensued, at the conclusion of which a visit was paid to the "Berg" residence, where little if any further information other than a complete denial at the hands of Mrs. Carrie Berg was obtained. The result of the interviews with the Slattery and Berg people, according to the Report, were as follows:

"I informed her of my mission, but she denied having any knowledge of the affair.

"Have you read the expert's report?"

"No, I must say that I have not," was the reply.

A copy of the report was produced, and I was about to read it when Miss Slattery said:

"I will not speak on this matter. You will please see my attorney, Mr. Carlin. The entire affair may result in libel suits all around."

Further than this she would say nothing. Shortly before noon I was informed that Attorney Carlin had also gone into the country with his team. Failing to get the desired information from Miss Slattery, I called upon Mrs. Berg in her beautiful home on Fifth street, early Monday. She was very nervous and wrought up over the affair. At first she declined to be interviewed, but finally said:

"I do not know why I should be charged in this manner. I deny writing the letters, and know absolutely nothing about them. I am well known in this county, and have been President for several terms of the Relief Society of this city. I have also done much for charity. I shall make a proper defense when the time comes. I cannot understand the idea of the whole affair. I shall not make any further statements, but will refer you to my attorney, Mr. Sanborn, in Yuba City. The matter is now in his hands. You will please speak low. I do not desire that my son or any one else in the house shall hear of this matter."

In the room with Mrs. Berg during the conversation was her daughter, who is the only other member of the family who was acquainted with the social scandal.

It has been learned that the man in the case is a prominent citizen here, and is known by the name "Frank." Miss Slattery recently showed the anonymous letters to a friend, and the latter, after perusing them, said, "Why, a man figures prominently in this matter." Miss Slattery is alleged to have answered: "Well, Mrs. Berg can have him."

Throughout the anonymous letters this particular individual was mentioned sometimes as "your friend," "you know who I mean," etc.

Attorney Carlin is now working on the case more diligently than ever. It is stated that warrants will be procured in a few days. The matter will probably also be brought to the attention of the postoffice inspectors."

The Appeal has as yet been unable to ascertain whether or not any suits will be brought as a result of the last few days developments. Attorney Sanborn is uncommunicative as to the steps his client propose taking if any while Attorney Carlin feels that under the present status of affairs the next move is hardly his, anyway not for the present.

The character of the anonymous letters which are in the possession of the Slattery's, the directness of their charges as concerns the authorship of the same, the report of the handwriting expert "Kytka," the prominence and excellent reputation of the accused, are all elements which have combined to stir up a most intense feeling among the friends of both parties, and while it is barely possible that the incident may be allowed to die out after the flare-up which has been precipitated, it is hardly conceivable to the ordinary mind that such an ending will ensue, at least not until there has been a complete vindication of the character of the accused.

Peter Jurgans was found guilty of forgery by a jury in Judge Lawlor's court. His trial occupied several days. He forged the name of his brother on the latter's bank book, and drew the deposit of over $600.

TEARS FOR HIS WOUNDED HONOR

Charles S. Wheeler, a Leader of the California Bar, Succumbs to His Emotions in Open Court While Defending Himself on Charges of Unprofessional Conduct.

W. S. Goodfellow, Who Accused His Brother Attorney, Informed by the Judge That if His Charge Be True He Himself Had Overstepped the Bounds of Etiquette.

A MOST extraordinary scene was enacted in the Superior Court of Alameda county yesterday, when Attorney Charles S. Wheeler, one of the most prominent members of the California bar, wept while defending his honor against aspersions that had been cast by W. S. Goodfellow, himself a lawyer of the best standing. During the proceedings Mr. Wheeler made charges against Mr. Goodfellow almost identical with those that had been preferred against himself.

OAKLAND, March 22.—Attorney Charles S. Wheeler, who, with Attorneys Earl, Bishop, Treat and Rix, has been accused of unprofessional conduct in the Thomas Varney suit by Attorney Goodfellow, during his argument to-day before Judges Ellsworth and Ogden, was so overcome by the insinuations as to his action that he broke down. His words seemed to choke him and at one time tears streamed down his cheeks.

The court, seeing his condition, silently waited for him to regain his composure that he might continue his argument in defense of his conduct as an attorney and a gentleman, as well as that of his associates at the bar. Mr. Wheeler said:

"During my years of practice, this is the first time anything detrimental has been said concerning me. I feel it deeply. When this question is settled, I will move the court to disbar Attorney Goodfellow, my accuser, from acting in either the case of Trustees Pitcher and Taylor against Trustee Thomas H. B. Varney for the recovery of $23,000, or in the suit of the heirs against these men as trustees."

From the records in the case it appears that Mr. Goodfellow represents not only all of the trustees as trustees, but that he has also signed himself as attorney of record for Trustee Thomas H. B. Varney individually. This being the case, Mr. Goodfellow is said to occupy the same status in regard to the case that he has been endeavoring to show the attorneys for plaintiffs hold. When these disclosures were made, Mr. Goodfellow offered to withdraw from the case, or was willing that all of the attorneys on both sides be disqualified. The court, however, decided to take no action until all the testimony is presented.

Addressing Mr. Goodfellow, Mr. Wheeler said.

"I understand that you declined to act as attorney in the action of the two trustees to recover $23,000 from Thomas H. B. Varney because you considered that you were disqualified to act as such. Is that so?"

"Yes, that is the stand I took," replied Goodfellow. "I would not take any action in which any of the trustees would be against the others. I do not think it would be proper for me to do so. As to whether or not I would be disqualified, that is for the court to decide. I do not think that it would be right to take a case where there would be such a clash of interests."

Mr. Wheeler then called attention to a part of the transcript of the proceedings yesterday wherein it was stated that the action brought by Hall and Earl on behalf of two of the Trustees against T. H. B. Varney was in part the same as the present action, in as much as the collection of the $23,000 was still involved. Mr. Wheeler contends that if Mr. Goodfellow was disqualified in the former case, he should be disqualified in the present one. In response Mr. Goodfellow stated that he appeared as a representative of all the trustees and that Thomas H. B. Varney was represented individually by Attorney Garret McEnerney. As a trustee he was, of course, represented by Mr. Goodfellow.

"Then I take it," said Judge Ogden, "that if Bishop and Wheeler are disqualified in this case, you would also be disqualified. In the former case you represented the trustees and the estate. In the present action you are appearing against the heirs and beneficiaries. If your contention against Bishop and Wheeler is good, I do not see why it would not also apply to you."

"If the court holds to that view, I am willing to withdraw from the case," said Mr. Goodfellow. "This is not a pleasant task for me. It never occurred to me that I was disqualified, but if the court takes that stand I will submit. I will be satisfied if all of the attorneys be disqualified."

Attorney Wheeler said on the witness stand that he considered that the proceedings of the case before Judge Ellsworth were a matter of public record. "I do not think that Mr. Goodfellow violated any confidence in giving the transcript of those proceedings to Hall and Earl," he said. "All the facts were brought out in open court, and there can be no secrecy."

The matter of Attorney Goodfellow's standing in the case was again taken up when he questioned Thomas H. B. Varney as to his willingness to have him appear as his attorney in the case. Mr. Wheeler offered an objection and the answer of the witness was referred to. Mr. Goodfellow's name appeared in the answer as attorney for the three trustees collectively, and as attorney for Thomas H. B. Varney individually. When this was clearly shown, Mr. Goodfellow said that he was willing for Mr. McEnerney to represent him.

V. W. Varney, one of the plaintiffs in the action, testified that he had given the case regarding the distribution of the estate into the hands of Attorney Treat. No one had solicited the case from him and he had not consulted with Bishop and Wheeler or ex-Senator Earl before giving the case to Treat. During his argument, Mr. Wheeler said:

"In the case cited by Mr. Goodfellow in his motion to prevent me or my associates from acting in this case there is no analogy between that and this. If such were the case there would be but one thing to do; but one duty devolving upon counsel, and that is to decline to act. I have sufficient regard for my profession not to stand in the way. Have we here an attorney for one side who went to the other side or divulged privileged communications or once antagonistic in one litigation to the case at present before the bar? A. J. Treat was approached by the beneficiaries under the will to have the trust wound up. His employment was a special one. He later consulted with Bishop and Wheeler concerning certain matters. Our books show no such case as the Varney estate. After contracts were made with Mr. Treat, Mr. Earl was called upon to ratify Mr. Wheeler's action. In 1895 the Judges of this court entered a decree that suit be brought by the two trustees against the third trustee. Pursuant to the order, Hall and Earl were employed on the case where facts are disputed. The employment of Judge Hall was at the court's suggestion. It was in the interest of the trust estate that the suit was brought. There is absolutely no word of evidence to sustain Mr. Goodfellow's allegations. Instead they are absolutely contradicted. The imputations have not as yet been withdrawn, although he admits that this case first came to Mr. Treat. He has not yet made an apology, which is due us."

"Mr. Goodfellow's idea was that I had given confidential communications," said Mr. Earl.

"I did so infer," replied Goodfellow.

"You will refrain from personalities," said the court.

"If there was one scintilla of evidence," continued Wheeler, "that the papers were placed in the hands of Mr. Earl or anyone who drummed up this litigation, and this suit came from those conditions, I would not be here to defend my position. No gentleman of the California bar, even Mr. Goodfellow himself, would be readier to leave the case, did such conditions exist, than would I. Mr. Goodfellow is acting in a dual capacity. I will move that he be debarred from acting in this case."

The arguments will be continued to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

ANONYMOUS LETTER SCANDAL.

Mrs. Mansfield Will Be Placed on Trial at Hollister To-Day.

HOLLISTER, March 19.—To-morrow, in the Superior Court of this county, commences the trial of Mrs. Minnie Mansfield, charged with having criminally libeled Mrs. Ed Conrad by means of scurrilous anonymous letters. No trial here in years has excited more interest owing to the prominence of the parties involved, and the further fact that a number of the leading women of this town are summoned as witnesses for the prosecution. The case will be bitterly fought, and some of the most noted experts on writing in the State have been engaged. The people will be represented by District Attorney John L. Hudner.

ACCUSEO OF WRITING LIBELOUS LETTERS.

The Trial of Mrs. Mansfield, a Well-Known Woman of Hollister, Now Under Way.

HOLLISTER, March 20.—The trial of Mrs. B. B. Mansfield, under indictment for criminal libel, began this morning in the Superior Court. Three indictments were found against Mrs. Mansfield, based on anonymous letters reflecting on the character of Mrs. E. E. Conrad. The authorship of these letters is attributed to Mrs. Mansfield, and they speak of Mrs. Conrad as an inmate of a disreputable house before her marriage. Mrs. Mansfield is the wife of a well-to-do poultry farmer in this neighborhood and the Conrads are likewise in easy circumstances. The case has aroused a great deal of local feeling and partisanship.

The day was consumed in getting part of the jury, and at the time of adjournment ten talesmen had been examined and passed, but none are as yet accepted. S. G. Tompkins of San Jose and A. M. Cunningham are defending Mrs. Mansfield and District Attorney Hudner is prosecuting.

Intimation That Mrs. Mansfield of Hollister Was the Cause of a Man's Suicide a Few Years Ago.

Is Charged Now With Sending Anonymous Letters Defaming Character of Mrs. Conrad, a Former Friend.

[Special Dispatch to "The Examiner."]
[Special Dispatch to "The Examiner."]

HOLLISTER, March 21.—The indictment of Mrs. Mansfield, now on trial, is not the first serious trouble due to anonymous letters in this neighborhood and District Attorney Hudner in his opening statement to the jury this afternoon intimated that he would endeavor to connect the circumstance leading up to a tragedy of a few years ago with the present charge.

In 1894 Antone Schill, of this place, received an anonymous letter making vile statements about himself, his wife and daughters. At that time there was a standing quarrel between the Schill children and those of E. E. Conrad, concerning the pilfering of school lunches. On receipt of the anonymous letter Schill suspected Conrad as the writer or instigator. He took his gun and shot at Conrad, missing him, but wounding another person, by whom he was sued for damages. Schill grew so despondent over the affair that he killed himself as the easiest way out of the trouble.

It was this tragedy to which the District Attorney alluded when he said he would seek by comparison of handwriting to connect Mrs. Mansfield with the writing of a former anonymous letter. Mr. Hudner undertook to prove malice and vindictive frame of mind in the defendant against Mrs. Conrad. He admitted that this malice is unaccountable, but said he could prove its existence, although Mrs. Mansfield pretended friendship for Mrs. Conrad. Mrs. Mansfield, he said, is an educated woman, but the letter neither in the present nor in the former case is such as an educated woman would write unless disguise were intended. The spelling and language are both equally vile.

The case will turn largely on comparisons of handwriting and expert testimony, but there are a great many independent facts to be offered in evidence by way of corroboration.

The taking of testimony will begin to-morrow.

MANSFIELD TRIAL BEGINS.

Jury Secured and Attorney Hudner Makes His Opening Statement.

Special Dispatch to The Call.

HOLLISTER, March 21.—District Attorney Hudner made the opening statement in the Mansfield case. He said in brief that while considerable time would be consumed in the presentation of the case the ultimate facts will be simple. That the defendant wrote the scurrilous letter and more of similar import would be proven by experts skilled in the art of discovering the authors of anonymous letters. That about four years ago Mrs. Mansfield wrote a letter to a man already inflamed with passion against the Conrad family designed to make him believe they were the authors thereof and that he then and there attempted violence upon the Conrads. That malice unaccountable existed against Mrs. Conrad in the intensest degree, that the hatred knew no bounds, that the defendant wrote in two hands, natural and cramped and angular, that she commenced this latter method after suspicion had been directed against her. An exceptionally intelligent jury has been secured.

HOLLISTER'S BIG SCANDAL.

Mrs. Conrad Tells of the Letters That She Received.

THINKS MRS. MANSFIELD THE AUTHOR OF THEM.

HER EFFORTS TO FIX THE GUILT ON THE ACCUSED WOMAN.

Noted Experts Will Pass Upon Samples of the Handwriting of the Latter—Testimony of the Day.

Special Dispatch to the "Chronicle."

HOLLISTER, March 22.—In the trial of Mrs. Mansfield for criminal libel to-day Mrs. Hattie Conrad, the prosecuting witness, was on the stand all day. She told how her suspicions were directed against the defendant, who sought to divert suspicion from herself by throwing the authorship of the letters first on Mrs. Schill, then on a member of Rebekah Lodge, of which Mrs. Conrad was an officer, and lastly on Mrs. Swan, a teacher who had punished Mrs. Conrad's child. Mrs. Mansfield claimed to have received herself two of the anonymous letters. The first she showed to Mrs. Conrad, the second she claimed to have burned, but repeated its contents, which were of a scurrilous nature to the witness, and seemed to take much delight in repeating the contents of the letter.

Mrs. Conrad's testimony dealt mainly with her efforts to gain evidence that Mrs. Mansfield was the author of the anonymous letters. On the occasion of a visit of several lady friends to Mrs. Conrad's house, Mrs. Mansfield being present, the conversation turned on a picture of Miss Ida Scott in the parlor, who Mrs. Conrad termed one of her dearest friends. Three days afterward Miss Scott's mother received an anonymous letter expressing surprise that she should maintain friendly relations with the Conrad family, and the letter then proceeded to make an attack on Mrs. Conrad.

Shortly after this Mrs. Mansfield showed Mrs. Conrad the following letter, which she claimed to have received:

"Thursday, June 8, 1899.—Dear Mrs. Mansfield, I feel that it is my duty to tell you that the Conrad family, root and branch, are constantly circulating malicious lies about both yourself and husband * * As you did not act on the other letter I sent you, I thought perhaps you didn't receive it. You may not think it looks well for me to send anonymous letters, but I don't consider my life would be safe if they knew who told you about their lies * * Truly your friend."

Mrs. Mansfield said she received two anonymous letters, but burned one. About this time the defendant, while professing great friendship for Mrs. Conrad in private, would snub her and shun her when she met her in public on the streets of Hollister.

From the line of questioning pursued by the prosecution it is evident that an attempt will be made to bring the authorship of the letters to Mrs. Mansfield by expert testimony. A number of noted experts have been summoned. A large number of letters and samples of her writing will be placed in evidence. It is sought to be shown that Mrs. Mansfield, jealous of Mrs. Conrad's social success, sought to drag her down and humiliate her. Mrs. Conrad was still on the stand when the case closed for the day.

Pedigree of the schill fa[mily]
The father a drunken would be murderer the mother a bird that nab[s] yung ones be fore she was maried the oldest girl a bastard all of the [kids] cow theifs the hole family liars a fine family

DASTARDLY ATTEMPT TO BLIGHT THE LIFE OF HOLLISTER WOMAN

Some of the Letters Reflecting on the Character of Mrs. Conrad—She Accuses Mrs. Mansfield of the Crime.

[Special Dispatch to "The Examiner."]

HOLLISTER, March 22.—Some of the anonymous letters circulated concerning Mrs. E. F. Conrad and not hitherto published, were produced to-day in court on the trial of Mrs. B. B. Mansfield, who is charged with being the writer. They are characterized by the same spiteful tone as those on which the indictments are founded, although they are not so positively libelous. One of these was received by Mrs. Conrad herself and reads as follows:

Mrs. Hattie Conrad: If you wish service and will take cold victuals for pay I think we could find you plenty of places. A good charwoman has been a long-felt need in Hollister. Yours, etc.

This letter is not dated. It is addressed to Mrs. E. F. Conrad and the postmark is not legible, except the year 1899. The letter was received in April.

Another letter was one addressed to the defendant herself and by her shown to Mrs. Conrad. It reads:

THURSDAY, June 8, 1899.

Dear Mrs. Mansfield: I feel that it is my duty to tell you that the Conrad family, root and branch, are constantly circulating malicious lies about yourself and husband. Even dough-faced Ollie is always telling how envious and jealous you are of his mamma. As you did not act on the other letter I sent you I thought perhaps you did not receive it. You may not think it looks well for me to send anonymous letters, but I don't consider my life would be safe if they knew who told you about these lies. Every one despises the whole family. The children are just as bad as their father and mother, but they are hardly to blame, as they are taught nothing else either by example or precept. Truly yours,

FRIEND

Mrs. Conrad was on the stand all day. Her nearest neighbor is Mrs. Mansfield, and they were very intimate until this trouble arose. Friendship ceased last fall, but before that there was a period of rather strained relations, while Mrs. Conrad's suspicions were growing to a head. The witness admitted that after she had begun to suspect her neighbor she continued to visit on friendly terms in order to prevent any alarm in Mrs. Mansfield's mind while the evidence was being secured. Previous to last fall there was but one interruption to the friendship, and this occurred in October, 1898, when the ladies appear to have fallen out over the politics of that period and Mrs. Conrad ceased visiting for six weeks. At the end of that time Mrs. Mansfield called and asked for an explanation, saying that if she had offended in any way she was sorry. A reconciliation followed. For some time before this falling out Mrs. Conrad noticed that her neighbor was nagging her.

"How nagging?" asked the District Attorney.

"Well, she would always take the negative of anything I said, and she sometimes imputed that I was not telling the truth. She would say to me, 'I don't believe it, and neither do you.'"

The witness told of her membership in the local Rebekah lodge of the Odd Fellows, of which she was elected Vice-Grand in November, 1895, and Noble Grand the following summer. It was in November, 1898, that the anonymous letters began to circulate. Mrs. Conrad's husband received the first of the series, and another one two weeks later. The final letter of the series is the one printed above as addressed to Mrs. Mansfield. It was shown by the defendant to the witness and this was the first time the anonymous letters were mentioned between them.

Mrs. Mansfield came to the Conrad house on that occasion accompanied by her husband. She told him to go home and feed the chickens, and as soon as he went out she handed Mrs. Conrad the letter. "I asked her," said the witness, "if she believed the rot in that letter, and said I had no means then of proving it was not true, but hoped to be able to do so later. She said my word was sufficient."

At this time Mrs. Conrad had begun to suspect her neighbor of being the writer of the letters, and when Mrs. Mansfield asked her if she had ever seen any writing like that she said "No," although, as a matter of fact, she had seen the Scott and Tono letters, on which indictments are founded. On Mrs. Conrad's request Mrs. Mansfield loaned her the letter on a promise that it would be returned and not destroyed. Mrs. Mansfield came for the letter in a week, saying she wanted to compare it with some handwriting.

Another letter received by Mrs. Mansfield is mentioned in the one printed, but this document seems to have disappeared. In reference to the missing letter, Mrs. Mansfield, according to the witness, told contradictory stories. She first said she never received it, and afterward that she had lost it, and then again she professed to have found it, but Mrs. Conrad has never seen it, and neither side has produced it in court.

"Did she tell you anything of what the letter contained?" asked the District Attorney.

"She told me," replied the witness, "that it said my nephew

March 24. 1900. Ex

273

Chr. March 24. 1900

tion was my illegitimate son. Then she (Mrs. Mansfield) put her hand over her mouth and laughed. She was pleased. She said 'I just believe it is some Rebekah writing these letters.' I said there was no one so mean in the lodge, and why should a Rebekah write to her, who was no Rebekah?" She said she had shown the letter to a Rebekah."

This interview was in July, last year, and on August 7th Mrs. Conrad went over to the Mansfields. She had heard that Mrs. Mansfield had found the second letter, but the defendant would not give it up. On this occasion Mr. Mansfield was present and Mrs. Conrad handed him the anonymous letter received by Mrs. Tonn, the wife of a Hollister banker. The letter is as follows:

I was very much surprised to-day to hear the Conrad boasting that she was going to make Mrs. Tonn and Mrs. G. Porter and her outfit as many stepping stones to the topmost seat in the Rebekah lodge and Hollister society. I thought you surely did not know that the creature was once an inmate of old Mother Cook's place of ill fame, and that her husband took her from there when he married her. It is a great source of gratification to Mrs. Porter's social enemies to see her being made use of by such a creature and affords them no end of amusement. Sincerely yours.

Mr. Mansfield said the letter was in the same handwriting as the letter his wife got, and he added: "Such letters don't amount to a —— thing. The best way is to ignore them. That a woman's work. No man would be so mean."

To the suggestion that the letters be ignored, Mrs. Conrad says she replied: 'And let the devil get in his work to her heart's content? Not much. I propose to sift the matter to the bottom.' Then Mrs. Mansfield whispered to me, 'I don't care what you do.'"

Two days later the ladies met again in the presence of Mrs. Grubb and Mrs. Potter of Hollister and they discussed the authorship of the letters.

"I told the ladies," said the witness, "that they were written by somebody who was jealous of my social standing, and that when they were caught I would save the county the cost of transporting them to San Quentin. I would drive them there in my surrey."

"What did Mrs. Mansfield say to that?" asked Mr. Hudner.

"She said in a defiant way: 'You will catch them first, won't you?'"

March 24 - 1900

HANDWRITING EXPERTS WILL NEXT BE HEARD

Mrs. Conrad Completes Her Testimony in the Mansfield Libel Case.

HOLLISTER, March 23.—The fourth day of the Mansfield trial closed with the two days' examination of Mrs. Conrad, the prosecuting witness. She testified as to the efforts made to entrap Mrs. Mansfield, the receipt of anonymous letters and the attempt and failure to fix the guilt on many suspected persons. Mrs. A. Tonn, Mrs. Joseph Grubb and Mrs. Olive Porter, high lights in the Rebekahs, followed with suspicious circumstances pointing to the defendant's guilt.

Justice Agnew also detailed the receipt of an anonymous letter and his detective work to catch the author. The Agnew letter warned him about allowing his children to associate with the Conrad children, and followed a picnic at the Conrad place which was attended by the Agnew children. The case went over until Monday, at which time the experts on handwriting will take an inning.

Experts on the Stand.

Special Dispatch to The Call.

HOLLISTER, April 7.—The Mansfield libel case drags wearily along. Expert Kytka, who was three days on the stand, testified that Mrs. Mansfield was the writer of the defamatory letters. To-day Expert Ames followed, testifying that it was beyond possibility for them to be written by any other person than defendant. Carl Eisenshimmel will give further expert testimony to-morrow.

SUSPECTED MANY OF HER NEIGHBORS

Mrs. Conrad Had a Poor Opinion of Her Friends.

[Special Dispatch to "The Examiner."]

HOLLISTER, March 23.—A recipe for making candy of the domestic variety has become part of the records of San Benito county, not for festive or culinary purposes, but as an example of the handwriting of Mrs. H. B. Mansfield, charged with writing libelous anonymous letters concerning Mrs. F. F. Conrad.

Mrs. Conrad to-day, on cross-examination, related the story of her search for samples of the handwriting of such of her friends as she suspected might possibly be the writer of the anonymous series. It was rather a long list, including many of the members of the Rebekah lodge of which the witness was an officer last year. She mentioned among others the Schills, the Cheneys, the Winans, the Halls and Mrs. Jackson, but finally she became persuaded that none of the these people was guilty. Nevertheless she did not appear to be able to convey any definite idea of the ground of her suspicion of Mrs. Mansfield, nor did she offer anything tangible in the way of proof other than her observance of slight shades of manner and speech, which she appears to have construed as hostile or defiant, as of one, for instance, who was covertly bidding her to do her worst. These and vague coincidences of time are relied on for far-reaching inferences in the case of the visit of Mrs. Mr. Porter and other ladies to Mrs. Conrad in May, 1899, at which there was a discussion of Miss Ida Scott, accompanied by a statement from Mrs. Conrad that she was a very dear friend, of whom Mrs. Conrad was proud. Mrs. Mansfield was present on this occasion and the fact that a few days later Miss Scott's mother received one of the anonymous letters is relied on as a circumstance connecting Mrs. Mansfield with the authorship of the series.

Mrs. Conrad makes a good witness. When counsel lead her up to an ugly place she does not flinch nor swerve.

"When you went to visit Mrs. Mansfield in June," asked Attorney Tompkins, "you suspected that she was the writer of the letters?"

"I did," was the reply.

"Yet you went to make a friendly call?" pursued the counsel.

"I did," said the witness.

"What was your purpose?"

"I went in the hope that she would make some admission so that I could get evidence."

"Did you discuss the authorship of the letters with her?"

"I did."

"Who was mentioned?"

"Mrs. Mansfield said the letter sounded like the Schills, and I said it did."

"Did not she say that if it was not the Schills, it was the dirty Halls?"

"I mentioned the Halls, but I don't remember in what connection. I may have said you naturally look for those with whom you have had trouble."

"Did you at that time believe it was the Halls?"

"I did not."

"You deliberately misstated the facts of your belief?"

"I did after she showed me her letter."

"Is it not the fact that you have had trouble with all your neighbors?"

"No, sir."

"Are you able to mention any of your neighbors that you have not had differences with?"

"Yes, sir."

"Did you not offer to pay Mrs. Debe if she would get you samples of Mrs. Mansfield's writing?"

"I did not offer to pay her. I asked her to get the samples."

On redirect examination Mrs. Conrad said she had deceived Mrs. Mansfield as to her feelings by the advice of her lawyer. She said she had offered money for a sample of Fanny Schill's handwriting at an early stage of the anonymous series.

Gilmore Agnew, Justice of the Peace, proved the receipt of the following letter in March last:

"If you value your domestic happiness, you had better cool off the friendship between your family and the Conrads. Mrs. Conrad is circulating vile stories concerning yourself and Miss Wentworth and she is already saying she thinks poor, dear Mrs. Agnew ought to be informed about how her husband behaves. Her next move will be to think it is her duty to inform her herself, and when she gets started on that line of duty she performs it well. A word to the wise is sufficient. Mrs. Conrad is not a fit associate for a respectable man's family, as she was an inmate of old Mother Cook's den when Conrad married her. She is the most two-faced, lying woman in San Benito county and no one escapes her lying, malicious tongue. She is a cowardly cur and would swear away any woman's reputation or man's life, not even excepting his own relations.

"A friend and one who knows their whole family and history, root and branch."

Agnew explained a misconception that had arisen about the case to the effect that one of the series of anonymous letters was typewritten. When he received this letter he made a typewritten copy of it and sent it to N. D. Hall, some member of whose family was then suspected of writing the letters.

"Why did you do that?" was asked.

"I did it," said the witness, "because Mrs. Conrad had been to see me about her trouble, and she then suspected the Halls. This was a device or trap so that Hall could either betray himself or clear himself."

"Well, he cleared himself?" said the District Attorney.

"He did," said the witness.

SUSPECTED MANY PEOPLE

Mrs. Conrad's Hunt for the Author of the Letters.

GOT THE HANDWRITING OF SEVERAL ASSOCIATES.

ADMITS HER RELATIONS WITH HER NEIGHBORS WERE NOT FRIENDLY.

Names of Numerous People Brought Into the Hollister Scandal—Accused Woman Unconcerned.

Special Dispatch to the "Chronicle."

HOLLISTER, March 23.—In the Mansfield libel trial to-day, on cross-examination, Mrs. Conrad testified that before she became morally certain that Mrs. Mansfield was the author of the anonymous letters she suspected certain members of the Rebekah Lodge, of which she was a high officer. She obtained specimens of their handwriting for comparison with the letters. The witness spent a very unpleasant half day on the stand, as she was compelled to admit that she and her husband had been on bad terms with nearly all their neighbors and that the women she first suspected were intimately associated with her in lodge work.

In redirect examination the prosecution attempted to bring in the Schill feud and facts connected with the suicide of Annie Schill, but objections were sustained by Judge Dooling. District Attorney Hosler thereupon gave notice that he would introduce this evidence later on. This is the first attempt to bring in the attempted shooting of Conrad by Schill, growing out of some anonymous letters received by Schill in 1894, and foreshadows that the trial will be sensational.

In the afternoon the witness stand was occupied by Mrs. G. C. Porter and Mrs. J. R. Grubb, prominent members of the local Rebekah Lodge and warm friends of Mrs. Conrad, and who endeavored to unmask the writer of the letters. The aim of the prosecution was to prove by these women and Mrs. A. Tonn that as soon as Mrs. Mansfield learned that the H. F. Scott family of this place stood high in the community and were warm friends of Mrs. Conrad's she wrote the letter to Mrs. Scott, warning her not to allow her daughter, Ida Scott, to associate with Mrs. Conrad.

Justice of the Peace Agnew also testified that in February, 1899, his two children attended a party at Mrs. Conrad's and a short time afterward received letters.

The trial is proceeding very slowly, but four witnesses having been examined since last Tuesday. Rumors are circulated that the prosecution has sensational testimony and convincing evidence in reserve. The trial as it proceeds drags in the names of people who never had the slightest intimation that they were involved, and public interest grows apace. At the request of both sides the court adjourned this evening until Monday morning, when it is expected that the writing experts will commence their testimony. The defendant takes the entire matter with the utmost unconcern and is expected to tell of a conspiracy of which she is the victim.

THERE was something most unusual in relation to the recent trial of Mrs. Mansfield at Hollister on the charge of writing anonymous and malign letters. The testimony all tended to demonstrate the woman's guilt, the crime is one of the ultra despicable ones, and yet her acquittal was hailed with joy. The conclusion is inevitable that Mrs. Mansfield is a handsome woman with a judicious facility for weeping.

The Free Lance.

VOL. XVII. HOLLISTER, CALIFORNIA, MARCH 23, 1900. No. 12.

The Mansfield Libel Trial.

The trial of Mrs. Minnie Mansfield indicted for criminal libel in having written and mailed certain scurrilous letters about Mrs. Mattie Conrad came on for trial in the Superior Court, last Tuesday morning.

The People were represented by District Attorney Jno. L. Hudner, assisted by Mr. N. C. Briggs. The defendant was represented by Messrs. A. M. Cuning, of this place, and S. G. Tompkins, of San Jose.

On calling the venire of jurors it was found that F. A. Mylar, H. A. Lewis and Fred Jones were absent. The following jurors were excused by the Court: Stephen Lavagnino, S. M. Totten, Jno. R. Woolery, Wm. L. Burns and C. G. Lane. This left seventeen jurors to select from out of the original venire of twenty-five.

On drawing from the remaining names, the following panel took seats in the jury box: A. H. Thysen, Andrew Lacque, Henry Bader, E. A. Edwards, Geo. Lyman, Ed Wright, G. T. Duncan, Dan McCloskey, C. Schultz, C. P. Smith, R. W. Chappell and J. J. Cornwell.

E. A. Edwards was challenged by the prosecution, for having an opinion and challenge was allowed by the Court. George Lyman was challenged by the prosecution, on the ground that he had formed an opinion, and was excused. Ed Wright was challenged by the defense on the same grounds, and excused. Dan McCloskey was also challenged by the People and excused, and after the panel had been all examined, Andrew Lacque and R. W. Chappell were excused by the People, and J. J. Cornwell by defendant.

The remaining five names in the jury-box, viz: Matthew Farrell, F. M. Mcarten, Rufine Joseph, Alex. McCune and S. W. Wright, were then drawn, and examined as to their qualifications as jurors, at the conclusion of their examination, a venire was directed to be issued to the Sheriff ordering him to summon twenty-five more jurors from the body of the county, returnable at 1:30 p. m. on Wednesday, Mar. 21st, to which time the case was continued.

On the Court convening at 1:30 p. m., on Wednesday, the following venire of jurors was returned by the Sheriff:

Jas. Mehlwood, W. B. Dryden, N. F. Gobar, J. A. Warnock, J. E. Sindel, S. P. Sherwood, C. L. Burns, R. G. Norton, [illegible], Henry Michaels, R. B. Martin, F. C. Hammond, R. Branagan, Jno. T. [illegible] evidence by reason of the many circumstances we shall offer, small in themselves, but pointing in the direction of the defendant as the author of this letter, as we shall undertake to show, the ultimate facts are simple.

"We shall undertake to show that defendant wrote this letter, and will offer many more letters of similar import. We shall show that the defendant is the writer of this letter by experts, men skilled in the art of discovering writers of anonymous and simulated writing, and by comparison with defendants' proved and known writing. We shall show that the defendant wrote at least one letter, four years ago, calculated and designed to inflict enormous injury on the object of the defendant's malice, by further inflaming the mind of a man already enraged against the prosecuting witness and her family to a point amounting to desperation, and who, by reason of the stimulus to his animosity given by the letter received by him, and which he believed was made and had reason to believe was written by Mrs. Conrad, was likely to do Mrs. Conrad and her family great and enormous injury, and did attempt the same.

"While the feeling of malice and animosity against Mrs. Conrad of and on the part of the defendant is unaccountable to us, we shall show by the acts of the defendant that it existed in an intense degree. We shall show conduct on the part of the defendant inconsistent with her pretended friendship for Mrs. Conrad. We shall show that the defendant is an educated woman, of the very best manner and address, yet showing, by her acts, a hate against Mrs. Conrad that knew no limits in its malevolence. We shall show that the defendant, within the period covered by these letters, wrote more than one hand, her own natural hand-writing, and a cramped, angular, and unnatural hand; that she commenced this latter method of writing after she learned she was suspected of the writing; that she sought to direct suspicion away from herself, and many other facts and circumstances pointing unmistakably to the guilt of the defendant.

"If we show that the defendant wrote this letter and mailed it herself, or caused it to be mailed, whereby it passed into the hands of parties other than herself, then there will be no doubt of your duty to find her guilty."

[The allusion in Mr. Hudner's address to the jury, regarding the anonymous letter that caused a con-pentedly. I commenced to notice, during the summer of '98 that she would treat me very cooly when she met met me on the street in town, especially if anyone was around. I was elected Vice Grand in the Rebecca Lodge, at this place, in November, 1899, and installed in office in January. During 1898 I occupied the position of Warden in the lodge—this position would make me eligible to the position of Noble Grand, to which position I was elected in June, 1899.

During November, 1898, I learned from my husband that he had received a letter reflecting upon my character. He showed me the letter. It was the first letter that I had seen of that character. I seen another letter about two weeks later. It was also directed to my husband. The next letter I saw was the one sent to and delivered to me by Judge Gilmore Agnew. [Letter shown to and identified by witness.] The next letter was received by me in April. The next letter I saw in May a letter addressed to Mrs. Tonn. The next letter I saw was addressed to Mrs. B. F. Scott.

At this point witness was temporarily withdrawn, and Mrs. C. E. Scott was sworn and identified the above letter. I received this letter at the Hollister postoffice, about May 13th. I noticed when I received it that it had only been in the office a few hours. Shortly after, a week or so, I gave it to Mrs. Conrad on the occasion of one of her visits to my house. I was well acquainted with Mrs. Conrad, had known her for some four years. I have three children. My daughter Ida is a school teacher. She formerly taught the Enterprise school, the same district in which the Mansfield and Conrad families live. My daughter Ida was well acquainted with Mrs. Conrad, and was on visiting terms with her. Mr. Conrad was a trustee of the school.

Mrs. Conrad's testimony resumed. [Shown two papers.] Have seen these papers. It was a letter that Mrs. Mansfield handed to me about the middle of June, 1899. [Defense concedes postmark to be June 8, 1899.] That was the last anonymous letter that came to my notice. [Shown another paper.] Have seen that paper before, it was around some poppy seeds that Mrs. Mansfield gave me. She said she had marked thereon the names of the two kinds of seeds. [These two papers were offered in evidence, as samples of defendant's handwriting]. (Witness shown another paper.) I have seen Mrs. Mansfield write this. (Witness shown another paper.) I saw this in family were freely commented upon.

On the following Thursday I met Mrs. Mansfield. Mrs. Joyce was there, and the matter of the ladies' visit was brought up again. The following week I was shown the anonymous letters to Mrs. Tonn and Mrs. Scott.

[At the time of our going to press, Thursday afternoon, 3 p. m. Mrs. Conrad was still on the stand, and the prosecution was commencing to weave the first links connecting defendant with writing the letter upon which she was indicted by the Grand Jury. The full testimony will be given in our next issue.—Ed. Lance.]

The Schill-Conrad Feud.

In his opening address to the jury, last Wednesday afternoon, District Attorney Hudner said the People, in its prosecution of Mrs. Mansfield, would show that she wrote a certain letter, some four years ago, causing a man to attempt serious injury to the Conrad family. We present herewith the facts connected with that affair.

The first item is taken from the Lance of August 14, 1896:

For some time past trouble has been brewing between the families of Ed. Conrad and Antone Schill, in Enterprise District. It seems that their respective children got quarreling at school, and the trouble extended to the male heads of the two families. A workman for Conrad, by the name of Otto Kalionowsky, in some manner, also became involved in the difficulty. Last Friday afternoon about 1:30 o'clock Kalionowsky was shot by Schill, and at present is lying at Conrad's residence in a dangerous condition. We have not been able to learn the true facts in the case as many stories are afloat, but, according to Kalionowsky's story, he saw Schill coming along the road and desiring to have a talk with him he approached him. Schill warned him away and followed up the warning by throwing an axe at him, and seizing a shotgun from his wagon fired one barrel at him. The charge did not hit him, when upon Schill tried to club him a couple of times with the stock of the shotgun, and then fired the other barrel at him. The charge consisting of fine birdshot struck Kalionowsky on the point of the right shoulder, making a large hole therein. He is at present under the care of Dr. Porter and, pending the result of the injury, Schill, who at once came to town and gave himself up, is in jail. We have not been able to learn Schill's side of the story, as positively refuses to see any one. Everybody deeply deplores the affair as all parties to the difficulty are respected residents of this county. Kalionowsky formerly worked at the planing mill here for Coy & Dunlap. On Wednesday Schill gave a bond of $[illegible] to answer the charge that would be preferred against him, and was [illegible]

In Case Of Failure.

San Jose Mercury: Never in the history of California has any project been originated that received at the very outset such universal approval on the part of the practical men of the state as the scheme of combination proposed by the cured fruit growers. It has the unanimous support of the press and the good will of bankers, the business men and even of the packers. It is conceded that the plan of organization is sound, and that regulation of the industry is thoroughly practicable as a business proposition, and that the administration is in good hands. The principle upon which it based has been tested in this valley by the fruit growers, and the Santa Clara County Fruit exchange and the district fruit unions have demonstrated that if the growers stand together, instead of competing with each other, they can measurably maintain prices, reduce expenses and increase profits. The California Cured Fruit association is simply a local exchange or union on a comprehensive scale, and with so pronounced a sentiment in favor of it, and a full knowledge of the immense advantages it would bring to the industry and to individual growers, it would be natural to assume that every one of the latter would be eager to hasten the success of the movement. If the association should not succeed in obtaining the co-operation of ninety per cent of the growers, those who remain out will be responsible for the failure and for the consequences which it is feared may follow.

California will always remain the great fruit State in the union, and its cured fruits will continue to be superior to those grown in any other part of the world. Our fruit industry cannot be wiped out. But it is possible that it may become so demoralized through lack of business handling, that thousands of growers will be driven from the field and the industry brought to a standstill. For example, this season's crop of prunes, should the present favorable conditions continue, may be double last year's crop, or at least fifty per cent larger. Now, without method in marketing, what are the chances for paying prices? If, under the exceptionally favorable circumstances of last season, with short crops abroad and less than a full crop on this coast, prices were not altogether satisfactory, is it reasonable to suppose that they will be higher, or as high, this year?

F. Gobar, J. A. Warnock, J. E. Sindel, S. P. Sherwood, C. L. Burns, R. G. Norton, E. J. Gleason, F. E. Shore, Henry Michaels, B. R. Martin, F. C. Hammond, R. Branagan, Jno. T. Elliott, A. T. Brooks, W. Griffith, Jno. Parker, R. Podva, Wm. Little, Oliver Orr, George Pinion, S. B. Gillespie, A. G. Turner and O. B. Hart.

As soon as the list was called and it was found that all the parties were present, it was found necessary to adjourn until 2 o clock, as it was found that G. T. Duncan, one of the jurors sworn to try the case was absent. At two o'clock the clerk drew from the box the names of Wm. Griffith and C. L. Burns.

Mr. Griffith was excused as he stated, in response to the queries of the District Attorney, that he had formed a strong opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused.

At this point S. W. Wright was excused by the defense, and Rufine Joseph was excused by consent of both sides.

Matthew Farrell, F. M. Mecarten and Alex McCune were sworn in to try the case.

The clerk then drew from the box the following names: Richard Branagan, N. F. Gobar and B. R. Martin, All the three of the gentlemen were challenged and excused, Mr Branagan by the defense, and Messrs. Gobar and Martin by the People.

The next names drawn from the box were Henry Michaels, R. Podva and O. B. Hart. After examination Mr. Michaels was challenged by defense and excused. Messrs. R. Podva and O. B. Hart were sworn in to try the case.

The following names were drawn from the box:

S. P. Sherwood, challenged by defense and excused.

Geo. Pinion, challenged by People and excused.

A. T. Brooks, challenged by defense and excused.

John T. Elliott, challenged by People and excused.

S. B. Gillespie, challenged by the People and excused.

Finally R. G. Norton's name was drawn from the box, and he proving satisfactory to both sides was sworn in as the twelfth juror to try the case.

The following gentlemen comprise the jury now trying the case: C. L. Burns, Alex McCune, C. P. Smith, F. M. Mecarrea, G. T. Duncan, Matthew Farrell, A. H. Thysen, Chas. Schultz, O. B. Hart, R. Podva, Henry Bader and R. G. Norton.

After the jury had been sworn in to try the case, District Attorney Hudner made a brief opening statement. We present herewith a short resume of Mr. Hudner's address, which created somewhat of sensation:

"While likely that some considerable time will be consumed in the presentation to you of the People's guilty."

[The allusion in Mr. Hudner's address, to the jury, regarding the anonymous letter that caused a certain man to become greatly enraged at the Conrad family, is supposed to refer to the attempted shooting of Mr. Conrad by Mr. Antone Schill, in 1894, and which we refer to in another column—Ed. Lance.]

Mr. Hudner's address, while quite brief, was to the point, and created considerable of a sensation. At the conclusion of his remarks (4 o'clock) by consent, the case was adjourned until Thursday morning, at 10 o'clock.

The letter upon which the indictment was found and upon which Mrs. Mansfield is being tried, reads as follows:

"Hollister

Dear Mrs. Scott:

It has been a great source of grievance to me to hear a great many unkind comments about your friendship for Mrs. Ed. Conrad. People think it strange that you should choose a woman whose husband married her out of old Mother Cook's house of ill fame, for the bosom friend of yourself and daughters, but I was sure you did not know of the woman's real character and take this way to let you know.

An Old, Old Friend."

Mrs. Mattie P. Conrad—Sworn. Am wife of Ed. Conrad. Have three children. Am acquainted with defendant for 14 years. She lives about a mile east of our place. My husband is a farmer, so is defendant's husband. Our farms adjoin. The Mansfields have no family. I am well acquaint with the Mansfields. My acquaintanceship with the Mansfields was very close and intimate until about a year ago. We visited each other very often, and very cordial—visited each other's house. We met every week, at least twice a week. [Witness here detailed intimacy that existed between herself and Mrs. Mansfield.] Our social visits consisted of afternoon or evening calls. Sometimes we took dinner together. There was a slight interruption of our friendship about a year ago last November. We had a slight dispute about the election of candidates. Our friendship was interrupted for a short time. I stopped calling on her, but she kept up her visits to me right along. Finally defendant called on me and said her husband had remarked her (witness) coolness toward her, and apologized for anything she (defendant) had done. Then I commenced calling on her again. Previous to the episode I noticed a change in her demeanor toward me. She seemed to always be desirous to nag at me, that is she would always deny the truth of anything I stated; she would often remark "I don't believe that, neither do you!" I noticed this change of demeanor toward me re- handwriting]. (Witness shown another paper.) I have seen Mrs. Mansfield write this. (Witness shown another paper.) I saw this in San Francisco. I know Mrs. Mansfield's hand-writing. Mr. Conrad handed this letter to me. Mrs. Mansfield always conducted the correspondence pertaining to her husband's business. The writing in that letter is Mrs. Mansfield's. [Letter introduced in evidence as sample of defendant's handwriting.] (Witness shown another paper). I know that handwriting. It is Mrs. Mansfield's handwriting.

At this point the witness identified a number of samples of handwriting as being in Mrs. Mansfield's handwriting. These samples were marked to be used as exemplars of defendant's handwriting in the progress of the case.

It was Mrs. Mansfield's invariable habit to come into town every Saturday. Never knew Mrs. Mansfield to depart from this custom unless it was a celebration or a funeral. Remember an anniversary celebration given on Wednesday, April 26, 1899, by the Rebecca Lodge. I was Vice Grand at the time, and was active in getting it up. Mrs. Mansfield was cognizant of my exertions to make the affair a success, which took place at Wells' Hall. Don't think Mrs. Mansfield attended the celebration. After the affair was over I took some of the food left over, to my house. This was done on Thursday. When I got home I found Mrs. John Kent there. The food consisted of sandwiches, etc., in a box, and Mrs. Kent took home some of the food to her house. When Mrs. Kent left my house she went to Mrs. Mansfield's. This occurred about at dusk. I got my letter on the following Saturday. It was the only letter that was directed to me. I remember a visit made to me in the early part of May—Monday, the 8th—by Mrs. Grubb, Mrs. Tonn and Mrs. Dr. Porter. They came out in Mrs. Tonn's surrey, and arrived at my house in the afternoon of that day, and stayed until about 5 o'clock. I went to receive the company, and when I returned I found Mrs. Mansfield in the dining-room. We all went into the parlor and spent the afternoon together. There was no formality between myself and Mrs. Mansfield. She would drop in. On this afternoon Mrs. Porter noticed a picture in my parlor, and on inquiring who it was, was told by me that it was the picture of Miss Ida Scott, "a very near and dear friend of mine." Mrs. Tonn said, "Yes; she is a lovely girl." Mrs. Grubb remarked that Mrs. Porter had possibly seen Miss Scott's picture in Jefferson's window. I spoke with great pride of my intimacy with the Scott's, and the favorable qualities of the Scott at the planing mill here for Coy & Dunlap. On Wednesday Schill gave a bond of $10,000 to answer the charge that would be preferred against him, and was released from custody.

The true facts of the above affair are only now coming to light. It seems that Schill who, while a good, hardworking man, and highly respected, was a very excitable individual, had received certain letters making grave charges against him, purporting to have been written by Mrs. Conrad. He brooded greatly over the letters, and commenced drinking, with the result that he tried to kill Conrad, but Kalionowsky received the charge of shot intended for Conrad. After his arrest for the above assault, he went from bad to worse, commenced to quarrel and threaten, and was finally arrested and placed under bonds to keep the peace. The conclusion of this strange case was given in the Lance of April 5, 1895:

SUICIDE OF ANTONE SCHILL.

It is with deep regret we announce the death of Antone Schill from strychnine poisoning, taken evidently with suicidal intent at his residence, in Enterprise District, last Friday morning, at 8 o'clock. How or when he took the poison is not known, as no one witnessed the act. He was found by his wife behind the barn in convulsions. Unfortunately no horse was around the place, and his daughter had to run to a neighbor's, Mr. Jas. Kelly's, in order to get a conveyance to get into town. Before Dr. Porter got out to the farm, (which was as quick as possible) Schill was past all aid, and although the Doctor did all in his power to relieve him, it was of no avail. Coroner Black held an inquest in the afternoon, and a verdict was rendered in accordance with the above fact.

At the inquest the only witness examined was Mrs. Schill, wife of the deceased, who testified as follows:

Deceased was my husband; his name was Antone Schill; he was a native of Germany, aged 48 years, 10 months and 29 days. He was arrested yesterday by W. W. McDonald and taken to town. When he came back he was all right. About 8 o'clock this morning he bid us good-bye; said that was the last he would speak to us. He would not east breakfast. Shortly after we found him lying behind the barn; he told me he had taken strychnine; I sent for the doctor and he told the doctor the same thing—that he took the poison in water. He said everyone was against him; he said Mansfield had lied about him; did not see him take the water.

Sometime ago Schill had some difficulty with a neighbor which resulted in his shooting, with a shotgun, a young man by the name of Otto Kalionowsky. He was arrested and indicted for an assault with a deadly weapon, and the trial was set for an early date. In the meantime Kalionowsky commenced a suit against him in the Federal Court for $25,000 damages. Last Thursday he was arrested at the instance of a neighbor, Mr. Mansfield, for disturbing the peace. These troubles seemed to have preyed upon his mind, and it is supposed that in a moment of temporary aberration he committed the rash act. altogether satisfactory, is it reasonable to suppose that they will be higher, or as high, this year?"

In discussing this subject so vital to the prune growers, the Santa Rosa "Republican" asks if the failure of the effort to unite the orchardists is likely to put a dollar of value in any man's orchard? "Will such a failure," it asks, "guarantee anybody a fair price for his crop? Will it aid in reducing the mortgage on the orchard or in the purchase of home comforts? These are plain and pointed questions. They are questions that are pertinent to every person engaged in prune business. The prune growers who are staying out of the cured fruit union are answering these questions. They are contributing their part toward the defeat of the project. By their acts they are declaring against co-operation and in favor of all the evils of excessive competition."

Starting Melons.

Cantaloupes reach their highest development on a deep, mellow, sandy soil. It should be well prepared and the seed be planted as soon as danger of frost is over. In order to grow the crop early, which is a very important consideration from a commercial standpoint, it is best to make two plantings, one very early and the other some ten days later. Should the first planting be killed by frost or by insects, the second will usually make a stand. If neither planting be killed, the plants can be thinned out when the second pair of leaves have made some growth.

We have planted seed in two-inch rose pots which were placed in a hotbed till the plants reached the proper size, and when danger from frost was over put them out in the fields. Plants started in this way have produced ripe melons one week earlier than seed planted in the fields. Parts of old tin cans may be used instead of pots. The cans may be thrown into the fire and the soldering which holds the ends and seams be melted, and afterward the cans be rolled out so as to form a smooth cylinder. They do best if one be placed inside the other with the opening sides opposite. After the plants are set out, one of these tin cans may also be used for a plant protector against cut worms and cold winds until the plant starts to run. The can is simply slipped up above the plant, with an inch of it remaining in the soil to hold it.—Prof. R. S. Price, Texas Experiment Station, in Farm and Home.

Never judge a person hastily. Even the dog in the manger may have been a nervous animal that needed rest and quiet.—J. A. Mason.

27

Bee March 2[illegible] – 19[illegible].

THE ANONYMOUS LETTERS.

The Mrs. Mansfield Trial for Libel Still Proceeds.

Friday afternoon saw the conclusion of Mrs. Conrad's testimony.

Mrs. G. C. Porter testified to having lived in Hollister 18 years. She knew both Mr. Conrad and Mrs. Mansfield and identified a letter.

Mrs. Grubb told of having called with other ladies at the residence of Mrs. Conrad.

Mrs. Tonn testified to having received a letter about Mrs. Conrad.

Gilmore Agnew is acquainted with Mrs. Conrad, knew Mrs. Mansfield by sight. On March 25, 1899, about a month after a young people's party at the residence of Mrs. Mansfield, which was attended by his son and daughter, he received this letter:

"If you value your domestic happiness, you had better cool off the friendship between your family and the Conrad's. Mrs. Conrad is circulating vile stories concerning yourself and Miss Nellie Wentworth and others, and she is already saying she thinks poor dear Mrs. Agnew ought to be informed about how her husband behaves. Her next move will be to think it is her duty to inform her herself, and when she gets started on that line of duty she performs it well. A word to the wise is sufficient.

Mrs. Conrad is not a fit associate for a respectable man's family, as she was an inmate of old Mother Cook's den when Conrad married her. She is the most two faced lying woman in San Benito county, and no one escapes her lying malicious tongue. He is a cowardly cur and would swear away any woman's reputation or man's life if she bid him, not even excepting his own relatives." A Friend.

"And one who knows their whole family history, root and branch."

I made a type-written copy of it and sent it to N. D. Hall who was suspected of writing the letters. I thought it would cause him to betray himself or at any rate it would do no harm. Afterwards I became satisfied he did not write the letters. Mrs. Conrad consulted me in her troubles. We discussed the affair six times before she consulted a lawyer. Mr. Conrad showed me two letters he had received.

Court adjourned until Monday morning.

Ed. F. Conrad, husband of Mattie Conrad, was the first witness Monday morning. He testified to knowing Mr. Schill, the man who committed suicide 6 years ago over an anonymous letter. Mr. Conrad has not seen Schell for several years and did not know of his whereabouts at present as he is dead. Did not remember having trouble with Schell. He remembered the election of 1898 and talked with Mr. Mansfield in the presence of the accused.

During the examination it came out that Harney Shaw had received an anonymous letter during the campaign advising him that the friendship of the Conrads was not sincere. This was ruled out as the letter had been destroyed or lost.

Mr. Conrad was shown a paper which he said his children had brought from the Hollister postoffice during the fall of 1898. Another letter also was brought by the children from school. He remembered of Mrs. Mansfield once during the month of August coming into the house quietly and casting eager glances in the direction of the writing desk. Mrs. Mansfield and he conversed on different topics for an hour and a half. A diagram was put on the board showing the plan of the Conrad residence. Mrs. Conrad was in Hollister and his daughter was in an adjoining room. He was reading and something attracted his attention, looking up he saw Mrs. Mansfield standing in the doorway. He said "Hello," and she replied, "Where were you, I came near rapping the door down." The door at which Mrs. Mansfield entered was several feet away from where he was reading. The writing desk was in the corner near the door at which she was standing. On cross-examination Mr. Conrad admitted discussing the different candidates with various persons during the campaign. My daughter Ollie came in later on during Mrs. Mansfield's call. It was the custom of the two ladies in this case to enter each other's houses without ceremony.

Mrs. Reynolds of Santa Cruz, testified that she had received a paper shown her. This document was an answer to a missive sent by her to B. B. Mansfield requesting information on a certain subject. She enclosed the letter to a lady in Hollister. The letter was about duck eggs.

A. Tonn was called to testify to a certain date.

Robt. Shaw gave some information as to the meaning of the hours of the day placed in the date. All letters received between 5:30 p. m. and 6:40 a. m. next day are stamped 7 a. m. Between 6:40 a. m. and 9:55 a. m., 10 a. m. is stamped. Between 9:55 a. m. and 12:20 p. m., 12 m. is marked. Letters deposited between 12:20 p. m. and 3:40 p. m. are carrying the mark 3 p. m. Between 3:40 p. m. and 5:30 the letters have the 5 p. m. mark. It was agreed that the lawyers could read the figures on the stamp as well as Postmaster Shaw.

Mrs. Joyce is acquainted with Mrs. Conrad and met Mrs. Mansfield at the Conrad home. The conversation turned upon a visit made by prominent ladies of Hollister to Mrs. Conrad.

Court adjourned till 2 p. m.

Miss Olive Conrad, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Conrad, testified to plan of the house of her parents and remembered the noiseless entrance of Mrs. Mansfield on the visit referred to by E. F. Conrad in his testimony. Miss Olive remembered another occasion when Mrs. Mansfield entered into the presence of the Conrads unawares. They were eating supper at the time.

Mrs. Ruble said her former husband, Antone Schill, died in March, 1894. She was shown a paper and said she saw it before during her husband's life. Her evidence was cut short by objection. This was a disappointment to many as it was expected that her testimony would be somewhat interesting to say the least in view of facts of the past.

Some business papers given by the Mansfields to C. H. Wagner were introduced as specimens of the signatures of the accused.

E. E. Bolton, foreman of the last Grand Jury, was then called. The questions asked him aroused a storm of objections and legal oratory filled the room, and citations came thick and fast. Mr. Bolton testified Mrs. Mansfield was present and Sheriff Croxon was called to prove that the defendant was subpoenaed. After much discussion the matter of straightening out the record was settled.

He testified to having seen Mrs. Mansfield write in the presence of the Grand Jury and identified to the exhibits shown him. The question involved in admitting Mr. Bolton's testimony was that Mrs. Conrad had not been warned of her rights and had been compelled to testify against herself before the Grand Jury.

A. D. Shaw testified to matters of law cited at a hearing to quash the indictment.

S. R. Canfield as Secretary of the Grand Jury, identified certain papers shown him.

Wm. Hawkins of Mulberry, identified a letter received by him on business from Mr. Mansfield.

From the postmarks on all or nearly all the envelopes of the letters in evidence it was shown that they were mailed on dates occuring on Saturday.

District Attorney Hudner announced that the experts on writing could not be on hand.

Court adjourned until 10 o'clock this morning.

Advance March 30 – 1900

People vs. Mansfield.

This case, the defendant being under indictment for libel, has been now on trial ten days in the Superior Court. We herewith give a summary of the evidence up to date:

Mrs. E. F. Conrad, the prosecuting witness, testified that for years she has been a close neighbor and friend to defendant; that their first dispute was over election matters in November, '98; that in the summer of '99 her husband received letters reflecting upon her character; that the mention of the Scott family during a visit by some ladies, in the presence of Mrs. Mansfield, was followed by the receipt by Mrs. Scott of a letter of the same character; that Mrs. Tonn and Mr. Agnew also received letters; she also identified specimens of Mrs. Mansfield's writing, and detailed a large number of circumstances pointing towards Mrs. M.; and also of her efforts to detect the authorship, in which suggestions were made by Mrs. M. as to who the guilty party might be; that after a certain Rebekah entertainment she took some of the food left over to her home, and gave a portion to Mrs. John Kent, which event was followed by another letter making reference to Mrs. Conrad making a good charwoman and cold vittles; that Mrs. M. continually advised them to drop the matter.

Upon cross-examination Mrs. Conrad acknowledged that she had misled Mrs. M. on many occasions, and pretended a friendship she did not feel, for the purpose of securing evidence against her. Although on the stand for two days, Mrs. Conrad's testimony throughout only varied in trifling matters.

Mrs. Dr. Porter corroborated the testimony of Mrs. Conrad as to the Scott incident, and the conversation with Mrs. Mansfield at Mrs. Porter's house when defendant seemed very much amused at Mrs. Conrad's indignation, in reply to Mrs. C.'s remark that she would give the author a free ride in the surrey of which they seemed so envious, Mrs. M. said, "You will have to catch them first;" Mrs. Porter also testified that Mrs. Mansfield had said it was a woman between the age of 45 and 50, that no man was mean enough to do that; in this connection Mrs. M. remarked, but I have reminded him of a few things and he has to admit there is a man mean enough.

Mrs. J. R. Grubb corroborated the testimony of Mrs. Conrad and Mrs. Porter as to conversations with Mrs. M.; also to the statement of the latter that she thought the author a Rebekah; and had talked to a Rebekah who also thought the author was a Rebekah.

Mrs. A. Tonn testified to the receipt of a letter received by her between the 11th and 15th of May; also to the conversation between all parties concerning the Scott family.

Mrs. G. W. Joice testified to a visit paid Mrs. C. when Mrs. M. was present and a conversation that occurred relative to the visit of Mrs. Grubb and Mrs. Porter.

Mrs. Hallie McReynolds, of Santa Cruz, identified a letter received by her from Mrs. Mansfield. This was offered in evidence as an exemplar of defendant's writing.

Mrs. Ben Scott testified to the receipt of an anonymous letter on the Saturday following the visit of the ladies at Mrs. Conrad's at which the fact of Mrs. C.'s friendship for the Scotts was discussed. This letter expressed astonishment that Mrs. Scott should make a companion for her daughters of Mrs. C.

Gilmore Agnew testified to the receipt of an anonymous letter, in which he was advised to cool his friendship for the Conrad family or they would do him injury. This letter was mailed on a Saturday and followed a picnic at the Conrad ranch which was attended by the Agnew children. On cross-examination Mr. Agnew stated that he had made a copy of this letter, omitting the address and all names except Mrs. Conrad's and mailed it to Mr. N. D. Hall, who had been suspected of writing the letters. He explained that he did this for the reason that if he was the guilty party he would betray himself, if not, it would clear him. And in response to the District Attorney "it did clear him."

Postmaster Robert Shaw testified as to the various figures on the postmarks of letters, showing that 3 P. M. meant that such letters were dropped in the wall box at any time between 3 and 5 P. M. This testimony was offered in support of the testimony of Mrs. Mansfield only came to town on Saturdays and then invariably in the afternoon.

Ed. Conrad testified that upon one occasion he was sitting in his house reading when he was surprised to see Mrs. M. standing in the door. She stated that she had nearly rapped in the door of the kitchen without being heard. Mr. Conrad stated that the first row was over election matters, the chief contention being over the candidacy of Harney Shaw for county Clerk. Here the Dist. Atty. offered to show that this incident was followed by an anonymous letter to Harney Shaw, warning him to beware of the Conrads, but the Court would not allow him to go into the details. Mr. Hudner also sought to show by this witness that a man named Schill had also received a letter which greatly incensed him against the Conrads, but this was also excluded.

Mrs. Josephine Ruble, formerly Mrs. Schill, identified a letter received by her from Mrs. Mansfield, which was offered in evidence by the Dist. Atty. as an exemplar of defendant's writing.

E. E. Bolton identified certain writings made by Mrs. M. while being examined before the grand jury. A strenuous effort was made by defendant's counsel to exclude these writings, without avail, and they were admitted in evidence as exemplars.

Miss Olive Conrad corroborated the testimony of her father as to the sudden appearance of Mrs. M. at their home one summer afternoon.

A. D. Shaw identified certain writings made by Mrs. M. before the grand jury, and to the admission of such at a subsequent session of the Superior Court, also that Mrs. M. had been placed upon the stand by her counsel, Judge Cunning, the cross-examination resulting in the admissions of her writings and the subsequent withdrawal of the whole cross-examination by the District Attorney. Over the proposition of the admission on evidence of these writings as exemplars of defendant's writing, counsel battled for two hours, but they were finally admitted over objection.

C. W. Hawkins, of Mulberry, identified a letter received from Mrs. M., which was also admitted in evidence as an exemplar of defendant's writing.

The Court was then asked to ascertain and declare that the various dates on which the various letters were postmarked, covering a period of five years, fell on Saturday, and the Court so declared and stated to the jury that it must be accepted by them as a fact.

On Tuesday there was but a short session of Court, the expert witnesses having failed to arrive.

On Wednesday morning, Theodore Kylka, of S. F., was called on the stand and testified as to his expert knowledge of hand-writing.

The witness testified that he had followed the profession of hand-writing expert for 18 years, his first case in this country being that of the Haymarket murderers at Chicago. He had also been engaged in the Rodley forgery case, at Oroville, the Davis will case, the Fair case, the Yda Storke case and hundreds of others. He had examined all the exhibits in the Mansfield case, and after photographic examination and demonstration, he pronounced them emphatically the hand-writing of one and the same person. He produced the negatives of each photograph which were taken in charge by the clerk. The work of the expert was then submitted to the jury, over the objection of the defense. Mr. Kytka was then permitted to illustrate his testimony by an exhaustive analysis of the various writings. He occupied all of Wednesday and Thursday on the stand and his testimony will probably continue to-day.

Mr. Kytka takes various words and letters in each of the exhibits, and finding a similar word or letter in the Scott letter, upon which the indictment was found, proceeds to demonstrate upon the black-board the points of resemblance of the two. The letters after each demonstration are then submitted to the jurymen who view them with powerful microscopes. The process is slow but complete, each point raised being submitted to careful demonstration. At the beginning of Mr. Kytka's testimony there was a decided difference of opinion between the expert and Judge Cunning, and matters grew so acrimonious as to call for suppression by the Court.

P, March 31. 1900

Ap 6 1900

THE MANSFIELD TRIAL.

After nearly one whole day's rest the Mansfield trial was resumed Wednesday morning. Expert Kytka was on hand with his microscope and photographs. After much talk on the part of the attorneys he was qualified. One could easily judge from the preceding the room that instead of the storm that we would like to see raging outdoors a different kind of one was brewing indoors. The morning was spent in the necessary details incident to introducing expert testimony on handwriting. Mr. Kytka has been engaged in a large number of notable cases.

At the afternoon session the courtroom was filled with spectators attracted both by interest in the case and a desire to hear expert Kytka who is cool and collected under all circumstances. The storm that had been threatening all morning broke forth in all its fury. The stentorian tones of Judge Ounniing could have drowned the rattle of Mansecre. The slow deliberate but none the less firm and emphatic speech of District Attorney Hudner could be distinctly heard. The resolute air of Lawyer Tompkins was marked, notwithstanding his courteous manners. Counsel Briggs was silent but alert and busy as ever. Matters became so hot at times that we thought the lawyers were wearing asbestos gloves to protect their hands from the heat of argument.

The dignified, firm and polished decisions of Judge Dooling would ever and anon pour oil over the troubled waters but the storm would break out anew. The spectators were interested in it all and particularly in the verbal contest between Mr. Kytka and Judge Cunning, whose opinions were leagues from agreement.

After a very warm discussion matters quieted down while the attorneys were making comparison of the exhibits. In the midst of the calm the ringing of a church bell, reminding one of "Love your neighbor as yourself," could be heard. Judge Dooling remarked "This sounds peaceful."

After a little more desultory firing of objections and motions Expert Kytka was allowed to proceed peacefully. Mr. Kytka takes the same word from each of the admitted and disputed exhibits and writes it on the blackboard, shows the similarities of the letters noting the personal peculiarities of the penmanship. After the demonstration the letters are submitted to the jurymen to be examined by a powerful lens. The process is a very tedious one but nevertheless one can gain a great deal of information from his talk. Mr. Kytka finished his testimony at 2.15 and court adjourned until Monday morning.

The attendance on Thursday and Friday was not as good as on previous days.

People vs. Mansfield.

The tenth day of this trial went on in the Superior Court, Monday. Mr. D. T. Ames, the famous expert, was the first witness called. He testified that he had been a witness in thirty-two States, Canada and Great Britain, and had also rendered an opinion in the famous Dreyfus case. He occupied the greater part of the day in demonstrating that the disputed writings, the anonymous letters and the grand jury writings were all made by the same person. In comparing the capital letter "E" in the grand jury writing with the capital letter "E" in the Conrad letter, he stated that it was beyond the realm of probability that any two persons could make the same identical peculiar "E." The witness stated emphatically that the writings were all made by the same person. Counsel for defense did not make the cross-examination very lengthy. The witness is evidently a master of his science, and was extremely logical and convincing in his explanations of penmanship in all its branches.

On Tuesday, Carl Eisenheimel, the writing expert of San Francisco, occupied the stand. He testified that he had made an exhaustive study of the genuine and disputed writings, and from that had reached the opinion that they were all made by the same hand. Eisenheimel called attention to many points in the different exhibits. Upon cross-examination he became slightly rattled and refused to answer the question as to whether a person using a disguised hand usually wrote a better or worse hand than in ordinary writing. The Court, however, insisted that he answer. He stated that his opinion was based solely upon the examination he had made of the papers, and did not depend upon the amount of fee he was to receive.

Wednesday morning E. E. Bolton was recalled, to prove that defendant had stated before the grand jury that she usually or invariably came to town on Saturdays; also that she had never trusted Mrs. Conrad, in fact had no use for her.

S. R. Canfield and Andrew McKenna, members of the grand jury, followed in corroboration of Bolton's testimony. The latter also stated that Mrs. M. said Mrs. Wagner had told her the letters came from a Rebekah.

Mrs. Chas. H. Wagner testified that she had never stated to Mrs. M that the letters came from a Rebekah; that she did tell her it was rumored that they might have come from the Halls; that she had heard Mrs. Mansfield say Mrs. Conrad was a busybody; never heard her say anything serious about Mrs. Conrad.

Upon cross-examination, witness stated that the Halls were Rebekahs at the time and occasion referred to.

The testimony of A. D. Shaw as to statements made by Mrs Mansfield before the grand jury closed the case for the prosecution.

The defendant called as her first witness:

James A. Bowen, who qualified as an expert on penmanship and handwriting. After taking the stand, Mr. Bowen requested time to make a comparison of the writings and the Court adjourned to Thursday morning for that purpose.

Thursday morning the various anonymous letters were read and submitted to the jury.

Mrs. Mansfield was then called by the defense and identified three envelopes addressed by her several years ago. Also 4 pages of the back part of an account book and a small memorandum book, as in her handwriting for 8 or 9 years past. The Dist. Atty. was inclined to believe the book spurious, and cross-examined the defendant vigorously about each item. The defendant evaded the fixing of any date by "I don't remember". The papers were however, admitted, the District Atty. reserving the right to attack their genuineness later on.

J. A. Bowen then took the stand and stated after a careful comparison, he had found that the grand jury writings and the anonymous letters were not written by the same person. He then proceeded to give the particular degree of slant of every letter in certain recurring words.

Mr. Bowen will be on the stand again this morning, and will be followed by Edw. Halsey, an expert of San Jose.

Ap 20/1900 Advance

The Mansfield Case.

The argument in this case closed on the nineteenth day of the trial, and the case was submitted to the jury at 11 o'clock Friday morning. The instructions of the Court were taken entirely from the statutes, and were as impartial as lawmakers could devise. At noon the jury was taken by Sheriff Croxon to the McMahon House for dinner. Upon the return to the jury room R. G. Norton was elected foreman, and a ballot was taken which resulted in 10 to 2 in favor of acquittal. A second ballot made the verdict unanimous. Upon the announcement of the verdict by Clerk Piratsky there was a hysterical scene between the defendant and her relatives and friends. The verdict was a popular one, as the defendant seemed to have universal sympathy. The two remaining indictments will probably be dismissed.

JURY ACQUITS MRS. MANSFIELD OF LIBEL.

Hollister Trial Results in the Exoneration of the Alleged Defamer of Mrs. Conrad.

HOLLISTER, April 13.—After a trial lasting nineteen days the Mansfield libel case came to a conclusion this afternoon. The jury, after balloting twice, brought in a verdict of not guilty. When the verdict was read Mrs. Mansfield collapsed, and amid hysterical shrieking was borne from the courtroom to the corridor, where numerous women friends assisted in bringing her back to consciousness, which was accomplished after an hour's hard work. The trial was bitterly fought on both sides, and feeling ran very high between the partisans of Mrs. Conrad and Mrs. Mansfield. The arguments occupied the greater part of two days. It is thought that the defendant's hitherto excellent character greatly influenced the jury in their verdict. Judge Dooling receives much commendation for his impartial rulings during the trial and his instructions to the jury. There are two more indictments against Mrs. Mansfield, but what disposition will be made of them is not yet known.

When the verdict was announced there was an outburst of applause from the crowded courtroom, which Judge Dooling sternly suppressed. The defendant was overwhelmed with congratulations from friends, and triumphantly escorted home. Out of this trial much ill feeling in the community has been engendered, and it is rumored that the matter will now be carried into several of the local lodges. It is the wish of the conservative element of the people that the whole matter be dropped and further proceedings abandoned.

SCO CALL, SATURDAY.

MRS. MANSFIELD ACQUITTED OF LIBEL CHARGE

Scene in the Courtroom When the Verdict Was Announced.

Women Rushed Forward and Hugged Her, the Jurymen and All Connected With the Defendant's Side.

Special Dispatch to The Call

HOLLISTER, April 13.—The Mansfield case went to the jury this morning after a trial lasting twenty-two days. After two hours' deliberation a verdict of not guilty was returned. Two other indictments against the defendant for the publication of anonymous letters will probably be dropped.

When N. C. Briggs commenced the closing argument for the State the large courtroom was packed from bar to gallery with ladies, whose sympathy was openly expressed for the defendant. So open was this that thunders of applause greeted the defendant's counsel's remarks and brought forth a vigorous threat from Judge Dooling to fine every offender. So confident were these ladies that the jury would acquit that many brought their lunch and made a sort of indoor picnic in the hall of justice. The summary of the case by Mr. Briggs was pitiless in the solid array of facts and circumstances, each pointing unerringly to the guilt of the defendant. As each link of the chain was forged apprehension took possession of the multitude lest the jury should be swayed by the remorseless finger of the clearest kind of circumstantial evidence. Yet while the woman's guilt was apparently made clear, all hoped and prayed for acquittal.

After two hours' deliberation the jury returned with their verdict, and as the words "not guilty" fell from the trembling lips of Clerk Piratsky the defendant gave a shriek and fell limp into the arms of her husband. Then ensued one of the most remarkable scenes on record. Women who had waited for hours fell on the Mansfields, husband and wife, and hugged each alternately and then took turns hugging each other. Each member of the jury was hugged by the old ladies who had watched continually every phase of the trial, and it was some time before the burly Sheriff could extricate the jurymen so that the court could perform its duty and discharge them. But two ballots were taken, the first 10 to 2 for acquittal.

The District Attorney has been severely criticized for the expense caused the county, but it is money well spent. The person who writes anonymous letters in this county hereafter will do it with the knowledge that he will get a legal run for his money.

BOHEN RETIRED AND SEYMOUR SLATED

CAPTAIN JOHN F. SEYMOUR.

THE Police Commissioners met as a pension board yesterday afternoon and formally retired Captain of Detectives Bohen, Detective Ray Silvey, Sergeants Shields and Lindheimer and Policemen Daniel Coleman, Dan McNeil and John Morton. Physical disability was given as the cause of their retirement.

Captain John Seymour, who has been in charge of the City Prison for some time, will succeed Bohen. Seymour has been connected with the department for a number of years and is considered one of the shrewdest detectives in the country. His cleverness in fastening the brutal murders of Blanche Lamont and Minnie Williams on Theodore Durrant, who was afterward hanged for his bloody work, won for him the plaudits of not only the Police Commissioners but the community at large. It was also through his efforts that Becker, Creegan and Deane, three of the most successful forgers that ever operated in this city, were brought to justice. After securing $22,000 from the Nevada Bank on a forged check the clever trio went East, but were pursued by Seymour and finally captured. Becker, who was known as the king of forgers, and Creegan are now serving terms in the penitentiary for the bold crime. Deane turned State's evidence and was given his liberty. Seymour was also responsible for the conviction of Mrs. Botkin for the murder of Mrs. Dunning, and Albert Hoff, who foully killed Mrs. Clute in her home on Guerrero street. They both received life sentences for their crimes. He also ran down and captured W. K. Melville, the defaulting bank cashier.

The new captain of detectives was appointed a member of the force in May, 1884, and on account of his strict attention to duty he was shortly afterward promoted to the rank of corporal. Recognizing his ability, ex-Chief Crowley appointed him a detective a few years later. Since then Seymour has been engaged on the most important cases in the history of the Police Department. His promotion as chief of detectives will be formally announced at the meeting of the Police Commissioners to-night.

Detective Silvey, retired, has been in the service for twenty-six years. He has many notable captures to his credit, among them being the arrest of Sidney Bell, murderer and all-round crook, Stage Robber Sharp, Hedgepeth, notorious train robber, and Root and Shack, burglars. The latter were captured by Silvey and ex-Detective Cox after they had committed over thirty-five burglaries in one month. When taken into custody the pair had over $14,000 in their possession, which was the proceeds of their numerous crimes.

Silvey prior to being disabled was considered one of the ablest men in the department. He knew every pickpocket and it is said of him that he landed more "dips" in the penitentiary than any other officer. His successor will be Tom Ryan, the clever detective of the Southern station.

Ryan has been on the force for eleven years and is regarded as one of the shrewdest detectives in the country. In conjunction with Edward O'Dea, who is also slated for promotion, Ryan has made a number of important arrests. His record of arrests and property recovered far exceeds that of any other member of the department. His recent capture of Collins, the Seattle bank robber, and Bergen, who had been systematically stealing gold from the Mint, convinced Chief of Police Sullivan that he was worthy of promotion.

Ryan was warmly congratulated by Captain Spillane and the officers of the Southern station when his promotion was announced. It is expected that at the meeting of the Commissioners to-night Chief Sullivan will submit a list of the men who in his judgment are incapable of doing police duty. This will be particularly aimed at the upper office.

8 TOWN TALK

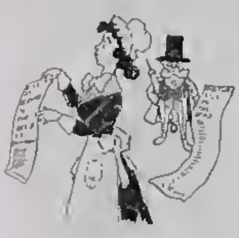
Money not Always a Blessing

The heiresses of the late Jacob Z. Davis do not find the possession of unlimited wealth an unalloyed delight, I understand. First they had to go through the valley of the shadow of a will contest, and since then they have been beset by bills that should never have been brought against the estate. The heiresses are Mrs. John M. Curtis and Miss Elizabeth Muir. They live in Post street, in the old Davis house, and they would be free from life's slings and arrows if it were not for mercenary minded doctors and other annoyances.



First, there was the account of ten thousand dollars filed against the estate by a woman physician who attended the late Mrs. Jacob Z. Davis. The woman doctor had pleaded to be allowed to serve Mrs. Davis in her professional capacity, and had said her desire was inspired out of pure friendship. Therefore, when Mrs. Davis died her husband out of gratitude gave the physician three thousand dollars, for her friendly services. However, no sooner had Mr. Davis been laid beneath the sod when his heirs were sent an account for ten thousand dollars from the medico woman for services rendered. The heirs refused to pay and the woman brought suit for the amount. Besides this, they were asked to pay four thousand dollars to another physician, for consultation or some such service.

During Mrs. Davis' illness, her physician prescribed for her apple juice and beef juice as a means of sustenance. The apples were squeezed through one machine and the beef through another, and the professional nurse was very careful not to mix the squeezers. But one day, she happened to be out when sustenance was required and the servant girl was asked to attend to the job. She made a mistake in the machines, and trying to press heavy beef through the more delicate apparatus a piece of iron flew up and hit her in the eye. It destroyed the sight of the organ, I am told, but Mr. Davis had everything possible done for her. He paid her doctor's and oculist's bills, and also assisted her largely in a financial way. Yet this servant, when Mr. Davis died, came to the fore with a suit for three thousand dollars personal damages against the millionaire's heirs.

BURYING A FORGERY.

End of the Famous Old Von Tiedeman Case in Judge Belcher's Court.

The old Christy-Von Tiedeman forgery case was finally buried in Judge Belcher's court yesterday by the issuing of an order quieting title to the property in the Richmond district which was mentioned in the forged deed.

The suit was brought by Harriet P. Christy against Horace George Pratt, Alonzo Thayer and the fictitious Harriet P. Christy, who were the ones who floated the forged deed. She prayed that the forged deed be set aside and that she be declared the sole owner of the property affected.

Lee D. Craig, the notary before whom the deed was sworn to, told the story of how the woman representing herself to be Harriet P. Christy came before him and swore to the deed conveying the property to Pratt and Thayer, and then Mrs. Christy told of the after events by which the forgery was discovered.

SAN BENITO ADVANCE

HOLLISTER, CAL., APR. 20, 1900

GEO. E. SHAW, - - - PROPRIETOR

County Official Paper.

Senseless Knocking.

The trial of the Mansfield libel case, which ended Friday in the Superior Court, developed an amount of "knocking" that would indicate the possession of mentality of meager calibre by the thrifty element of this community. This disagreeable trait developed early in the trial, and continued with unabated rigor until its close, and will perhaps continue until the incident of the anonymous letters is legally closed. The wildest kind of stories concerning the expense to the county have been floated, many of them by persons who knew better, but preferred falsehood to truth, and by others who seek to trim their sails to every freshening breeze. To begin with, this trial was initiated by a grand jury, men of fair mind selected from near and remote parts of the county. After a patient, searching investigation, nineteen of these men decided that the facts ascertained by them warranted an accusation against the person accused. Having found indictment, it became the duty of the District Attorney to prosecute the indictments to trial, and to the lasting credit of Mr. Hudner, be it said he performed his plain simple duty, faithfully and well. It is not every District Attorney that can stand up to the rack against a manufactured public sentiment, but in this instance every fact or circumstance that could throw any light on the transaction, was laid before the tri l jury without fear or favor. It may as well be understood now, as at any time that when grand juries arrive at a conclusion that warrants indictment, such indictment carries with it the order for trial, no matter who the District Attorney may be. It is not within the province of any prosecuting officer to set aside the solemn finding of nineteen citizens unless their be legal flaws in their proceedings.

Upon the question of expense, this county has been singularly free from the cost of expensive criminal trials. Nearly two years had elapsed since a criminal trial had occurred in the Superior Court, against an expense that is constant and enormous in neighboring counties. The total expense of the Mansfield trial barely reached $1600, and sober reflection will convince any fair minded citizen that this money has been wisely expended. Hereafter the person that puts pen to an anonymous letter, can do so with the knowledge, that if detected, he will be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law. This anonymous letter business has been a crying evil in this county for some years past, and if a stop is now put to it, who can say that the result has not been cheaply obtained.

Courts, however, are erected and maintained for the protection of the people, alike for the poverty-stricken and the heaviest tax-payer. Even, had the expense been ten-fold, the woman who is anonymously accused of wrong, the man whose sacred feelings are outraged, the children whose natural ties are trampled upon and held up to ignominy, are entitled to the protection that citizenship or residence beneath the American flag guarantees them. And the thrifty soul who would deny it to them, would be among the first to involve the county in expense, if some neighbor's horse trespassed upon his grain, or some estray cow broke a few pickets in his fence. If the question of punishing crime is to become a matter of expense, then let every wronged person become his own defender, and vindicate himself and family with the contents of a shotgun. It is to prevent such a state of affairs, however, that Courts are instituted, and around the humblest citizen, is thrown the mantel of protection. Only the guilty have any fear of submitting to the jurisdiction of a Court, the process of which is open alike to accused and accuser. The question of expense has no place in the temple of justice. Better that the country should be bankrupted than that the meanest, most contemptible of crimes should go without investigation, and the criminal allowed to continue unwhipped of justice in the most nefarious of practices.

In this particular case the trial jury was undoubtedly swayed by public sentiment, openly and publicly manifested. Nor is it the first time that such has been the case in this community.

Public sentiment or clamor should have naught to do with the juror who enters a jury box with a solemn oath to do his duty.

"RIGI"

PHOTO BY KYTKA

Mar 8 1900 Chron

Democrat

WOODLAND, CALIFORNIA, TUESDAY EVENING, MAY 22, 1900.

DEFEAT FOR THE DELGER ESTATE.

ITS DEMURRER FAILS TO LAMPING'S CLAIM.

AN ANSWER WILL NOW HAVE TO BE RETURNED TO HIS SUIT.

Another Chapter of Litigation in Which an Ex-Confidential Agent Is Accused of Forgery.

Oakland Branch Office of the "Chronicle," 1151 Broadway, corner Ninth street.

OAKLAND, May 7.—The attorneys for the Delger estate were unable to-day to knock out by means of a demurrer the claim of J. J. Lamping which he backs up with a purported promissory note which he claims the late Frederick Delger gave him, not only as a reward for faithful service, but in consideration that he would not for a certain specified time engage in the employment of any one save Delger.

The matter came up to-day in Judge Ogden's department of the Superior Court on motion to strike out certain features of Lamping's complaint. The greater part of the day was spent in argument, and several paragraphs of the complaint were stricken out. This disposed of, the demurrer of the Delger attorneys was considered, the attorneys making an extended argument, but it was overruled, and answer will now have to be made to Lamping's suit.

The litigation was commenced early in last year by an action on the part of Matilda Brown and E. F. Delger as executors of the estate and against Lamping to restrain him from offering the note for sale or in any way negotiating it, claiming that if the note was ever signed by the late Frederick Delger, it was done by a mistake, while in another clause of the complaint it was alleged that the signature was a forgery. The Court was asked to have the note declared a forgery and canceled.

Lamping won in this preliminary skirmish, and when the note became due he instituted a suit to collect it. He had in the meantime presented his claim against the estate. This claim was in March of last year rejected by E. F. Delger, one of the executors, but the point was made to-day by William R. Davis, the attorney for Lamping, that the claim had never been rejected by Mrs. Brown, the other executor, and that for aught the Court might know, she held the claim to be a valid one.

Lamping claims that Frederick Delger, by whom he was employed for many years in the capacity of confidential agent, presented him with the note on consideration that Lamping continue in the future, as he had in the past, in the employ of Delger. The note was given shortly after the time, Lamping claims, when he had negotiated the purchase of property at the corner of Fourth and Market streets in San Francisco, and had made a bargain which was worth at least $50,000 to Delger, the amount invested being over a quarter of a million dollars.

Metcalf & Metcalf and H. A. Powell, attorneys for the Delger estate, ridicule this statement, and the charge is made that the Lamping note is a rank forgery and that it has been so pronounced by a number of handwriting experts to whom it has been submitted. Lamping on the other hand insists that it is genuine and says he will demonstrate the truth of his statement in the courts. A hotly contested legal battle is almost a certainty, as both sides are amply supplied with money to carry on the litigation, and furthermore, are convinced that they are certain of victory.

THE JOHNS NOTE.

Trial of an Alleged Forgery Case Commenced.

Experts Kytka and Eisenschimel on the Witness Stand Most of the Time Today.

The contest over the John estate was commenced this morning. There was a formidable array of counsel, but there were few people in the courtroom, other than those interested in the case.

Miss Mary Gregory was the only one present interested on the side of the executors. Tandy Allen, of the contestants, was also present, but Mrs. Friel was not there. Young Allen's father and uncle were also interested spectators.

Neither of the executors was present. J. C. Ball, A. A. DeLigne and Hiram Johnson were present as counsel for the contestants. N. A. Hawkins, W. H. Grant and Grove L. Johnson represented the executors. There were also present in the courtroom, D. P. Ames, an expert in handwriting, for the executors, and Experts Theodore Kytka and Carl Eisenschimel, who will testify for the contestants.

In order to understand the proceedings in this case a brief history of it is necessary. G. W. Johns died in November, 1898. He left a will naming his daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth Gregory, and her son, Geo. W. Gregory, as executors without bonds. By the terms of his will, property of the probable value of $100,000 was to be distributed equally among his children. No provision was made for Miss Mary Gregory and her brother, George W., grandchildren of the deceased. In June of the following year a note purporting to be executed by deceased in favor of Mary and George W. Gregory was presented and allowed by Mrs. Gregory, one of the executors, and after hearing testimony, the court approved the allowance of the claim.

On February 9, 1900, Tandy Allen, a grandson of the deceased, and Polly Ann Nancy Friel began a contest, disputing the claim, alleging that its allowance was fraudulent and the signature to the note a forgery. They also presented a petition asking the removal of the executors. The court made an order suspending the powers of the executors until the question of the genuineness of the signature of the note is determined, and appointing J. D. Lawson special administrator.

That was the status of the case when court convened this morning.

Judge Grant stated that Geo. W. Gregory and wife are detained at home on account of a very sick child. Their testimony may be necessary and it may not be. It may be necessary later to ask for a continuance until their attendance can be secured, but no continuance is asked at this time. Judge Gaddis stated that he had notified attorneys on both sides that the testimony must all be in by next Saturday night. If the taking of testimony is not concluded by that time the case will have to go over until September, or to suit his convenience.

On motion of Judge J. C. Ball Hiram Johnson was entered as counsel for the contestants. On motion of N. A. Hawkins W. H. Grant and Grove L. Johnson were entered as associate counsel for the executors of the estate.

Judge Grant, Hiram Johnson and Grove L. Johnson made an argument in regard to the method of procedure. The point at issue seemed to be the advantage of the opening and closing argument. Attorneys for the executors claimed the right to present the claim as allowed by the court. Upon the contestants would rest the burden of proving that the claim is not a just or legal one, but that does not give them the right to close. The executors occupy the affirmative because they must make a prima facie case, showing that the claim had been presented and allowed by the executors and the court.

The court held that it is incumbent that the petitioners should open and ... numbered by the clerk.

The first witness called was Expert Kytka. Mr. De Ligne conducted the examination. After the preliminary questions were asked and answered Mr. Kytka was handed the original note, which he identified. He then presented negatives of photographs of the note and all the various signatures of the deceased which had been offered as exhibits. These negatives were numbered from 53 to 57 inclusive. The witness next produced all the prints made from the negatives. Mr. Johnson objected to their introduction on the ground that the executors had not been furnished with a copy. The objection was overruled and Mr. Johnson noted an exception.

Witness next introduced a screen showing the enlarged signatures of deceased, one supposed to have been written June 30, 1898, one on July 7th and another July 26th of the same year. The signature of July 7th is the note signature. The same signatures were exhibited on glass or porcelain.

Counsel for the executor objected to the introduction of these exhibits on the ground that the originals are the best evidence. The court overruled the objection, and an exception was noted. Witness explained the process of reproducing these photographs on various scales and claimed that they are exact copies.

Counsel for contestants wanted to withdraw witness for the present, to be recalled again as an expert in handwriting. Counsel for contestants objected, but the objection was overruled and another exception was noted. There was no cross-examination.

Expert Eisenschimel was next called. He testified that he had examined all the various exhibits and concluded that the signature to the note is a broad, clumsy forgery. He came to that conclusion because the signature shows none of the natural habits of the handwriting of the deceased. It contains not less than thirty-five indisputable points going to prove it a forgery. He found evidences of tracing in the heavy down strokes. Witness illustrated some of his methods of making examinations by blackboard drawings. He used a glass photograph for making examinations. Witness explained that three special strokes of the pen, in a changed position, were made to give the first downward stroke in the letter W the desired length. He said Mr. Johns wrote his signature, while the forgerer or simulator drew the signature. No man can write his signature twice alike, but there are certain characteristics found in all signatures written by the same person. Witness then analyzed the signature, claiming that from beginning to end it showed none of the permanent habits of the signatures written by the deceased. Witness claimed that certain portions of J and O had been erased with a rubber. Before the expert's testimony was concluded the court ordered a recess until 1:30 o'clock.

At the afternoon session Mr. Eisenschimel again occupied the witness stand. He resumed his statement by correcting some errors in his testimony given in the morning. He concluded that it was impossible for G. W. Johns to have signed the note on account of one permanent habit. In all the signatures that are admitted to be genuine there are evidences of labored effort due to palsy, and these evidences are more palpable as the signatures progress, on account of loss of control of the nerves.

The witness focused a microscope upon the base of the letter W to show the three distinct divisions in finishing the first down stroke. He caused a ripple of laughter by remarking that it was very plain—to those who wanted to see. He criticised Expert Ames' position in attempting to look through the microscope. He said he persisted in standing in his own light, as though he did not wish to see.

During the course of the examination Judge Grant remarked that these divisions were too fine for his eye. "Yes, they are fine," replied Mr. Eisenschimel, "but it is a part of the duty of the expert to find them. Those who do not want to see them can shut one eye and sometimes both."

Mr. Johnson conducted the cross-examination. He requested the witness to put the S in exhibit 44 under the microscope. Mr. Johnson requested witness to say whether there is any difference in the fluency in the letter S in and put both under the microscope for the purpose of showing the difference in the efforts of producing them.

Witness said it made no difference in the appearance of writing on account of the pen or ink used, but the character of the paper might make some difference. No matter what the difficulties are under which a writer signs his name the characteristics of the writer will always crop out.

Witness explained that the signature to the note was made by tracing. A paper containing a genuine signature was procured and over this the note was laid and the tracing made.

Mr. Johnson concluded his cross-examination by asking if the health of the writer, the age, his condition as to having taken recent violent exercise made any difference as to the appearance of the writing. The witness answered yes as a general proposition.

The court ordered a recess of fifteen minutes.

Chr May 23

SAID TO BE A FORGERY.

Contest Over a Ten Thousand Dollar Note at Woodland.

WOODLAND, May 22.—The Johns note contest is in progress in the Superior Court, Judge E. E. Gaddis presiding. Certain heirs of the estate of the late G. W. Johns are attacking the validity of a $10,000 note purported to have been made by the deceased in favor of Mary and George Gregory, the latter of whom is an executor of the estate. To-day's session was taken up with the testimony of Eisenschimel and Kytka, expert handwriting witnesses, the former of whom declared the note a "clumsy forgery."

Call May 23

EXPERTS TESTIFY THAT FORGERY WAS DONE

Special Dispatch to The Call.

WOODLAND, May 22.—A sensational case was commenced in the Superior Court here to-day. It involves the moral character and the integrity of people who have heretofore borne a good reputation in Colusa and Yolo counties as well as the disposition of a large slice of the estate of an old resident who died in Woodland in November, 1898, and who left an estate of the probable value of $100,000.

When G. W. Johns died he named Mrs. Elizabeth Gregory, his daughter, and her son, George W. Gregory, as executors without bonds. He directed that his property be divided in equal shares among his children. No provision was made in the will for his grandchildren, George W. Gregory and his sister, Mary Gregory. In June of the following year a note for $10,000 purporting to have been executed by the deceased in favor of these grandchildren was presented as a claim against the estate and allowed by Mrs. Gregory, one of the executors, and after hearing testimony the court approved.

On February 9, 1901, Tandy Allen, a grandson of the deceased, and Mrs. Polly Ann Nancy Friel, a sister of deceased, began a contest, disputing the claim, alleging that its allowance was fraudulent and the signature to the note a forgery. They also presented a petition asking the removal of the executors. The court made an order suspending the powers of the executors until the question of the genuineness of the note is determined and appointed J. D. Lawson special administrator. Since that time experts have been making examinations for both sides and distinguished counsel has been engaged by both the executors and the contestants. When court convened this morning W. H. Grant and Grove L. Johnson were entered as associate counsel on motion of N. A. Hawkins, attorney for the executors, and Judge Ball and A. A. de Ligne had Hiram Johnson entered as counsel for contestants. Theodore Kytka and Carl Eisenschimel, experts for the contestants, were on the witness stand nearly all day. Both testified with much positiveness that the signature to the note is a very clumsy forgery. Mr. Johnson conducted a long cross-examination. D. T. Ames, another expert, will testify for the executors.

Record Union May 23 - 1900

Johns Note Case.

WOODLAND, May 22—The Johns note contest case is in progress in the Superior Court to-day, Judge E. E. Gaddis presiding. Certain heirs of the estate of G. W. Johns, deceased, are attacking the validity of a $10,000 note purported to have been made by the deceased in favor of Mary and George Gregory, the latter of which is an executor of the estate. To-day's session was taken up with the testimony of [illegible] Eisenschimel and Kitka, th[illegible] handwriting witnesses, the f[illegible] whom declared the note a forgery. The executors have Mr. Ames as a writing expert. He will testify to-morrow.

Case Commenced.

Experts Kytka and Eisenchimel on the Witness Stand Most of the Time Today.

The contest over the John estate was commenced this morning. There was a formidable array of counsel, but there were few people in the courtroom, other than those interested in the case.

Miss Mary Gregory was the only one present interested on the side of the executors. Tandy Allen, of the contestants, was also present, but Mrs. Friel was not there. Young Allen's father and uncle were also interested spectators.

Neither of the executors was present. J. C. Ball, A. A. DeLigne and Hiram Johnson were present as counsel for the contestants. N. A. Hawkins, W. H. Grant and Grove L. Johnson represented the executors. There were also present in the courtroom, D. P. Ames, an expert in handwriting, for the executors, and Experts Theodore Kytka and Carl Eisenschimel, who will testify for the contestants.

In order to understand the proceedings in this case a brief history of it is necessary. G. W. Johns died in November, 1898. He left a will naming his daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth Gregory, and her son, Geo. W. Gregory, as executors without bonds. By the terms of his will, property of the probable value of $100,000 was to be distributed equally among his children. No provision was made for Miss Mary Gregory and her brother, George W., grandchildren of the deceased. In June of the following year a note purporting to be executed by deceased in favor of Mary and George W. Gregory was presented and allowed by Mrs. Gregory, one of the executors, and after hearing testimony, the court approved the allowance of the claim.

On February 9, 1900, Tandy Allen, a grandson of the deceased, and Polly Ann Nancy Friel began a contest, disputing the claim, alleging that its allowance was fraudulent and the signature to the note a forgery. They also presented a petition asking the removal of the executors. The court made an order suspending the powers of the executors until the question of the genuineness of the signature of the note is determined, and appointing J. D. Lawson special administrator.

That was the status of the case when court convened this morning.

Judge Grant stated that Geo. W. Gregory and wife are detained at home on account of a very sick child. Their testimony may be necessary and it may not be. It may be necessary later to ask for a continuance until their attendance can be secured, but no continuance is asked at this time. Judge Gaddis stated that he had notified attorneys on both sides that the testimony must all be in by next Saturday night. If the taking of testimony is not concluded by that time the case will have to go over until September, or to suit his convenience.

On motion of Judge J. C. Ball Hiram Johnson was entered as counsel for the contestants. On motion of N. A. Hawkins W. H. Grant and Grove L. Johnson were entered as associate counsel for the executors of the estate.

Judge Grant, Hiram Johnson and Grove L. Johnson made an argument in regard to the method of procedure. The point at issue seemed to be the advantage of the opening and closing argument. Attorneys for the executors claimed the right to present the claim as allowed by the court. Upon the contestants would rest the burden of proving that the claim is not a just or legal one, but that does not give them the right to close. The executors occupy the affirmative because they must make a prima facie case, showing that the claim had been presented and allowed by the executors and the court.

The court held that it is incumbent that the petitioners should open and close the case. Attorneys for the executors noted an exception to the ruling.

Mr. De Ligne offered in evidence the note, which he desired marked exhibit "A." He announced that in all there were 52 exhibits, including checks, agreements, receipts, leases, mortgages, etc. These were read and the deceased which had been offered as exhibits. These negatives were numbered from 53 to 57 inclusive. The witness next produced all the prints made from the negatives. Mr. Johnson objected to their introduction on the ground that the executors have not been furnished with a copy. The objection was overruled and Mr. Johnson noted an exception.

Witness next introduced a screen showing the enlarged signatures of deceased, one supposed to have been written June 30, 1898, one on July 7th and another July 26th of the same year. The signature of July 7th is the note signature. The same signatures were exhibited on glass or porcelain.

Counsel for the executor objected to the introduction of these exhibits on the ground that the originals are the best evidence. The court overruled the objection, and an exception was noted. Witness explained the process of reproducing these photographs on various scales and claimed that they are exact copies.

Counsel for contestants wanted to withdraw witness for the present, to be recalled again as an expert in handwriting. Counsel for contestants objected, but the objection was overruled and another exception was noted. There was no cross-examination.

Expert Eisenschimel was next called. He testified that he had examined all the various exhibits and concluded that the signature to the note is a broad, clumsy forgery. He came to that conclusion because the signature shows none of the natural habits of the handwriting of the deceased. It contains not less than thirty-five indisputable points going to prove it a forgery. He found evidences of tracing in the heavy down strokes. Witness illustrated some of his methods of making examinations by blackboard drawings. He used a glass photograph for making examinations. Witness explained that three special strokes of the pen, in a changed position, were made to give the first downward stroke in the letter W the desired length. He said Mr. Johns wrote his signature, while the forgerer or simulator drew the signature. No man can write his signature twice alike, but there are certain characteristics found in all signatures written by the same person. Witness then analyzed the signature, claiming that from beginning to end it showed none of the permanent habits of the signatures written by the deceased. Witness claimed that certain portions of J and O had been erased with a rubber. Before the expert's testimony was concluded the court ordered a recess until 1:30 o'clock.

At the afternoon session Mr. Eisenschimel again occupied the witness stand. He resumed his statement by correcting some errors in his testimony given in the morning. He concluded that it was impossible for G. W. Johns to have signed the note on account of one permanent habit. In all the signatures that are admitted to be genuine there are evidences of labored effort due to palsy, and these evidences are more palpable as the signatures progress, on account of loss of control of the nerves.

The witness focused a microscope upon the base of the letter W to show the three distinct divisions in finishing the first down stroke. He caused a ripple of laughter by remarking that it was very plain—to those who wanted to see. He criticised Expert Ames' position in attempting to look through the microscope. He said he persisted in facing in his own light, as though he did not wish to see.

During the course of the examination Judge Grant remarked that these divisions were too fine for his eye. "Yes, they are fine," replied Mr. Eisenschimel, "but it is a part of the duty of the expert to find them. Those who do not want to see them can shut one eye and sometimes both."

Mr. Johnson conducted the cross-examination. He requested the witness to put the S in exhibit 44 under the microscope. Mr. Johnson requested witness to say whether there is any difference in the fluency in the letter S in exhibits 44 and 39. Witness answered that there is no difference. "Where were you born?" asked Mr. Johnson. "In Germany; I am an Austrian by birth, but an American, true as steel," replied witness.

Witness next selected an S in an admitted genuine signature that nearest resembled the S in the note signature, the order in which a writer signs his name the characteristics of the writer will always crop out.

Witness explained that the signature to the note was made by tracing. A paper containing a genuine signature was procured and over this the note was laid and the tracing made.

Mr. Johnson concluded his cross examination by asking if the health of the writer, the age, his condition as to having taken recent violent exercise made any difference as to the appearance of the writing. The witness answered yes as a general proposition.

The court ordered a recess of fifteen minutes.

Chr May 23 ...

SAID TO BE A FORGERY.

Contest Over a Ten Thousand Dollar Note at Woodland.

WOODLAND, May 22.—The Johns note contest is in progress in the Superior Court, Judge E. E. Gaddis presiding. Certain heirs of the estate of the late G. W. Johns are attacking the validity of a $10,000 note purported to have been made by the deceased in favor of Mary and George Gregory, the latter of whom is an executor of the estate. To-day's session was taken up with the testimony of Eisenschimel and Kytka, expert handwriting witnesses, the former of whom declared the note a "clumsy forgery."

Call May 23 1901

EXPERTS TESTIFY THAT FORGERY WAS DONE

Special Dispatch to The Call.

WOODLAND, May 22.—A sensational case was commenced in the Superior Court here to-day. It involves the moral character and the integrity of people who have heretofore borne a good reputation in Colusa and Yolo counties as well as the disposition of a large slice of the estate of an old resident who died in Woodland in November, 1898, and who left an estate of the probable value of $100,000.

When G. W. Johns died he named Mrs. Elizabeth Gregory, his daughter, and her son, George W. Gregory, as executors without bonds. He directed that his property be divided in equal shares among his children. No provision was made in the will for his grandchildren, George W. Gregory and his sister, Mary Gregory. In June of the following year a note for $10,000 purporting to have been executed by the deceased in favor of these grandchildren was presented as a claim against the estate and allowed by Mrs. Gregory, one of the executors, and after hearing testimony the court approved.

On February 9, 1901, Tandy Allen, a grandson of the deceased, and Mrs. Polly Ann Nancy Friel, a sister of deceased, began a contest, disputing the claim, alleging that its allowance was fraudulent and the signature to the note a forgery. They also presented a petition asking the removal of the executors. The court made an order suspending the powers of the executors until the question of the genuineness of the note is determined and appointed J. D. Lawson special administrator. Since that time experts have been making examinations for both sides and distinguished counsel has been engaged by both the executors and the contestants. When court convened this morning W. H. Grant and Grove L. Johnson were entered as associate counsel on motion of N. A. Hawkins, attorney for the executors, and Judge Ball and A. A. de Ligne and Hiram Johnson entered as counsel for contestants. Theodore Kytka and Carl Eisenschimel, experts for the contestants, were on the witness stand nearly all day. Both testified with much positiveness that the signature to the note is a very clumsy forgery. Mr. Johnson conducted a long cross-examination. D. T. Ames, another expert, will testify for the executors.

Record Union May 23 - 1900

Johns Note Case.

WOODLAND, May 22—The Johns note contest case is in progress in the Superior Court to-day, Judge E. R. Addis presiding. Certain heirs of the estate of G. W. Johns, deceased, are attacking the validity of a $10,000 note purported to have been made by the deceased in favor of Mary and George Gregory, the latter of which is an executor of the estate. To-day's session was taken up with the testimony of [illegible] Emenschimel and Kilka, the [illegible] handwriting witnesses, the for[illegible] whom declared the note a forgery. The executors have Mr. Ames as a writing expert. He will testify to-morrow.

BLOWING UP SHAG ROCK, SAN FRANCISCO HARBOR, APRIL 30, 1900.

THE SUNDAY CALL MAGAZINE SECTION
MAY · 6 · 1900

Criminals I have Known

BY CAPTAIN BEN BOHEN

But others joined Borgs, and Rattlesnake Dick's day had come. The widow Harmon, looking from her window, saw him reel in his saddle and fall. The Sher-

THERE are as many different kinds of criminals as there are leaves on a tree. I think I have met most of the grafters in the business during my forty years' service on the San Francisco police force. In looking back over my experiences there are a few figures that stand out clear and distinct from the shadowy mass of crooks and thieves. If they have their prototypes to-day the police are not aware of their existence. Times have changed, and the criminals have changed with them.

I went on the police force in 1860. In all my years of service I never made a memorandum. Blessed with a memory that I have never seen surpassed, I could keep accurate account of places, dates, names, of anything. In fact, without even making a note. Several years ago a severe illness blunted this wonderfully keen memory, and since then names and dates occasionally slip my memory. But there are characters who go to make the most blood-stained pages in our history of crime that to forget were impossible.

Charley Mortimer is one of these. He swung long since on the gallows, but his desperate deeds still live in the minds of the "old guard." I first saw Charley Mortimer in 1861, the year of the flood at Sacramento. Sacramento was inundated and San Francisco was flooded with Sacramento people. We were short on the police and I was completely worn out.

Late one night I stepped into a doorway to rest for a moment. I saw three men, walking single file, Indian style, turn the corner of Jackson and Dupont streets and go up toward Washington. One man I recognized as Conrad Fister, who drove a water supply cart, the other was a soldier and the third unknown to me. The unknown passed the soldier and pressed closer to Fister. I noticed in the dim light that Fister was carrying a small bag. Suddenly the pursuer grabbed him, struck out and Fister fell to the ground. I was ready with a six-shooter, and I piped it to him in the mouth. The thief threw the bag into the street and said "There it is." The game didn't work. Had I stooped for the bag a blow would have laid me out beside Fister.

I tooted my whistle and Jim Bovee came running up from the next beat. "Jim, grab this fellow," I said. "He's a hitter from Hitterville." I started to pick up the bag when Fister rolled over and grabbed me. He was coming to, and mistook me for the thief. Fister would have made an elephant look like a postage stamp, and it wasn't exactly pleasant to bear his weight. When we were disentangled we examined the contents of the bag—$950 rolled up and tied with a string.

Jim and I took the thief to the station, where he gave the name of Charley Mortimer. He was tried before old Judge Blake, and a sound for surprised ears it was to hear Mortimer plead his own case. The evidence against him was complete, but he gave them a speech that got him off with one year at the penitentiary. No blubbering or grand stand play. Mortimer in a simple manly way said he had lost everything he owned at Sacramento, that he was starving here, and not knowing the man was carrying money he had attacked him in the hope of getting provisions. The Judge swallowed this fairy tale.

Mortimer was an exemplary prisoner during his year in the penitentiary. When he was set free he came back here and I saw him frequently, always with a hard crowd. From the first I had made up my mind that Charley Mortimer was a thoroughbred in his line—as bad as they make them. Now in the light of his afterdeeds I realize how richly he deserved it. We watched him pretty closely, but could fasten nothing on him.

One morning we woke up to hear that Charley Wiggins, the Mayor's clerk, had been robbed in broad daylight while yet in bed. Wiggins roomed at the house of a man named West, who lived on Stevenson street. The morning of the robbery a man called at the house and told the servant girl that he wished to go up to Mr. West's room. "I brought him home last night," he added. "Why, sir, you mean Mr. Wiggins," said the girl. The stranger explained that the name West on the doorplate had confused him and walked upstairs into Mr. Wiggins' room. He left Wiggins unconscious and minus all his money and jewelry.

The night before Wiggins had been in a saloon and had casually remarked that he had a sack of money he was going to send home to his parents. Bystanders said a man who answered to Mortimer's description was drinking at the bar at the time, but evidently paid no attention to Wiggins and left immediately.

We could see Mortimer's smooth finger-tracks right through the job. He had heard Wiggins talk and he hung around outside the early morning, when Wiggins left the saloon. Mortimer followed him home, and later in the morning he boldly called, mixed up the names, but landed the money and jewelry all right.

We tried for months to find a trace of Mortimer, but he had completely disappeared. There was a crook named Hoott who offered to lay for him for $100. Hoott was the sort of man who would have murdered a hundred men for that price, providing he didn't have to risk his own miserable neck by so doing.

One night Hoott came to me in great excitement. He had just left Mortimer, who was in a thieves' den, covering a dozen or more crooks with a pistol.

"We didn't recognize him at first," said Hoott, "he had on a pair of green specks. He just stepped into the room and said, 'I've left something in this place and I'm going to get it. I'll shoot the first—man who tries to leave it.' I was near the door and out before he finished saying it," concluded Hoott.

We went to the den, but our bird had flown. Mortimer afterward told me that he heard Hoott had been in the room and knew he had gone to tell me. "Ben," said Mortimer, "if I'd had time that night I'd have waited a little longer, and if you had come up the other side of the street, I think, Ben, my boy, I'd have given you a bullet."

At last we had a clew to Mortimer. The night that William H. Coleman spoke on the old plaza we saw Ellen Brenn in the crowd. Ellen was Mortimer's pal, and we knew he couldn't be far away. Following up the clew we traced Mortimer down to Belmont. A man named Rose went down there to trap him, but Mortimer was the smarter rogue of the two. Rose knew Mortimer had robbed Myers' pawnshop, and Mortimer agreed to show Rose where the booty was buried. He took him out to a protected spot, and while Rose was digging for the treasure Mortimer knocked him senseless.

"We've got to get that fellow, and we'll start right now," Lees said as soon as we heard it. John Connolly, Jim Bovee, Lees and myself boarded an engine and went down there. I was something of a dandy in those days and had a pretty extensive and expensive wardrobe. Well, I had on the best of the lot when Lees tumbled us on that engine. We got off at Belmont and hunted him through the chaparral.

At the first trace of him we separated and I made south and took up guard against a tree, with a six-shooter ready for him, for we thought he had to come that way. I held up that tree all night, and at daybreak made for a roadhouse, kept by a Dutchman, where Mortimer might probably have taken refuge. I knocked at the door, and found the Dutchman, his one eye glaring, standing in the middle of the floor, a revolver in his hand.

"Who let dat?" said the Dutchman.

"The San Francisco police," said I.

"Ach tank Got!" said the Dutchman, and he fell on my neck and blubbered, for he had feared the coming of Mortimer. He gave me a cup of coffee, and I never drank anything in my life that touched the spot like that Dutchman's coffee. I had had a pretty hard day and night of it.

In the meantime Lees and the others had found Hamilton, a pal of Mortimer's, who gave them a tip which afterward proved to be straight. Mortimer had seen us get off the train from the brush where he was hiding with Hamilton. "There's every detective from San Francisco who's worth a rap," he said, "so I'm going back to San Francisco. There are too many of them to shoot and besides, Ben Bohen's dressed to the queen's taste, and I'd hate to spoil his pretty clothes."

Mortimer himself afterward told me that he did make those remarks, and then started for San Francisco, leaving me to "spoil my pretty clothes" in the brush.

Finally he got a fraction of his just deserts in Ukiah. He was arrested for a petty crime and sentenced under the name of Foster, to a year's imprisonment. The first night in jail he broke through, and people used to say that he tore down the jail so that the Sheriff could only find pieces of it in the morning. The posse caught him and brought him back to town. Fortunately, the clerk of the court had not yet written down the sentence, and the Judge changed it from one year to fifteen.

He served his time and as soon as he was out got his hand into practice by killing a woman called French Caroline. Mortimer was not immediately found out for this murder, and unmolested he went to Sacramento. There was a woman called Mrs. Gibson, who kept a liquor shop on the outskirts of the town and sold liquor to Indians. I believe every thief who ever came out of the penitentiary had the idea of killing old Mrs. Gibson and getting the money which she was supposed to have. Mortimer was the man who did it.

She was found dead, and Mortimer, who was boldly going at large, was arrested, handcuffed, and protesting innocence was taken to the cabin. The woman was lying in a pool of blood, one blood-soaked hand clutching a tuft of clotted hair. The Sheriff raised the hand with the tell-tale hair to Mortimer's shaven chin. "That hair will hang you," he said. "You had a beard yesterday."

It did hang him, but not before his brother, who came out here all the way from Massachusetts to break into the jail and rescue him, was shot and killed by the Sheriff.

Mortimer was the worst example of one kind of desperado of the early days. I have related his crimes known to the police, but undoubtedly there were as many more of which we were not aware. He was a murderer and thief, as bad an all-round criminal and as hard a one to catch as ever swung on the gallows.

There was a nobler sort of desperado who stalked this country in the days of old—the stage robber. There was a prince of stage robbers called Rattlesnake Dick and he died as game—but that's anticipating.

Rattlesnake Dick was first seen around Rattlesnake Bar, and that's how he got his nickname. He made up his mind that there was an easier way of getting gold than digging for it, and he took to holding up stages for a living.

Rattlesnake Dick and a fellow stage robber called George Taylor started from Trinity Mountain to hold up a six-mule train loaded with gold. When they came upon the mules they found that others of their ilk had already relieved the animals of their burden of gold.

The posse of men hunting for the thieves and believing them the guilty ones gave them chase and fired at them. Rattlesnake and his companion made their way unharmed through the storm of bullets until they came to old English Ellen's, who kept a road house—and anything else she could get. Here George Taylor drew rein and turning to Rattlesnake Dick said: "Old fellow, we've been shot at by every man we've met since we left Trinity Mountain. I'm sick of it, and I'm going to quit the business." Many a time afterward did Taylor tell me this story.

Rattlesnake Dick picked up a fellow named Sam Beaver. Near the Widow Harmon's they met John Boggs and three deputy sheriffs. Boggs put his hand under his ulster as if to draw a revolver, but in a second three shots rang out from Rattlesnake Dick's six-shooter. One officer fell dead and two were wounded. Rattlesnake Dick dug his spurs into his horse and shouting, "You will never get me in prison while a six-shooter will keep me out," rode swiftly after his retreating comrade.

... joined Boggs, and Rattlesnake Dick's day had come. ... Harmon, looking from her window, saw him reel in his saddle and fall. The Sheriff and his men picked up the dead body of Rattlesnake Dick, shot by his own hand when he saw capture before him. Pinned in his gauntlet they found a slip of paper with these words clearly written: "Rattlesnake Dick dies, but never surrenders, as all true Britons should. If Boggs is dead I'm happy." They also found a letter—a letter which I have to this day—and the most beautiful letter I ever read in my life. It is headed "Home, Sweet Home," and begs him to give up his dishonorable pilfering. It is signed "Your loving sister, Harriet Barter."

I met old John Boggs on the street the other day and we talked over old times. "Rattlesnake Dick was dead game, if he did want to kill me," he said. Boggs told me that his reaching under his linen duster for a weapon was merely a bluff, as he was really unarmed and had met Dick and his companion unexpectedly.

George Taylor, who had quit Dick just before the Boggs affair, was arrested on reaching San Francisco and sent to the penitentiary. His story of leaving Dick was not believed, though it was afterward proven true and Beaver identified as the companion who was with Rattlesnake Dick. Taylor had his own ideas of honor and he never budged an inch from the rule he set down for himself. Many a time when I've asked him to tell me something he'd say: "Ben, I can't do it. I never did give way on anybody and now that I've quit the business I'd be the meanest cur living to do it." If Taylor didn't want to talk he'd frankly tell you so and whatever he did say you could bank on it.

"Ben," said George Taylor to me on the day he came out of the penitentiary, "there is a little woman up in the country who is an angel out of heaven. She hid me once when the Sheriff was hunting me. Her husband's the meanest hound that ever went unwhipped and I've got a mind to go up and kill him." I don't think he did kill him, but I heard that the man died and George married the widow and left the country to begin life over again.

Rattlesnake Dick and George Taylor were two of the best men who ever went into a bad business.

Of all the burglars I have ever met I had the most respect for a fellow named Pete. He was another man who would never give way on a friend or foe. Once only did he give information and then he took me to a place where I captured a crook for whom there was a reward of $250. I offered Pete half, but no amount of persuasion would make him take it. "I'd steal first," said Pete. "I told because he was a sneak who peached on the other boys in the penitentiary and got them beatings they never deserved. But I won't touch the money."

Pete never robbed the poor people. He went in for big steals, but like all his kind, he finally lost his grip. Lees saw him several years ago leaning against a lamppost in St. Louis. He was in the last stages of consumption and his rags were but little protection against the bitter cold. Lees forced $20 into his hand. "I've known the time when I wouldn't have taken this," said Pete, "but the grass is pretty short now."

Now and then criminals reform and walk the straight road for the rest of their lives. I know one man, an ex-thief, who is now a day laborer, making an honest living and is a square, industrious man.

"Sure-thing" gamblers are often liberal fellows with streaks of goodness in their make-up. And the best men I've ever met in my life were straight gamblers. They were honest, would play for any stake, but played square. ... one of the best known gamblers of the early days ... was the most honorable, most generous gambler who ever ... a deck of cards. He was robbed of two thousand dollars and ... the ... of the man who took it. "I know him," he said. "Why?" I asked. "Why," he answered, "then if he had he'd just have ... me for it."

In forty years' experience with criminals I've never met or heard of one who didn't sooner or later reap as he had sown. A criminal is a fool. If he put the same amount of industry, energy and daring into anything else he'd have a long bank account.

"You will never get me in prison while a six-shooter will keep me out."

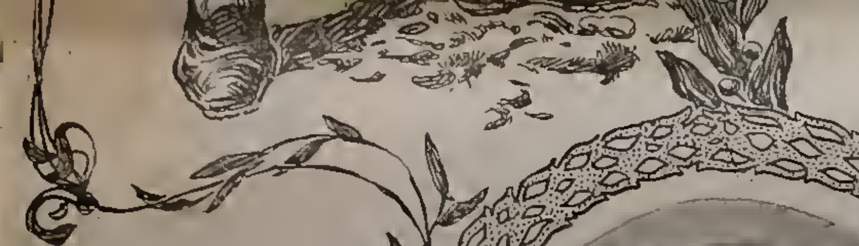
CRACK SHOTS OF CALIFORNIA

JAMES E. GORMAN, PISTOL

CLARENCE NAUMAN, SHOTGUN.

fornia Wing Shooting Club. He began shooting five years ago.

Nauman has won the all-comers' fifty-bird record match on the Empire grounds at Alameda point four times out of six, his best record being 47 out of 50. He won the Olympic Gun Club high average for the season of 1898 and for the season of 1899. He won the State high average at San Jose in 1898 for blue rocks with a record of 90.4 per cent, and again in 1899 at Antioch with a record of 92 2-9 per cent. He holds the Gold Dust medal for live birds, having won it in the season of 1899. He won the high average medal in the Lincoln Gun Club in 1898 and again in 1899. In the State live bird shoot in 1898 he made 94 per cent for the three days' shooting.



ADOLPH STRECKER, RIFLE.

FRANK E. MASON, RIFLE.

M. OTTO FEUDNER, SHOTGUN.

CHARLES M. DAISS PISTOL.

THE LIFE-LONG practical marksmanship of the Boers has made an unmilitary aggregation of farmers a formidable foe for the most skillful and valiant soldiers of Europe. It is a convenient national trait; some time it may be the test of the permanence of this Republic.

In California, where climate and space and game are all incentives to the development of good shots, live some of the best marksmen in America. There are about 3000 men regularly participating in shooting matches in this State. They make up the active list of about thirty rifle clubs, with more than 1500 members; about twenty gun clubs, with about 1000 members, and about ten pistol clubs, with about 500 members. Altogether, these crack shots spend about $300,000 annually for guns and ammunition and other things connected merely with practice and prize shooting. Hunting of game is entirely apart from this, though it concerns some of these and a very large number of lesser shots.

The prospective triennial meeting of the United States Shooting Bund, to be held here for a week about the 4th of July of next year, has rearoused interest in rifle shooting. Five hundred of the best shots in America will be here then, to compete for cash and trophies aggregating $25,000 in value. At the same time the American shooting king will be named, an honor that was won for San Francisco twenty-six years ago by Adolph Strecker, who holds American and world's records, and expects to make a strong try for the greatly coveted title.

Strangely enough, all the very best rifle, gun and pistol shots in the State, and probably on the Pacific Coast, reside at present right here in San Francisco, and all six of the crack shots whose pictures appear on this page have gray eyes, the eye of coolness and steadiness.

Adolph Strecker, expert rifle shot, was born in Zduny, Russian Poland, 49 years ago. He arrived in New York in 1870, and in 1871 came to San Francisco. For twenty-five years he has been senior member of the firm of Strecker & Kern, barbers, on Post street. He is a member of the California Schuetzen Club, which he and Jacobi founded, and of the Golden Gate Rifle and Pistol Club. He is also a member of the Eintracht Verein. He began shooting in September, 1871. For twenty-eight years he has participated in five or six big competitions annually, receiving scores of trophies and cash prizes, none of which he has kept, and he has won the shooting king medal of California fifteen times. Sometimes he did not compete. At other times he was behind with an old muzzle loader. Then he secured a Winchester and again forged to the front. Recently he has been left behind with the out of date Winchester in competition with rivals using the most improved modern Pope barrel, one of which he expects soon to receive from the factory and again assert his claim to leadership.

In 1874, when but 22 years old, Strecker was crowned shooting king of America at the United States Shooting Bund in Baltimore, where he contested with 2000 of the best shots in the whole country. His return to this city was the occasion for an ovation. At Philadelphia, in 1876, he was a member of the American champion rifle team, and he was ahead of all comers for three days in the individual championship and then collapsed physically from an earlier siege of typhoid fever, William Hayes alone beating him out.

When he won the shooting king medal here in 1894 he established the most phenomenal day's shooting record ever made by man, a marvelous score that probably will never be equaled. From all parts of the world have come appeals for the detailed score in that wonderful shoot, but never until now has that world record been presented to the public. He fired 365 consecutive shots in one day from a 14-pound, 32-caliber Winchester rifle, with hair trigger and globe sight, without cleaning it once and without having a single trial shot at the 12-inch target set up 200 yards away. In the 365 shots Strecker hit the very center part, the size of a little butter plate, 69 times, hit in the next ring, the size of a small tea saucer, 149 times; hit the rest of the black or the size of a dinner plate 123 times, and fell just outside the black but 5 times. His 360 shots all lodged in an area scarcely larger than a man's face a block and a half away. Here is the matchless score, 3 meaning within 1½ inches of the needle point center, 2 within 3 inches of the needle, 1 within 6 inches of the needle point, and 0 meaning a rawhorse or off the 12-inch black bullseye:

TICKET.	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10	Total
One	1	1	3	2	[illegible]	[illegible]	1	1	0	1	13
Two	2	1	1	3	1	3	1	0	3	1	16
Three	1	2	1	[illegible]	[illegible]	1	2	1	3	1	15
Four	1	1	[illegible]	2	2	1	[illegible]	2	1	[illegible]	16
Five	3	2	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	3	1	3	1	3	22
Six	[illegible]	2	1	1	1	3	[illegible]	1	[illegible]	1	16
Seven	2	2	3	2	[illegible]	2	1	1	1	2	18
Eight	2	1	1	2	1	2	1	[illegible]	1	3	16
Nine	1	2	2	[illegible]	3	2	1	3	1	[illegible]	21
Ten	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	1	1	2	1	1	2	18
Eleven	1	3	3	1	[illegible]	0	1	1	2	1	15
Twelve	[illegible]	1	[illegible]	2	1	1	1	2	3	1	16
Thirteen	3	[illegible]	2	3	2	[illegible]	[illegible]	1	[illegible]	2	22
Fourteen	2	1	0	1	2	3	1	[illegible]	3	1	16
Fifteen	[illegible]	3	2	2	2	3	1	1	3	1	21
Sixteen	[illegible]	[illegible]	3	[illegible]	3	[illegible]	1	3	1	1	22
Seventeen	3	1	1	[illegible]	2	[illegible]	[illegible]	2	1	1	17
Eighteen	[illegible]	1	3	1	1	1	[illegible]	3	1	1	16
Nineteen	2	1	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	3	[illegible]	[illegible]	1	1	18
Twenty	1	1	[illegible]	3	2	2	3	2	2	3	21
Twenty-one	3	[illegible]	3	[illegible]	3	1	[illegible]	1	1	2	20
Twenty-two	1	2	1	1	1	1	3	[illegible]	3	[illegible]	17
Twenty-three	[illegible]	1	[illegible]	1	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	3	2	3	19
Twenty-four	[illegible]	1	[illegible]	1	1	[illegible]	[illegible]	1	[illegible]	3	21
Twenty-five	[illegible]	1	3	[illegible]	[illegible]	1	[illegible]	3	1	3	20
Twenty-six	1	[illegible]	[illegible]	3	3	[illegible]	3	[illegible]	2	[illegible]	23
Twenty-seven	3	[illegible]	1	[illegible]	[illegible]	3	1	[illegible]	[illegible]	3	25
Twenty-eight	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	1	[illegible]	3	20
Twenty-nine	1	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	3	[illegible]	3	[illegible]	3	18
Thirty	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	3	[illegible]	3	3	1	3	3	23
Thirty-one	3	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	1	[illegible]	[illegible]	23
Thirty-two	1	1	1	[illegible]	[illegible]	3	1	1	3	[illegible]	18
Thirty-three	1	1	2	2	[illegible]	3	1	2	3	2	19
Thirty-four	1	1	2	3	[illegible]	3	2	1	1	2	19
Thirty-five	3	1	1	1	1	1	2	[illegible]	[illegible]	1	15
Thirty-six	3	2	1	2	3	2	2	2	1	1	19
Thirty-seven	1	1	[illegible]	3	2	..	..	..	..	..	9
Total in 365 shots											[illegible]

The record for the first 200 shots of this score was equaled last year by William Hayes and Fred Ross, two Eastern cracks, but they used Pope barrels, had trial shots and took four days to the task.

Frank E. Mason, expert rifle shot, was born in San Francisco forty-five years ago. He is engineer at the Sutter-street Railway Company's power-house. He is a member of the California Schuetzen Club and the Golden Gate Rifle and Pistol Club. He is also a member of the Ancient Order of Workmen. He began shooting four years ago.

Mason holds a record of 2194 rings out of a possible 2500 in a 100-shot match in regular competition. His highest score in practice is 2271 rings out of a possible 2500 in 100 shots, and was made at Shell Mound Park in August, 1899, in a 100-shot match with McLaughlin, and it is probably the greatest score ever made in the United States. The highest ten-shot score ever made at Schuetzen Park, 237 out of a possible 250, was made by Mason. At Shell Mound Park in February, 1900, he tied Rodgers' twenty-shot record of 461 rings out of a possible 500 On Sunday, April 22, 1900, at Shell Mound Park, Mason made in a limit of four rounds of ten shots each the remarkable scores of 226, 226, 227, 226 out of a possible 250 for each ten shots on a twenty-five-ring target at 200 yards, a performance not known to have been equaled in many years anywhere.

M. Otto Feudner, expert with shotgun at live birds and blue rocks, was born in Dixon, Cal., thirty-two years ago. He came to San Francisco six years ago and is a salesman for Clabrough, Golcher & Co., on Market street. He is a member of the California Wing Shooting Club, the Olympic Gun Club, the Lincoln Gun Club, the San Francisco Gun Club and the Empire Gun Club. He is also a high Mason, a member of the Mystic Shrine and of Golden Gate Camp, No. 64, Woodmen of the World. He began shooting at the age of 13, and, like many another country boy, took every possible opportunity to get out early or late and shoot at something. He made his first public appearance when a lad of 16 in a clay-pigeon shoot at Woodland and broke fifty-five straight. He spent three seasons, from 1890 to 1892, in the Behring and Okhotsk seas hunting otter and fur seal, and was shipwrecked on Elizabeth reef, all hands being finally saved.

Feudner's first public appearance here was in the Midwinter Fair shoot. He has competed in practically every meet since then, and has between twenty and twenty-five fine medals. He holds the Coast record of ninety-six out of 100 blue rocks, made April 16, 1896, in wind and rain, and has a special medal for the performance presented by the Olympic Athletic Club. At Wheatland in 1895 at the Native Sons' tournament he broke ninety-seven blue rocks out of 100. At the opening of the Olympic Gun Club grounds as scratch man at thirty-one yards rise he vanquished more than forty opponents and won the F. R Webster silver cup with a score of 17 out of 18. He holds the Marysville Gun Club blue-rock medal that he won in 1897 and permanently won in 1898 with a score of 39 out of 40. He won the Fay diamond medal twice for the live-bird championship of California. In 1896 he killed forty-four live birds straight and won a diamond button, won the Olympic medal in the live-bird championship and the joint high average prize for blue rocks in the Olympic Gun Club. In the five years he has been a member of the California Wing Shooting Club he has won four of its championship medals and one second medal. In the season of 1898 he killed 81 out of 84 live birds in a California Wing Shooting Club match. And in the season of 1899 he killed 95 out of 97 live birds.

Clarence Nauman, expert with shotgun at live birds and blue rocks, was born in San Francisco twenty-three years ago. He travels for the local agency of the Remington Arms Company. He is a member of the Lincoln Gun Club, the Olympic Gun Club, the San Francisco Gun Club and the Cali- [illegible] Gun Club in 1898 and again in 1899. In the State live bird shoot in 1898 he made 94 per cent for the three days' shooting.

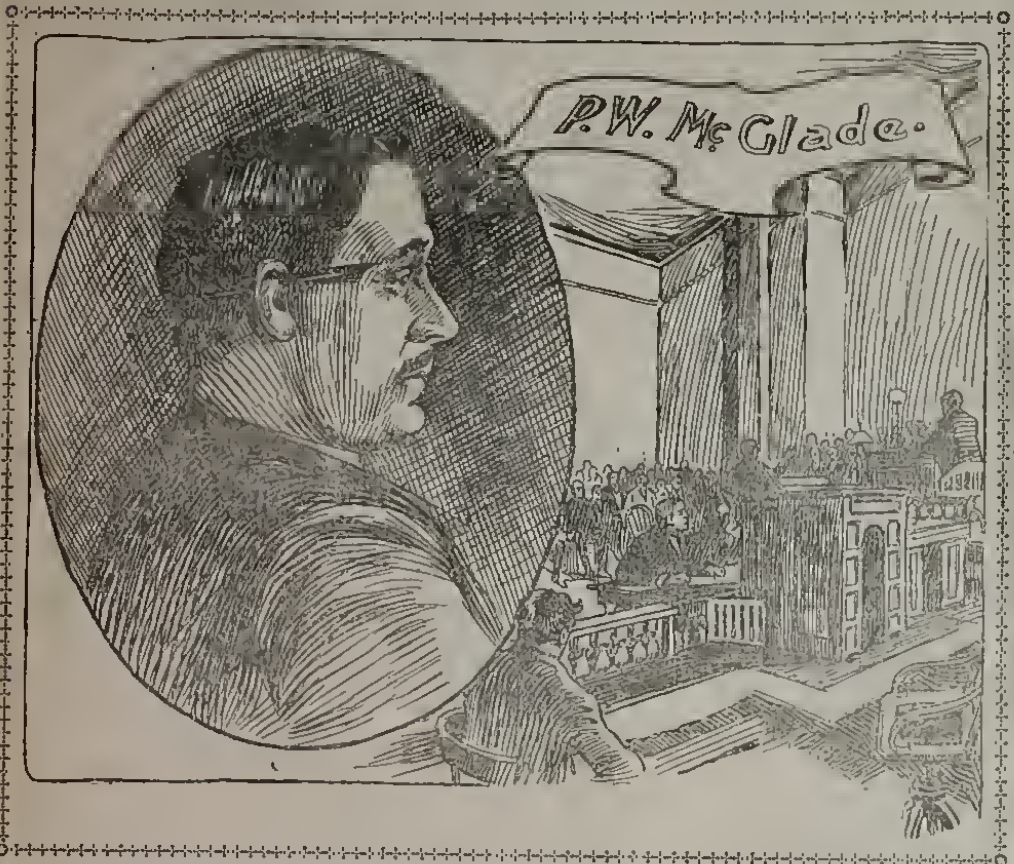
James E. Gorman, expert with pistol and revolver, was born in Boston, Mass., forty years ago. He came to San Francisco twenty-three years ago. He learned and practiced the trade of blacksmithing until twelve years ago, when he lost his right eye. Since then he has been engaged in the newspaper distribution business, and owns a "Chronicle" and a Report route in this city, and latterly has also been engaged in the liquor business at 400 Eddy street. He was a member and a champion of the Columbia Rifle and Pistol Club from 1895 until last year, when it became disrupted; was one of the founders last year of the Golden Gate Rifle and Pistol Club, is its secretary and treasurer and its champion pistol shot, and is a member of the California Schuetzen Club. He is also a member of the Ancient Order of Foresters, of which he has been financial secretary for the past ten years. He began shooting five years ago.

Gorman began using standard targets only last year, but as soon as he did his performances attracted attention all over the country, though he was doing no better shooting than he had been regularly scoring for four years on the little recognized but admirably arranged Columbia target. He already holds the world's record on the standard American target, with a score of 171 out of a possible 500 in fifty shots, made February 11, 1900, when he beat the 469 score made by E. E. Partridge of Boston. He made 939 out a possible 1000 in 100 shots, which is 10 better than the American amateur record, and 3 better than the American professional record made by Bennett ten years ago. While he was a member of the Columbia Rifle and Pistol Club and used only the Columbia target he made 12 in six shots, which is equivalent to hitting a dollar six times in succession with a pistol at a range of 150 feet, or nearly half a block away. In 1895, his first season, he won the first-class medal in the Columbia Rifle and Pistol Club; in 1896, 1897 and 1898 he won the championship of the club with a pistol; in 1896, 1897 and 1898 he also won the revolver championship. He holds the world's record of 29 out of a possible 10 in ten shots on the Columbia target, the middle bullseye counting but 1.

Charles M. Daiss, expert with pistol and revolver, was born in San Francisco twenty-eight years ago. He is a jeweler with Joseph Schweitzer, on Kearny street. He is a member of the Columbia Pistol and Rifle Club. He is also a member of National Parlor of the Native Sons of the Golden West.

In 1894, 1895 and 1896 he won the Gordon Blanding pistol medals in the annual contests open to all comers. In 1897 he won the Columbia ten-shot diamond pistol medal for that year. In 1899 he won the all-comers' Siebe pistol medal. He holds the Coast record on the standard American target with a score of 90 out of a possible 100 in ten shots. He tied the world's record for ten shots on the Columbia target with a score of 29, which is equivalent to hitting a ring 7.9 inches in diameter ten times in succession at a range of fifty yards. He holds the best [illegible] target record of eight-inch bullseye ever made on this Coast in fifty shots, scoring 46 out of a possible 50, using a big 44-caliber Russian model revolver, with open target sights, three-pound pull on the trigger and factory ammunition.

SIX MORE JURORS SECURED FOR THE TRIAL OF "PETE" M'GLADE.



THE FOLLOWING six additional jurors were secured yesterday in Department 12 of the Superior Court for the trial of Peter W. McGlade on a charge of forgery: Clarence Musto of 706 Battery street, E. P. Sachs of 635 Leavenworth street, J. B. Williams of 142 Fourteenth street, F. E. Shafer of 3511 Twenty-third street, H. F. McGurren of 1304 Market street, and Fred Dieling of 853 McAllister street. Four jurors were selected last Tuesday, but one of them, M. Eckenstein, pleaded that he would suffer much pecuniary damage if obliged to serve during what may be a protracted trial and he was excused. There are three empty seats in the jury box yet to be filled, and the Sheriff was given the names of twenty-five citizens, whom he was to notify to be in court at 2 o'clock this afternoon, when the examination of men called to the box will be resumed.

The District Attorney and the Court were not satisfied with the manner in which the order for a special venire of forty citizens was carried out yesterday by the Sheriff. The Court said that the Sheriff probably turned over to his deputies the work of summoning jurors, although he had been appointed to choose the names put on the venire. He was criticised because a considerable number of the twenty-nine men who were brought into court under the order were not taxpayers, and therefore were not eligible as jurors. Some talesmen had not resided here long. One of them, M. de Motte, a salesman, said he had come to this city only a few weeks ago.

The defense showed a disposition yesterday, as on the previous day, to reject well known business men. Attorneys Lennon & Hawkins, representing McGlade, used yesterday seven of the ten peremptory challenges which the defense was allowed to get rid of the following citizens, whose responses to the questions showed that they were qualified to act as jurors in this case: C. E. Miller of Miller, Sloss & Scott; William McPhun, manufacturer; F. P. Hoe of Charles F. Hoe & Co.; Samuel Lubin of Lubin & Sons; J. L. Levison of J. L. Levison & Co.; George H. Coyert, manufacturer; A. Newmark, plumber. The defense has one peremptory challenge left. The prosecution was restricted to five peremptory challenges and used three on Tuesday. It employed the other two challenges yesterday, and was afterwards unable to excuse any juror who answered the questions satisfactorily.

One of the jurors sworn in, H. F. McGurren, stated that he is a brother-in-law of former Street Superintendent Ackerson, under whom McGlade served as bookkeeper. He has a saloon on Market street, and was a First Lieutenant of the California Volunteer regiment that went to Manila. He said that he had had a dispute with McGlade, but it had left no ill-feeling. Some of the men who appeared yesterday were excused because of physical ailments, some for business reasons, and one because he did not understand English well.

Parker Jones, who was employed in the Registrar's office when McGlade was a deputy there, and who helped to conceal McGlade from the police last year, was with the defendant in court, and took a list of the names of the twenty-five citizens drawn from the jury box yesterday.

M'GLADE ON TRIAL AGAIN.

Charge of Forgery Must Be Disposed of First.

MUCH DEPENDS ON THE SELECTION OF JURORS.

TALESMEN ARE WARNED THAT THE CASE IS OF THE GREATEST IMPORTANCE.

Prosecution Exhausts Three Out of Its Five Peremptory Challenges to Clear the Jury Box.

Peter W. McGlade's trial for forgery was begun in Department 12 of the Superior Court yesterday. Assistant District Attorney Deuprey and Otto Wise, the special attorney for the prosecution, asked that the charge of obtaining money by false pretenses be first taken up, as in that case the evidence was simple and they expected a conviction beyond doubt. Attorney J. H. Lennon objected for the defense, and Judge Cook ruled that the forgery charge, at the head of the calendar, would have to be disposed of first. A witness for the prosecution in the forgery case is the deputy sheriff who arrested McGlade in New Mexico. Deuprey said that he could be brought here by May 22d from Deming, to which place he returned last week after the cases were continued, against the wish of the District Attorney.

The indictment was read. It charged McGlade with forging three names on a demand on the city treasury for $100. The names were those of T. Dwyer, in whose favor the demand was drawn in October, 1898; Deputy Street Superintendent Clark, who certified to the correctness of demands for work done, and T. B. McGinnis, a deputy clerk of the Board of Supervisors. The demand was discounted by Bier & Regensburger, brokers, who paid $95 for it. Deuprey said to the men who were called to the jury box: "I will read the names of the witnesses in the case, so that you may tell whether you know them. This is a case of public importance, as it involves the stealing of public funds. I ask you to weigh well your answers to the questions to be asked you." Deuprey and Wise asked the men in the box if they were acquainted with McGlade's former attorneys, Reddy, Campbell & Metson, and former Supervisors Sheehan, Brill and Rivers. Attorney Lennon asked them if they knew Bier & Regensburger.

The prosecution used three of its five peremptory challenges to exclude from the jury Jesse Galland of 342 Geary street, D. P. Carter of 847 Market street, and R. H. Neubauer of 2768 Pine street. The defense, which has twenty peremptory challenges, used two on George Clark of 12 Spear street and Fred T. Feisel of 1579 Mission street. W. E. Hess was excused because his opinion was formed, E. D. Morgan because of business, and W. F. Schultz on account of deafness. The following four jurors were accepted: M. Eckenstein of 1809 Dupont street, F. L. Guntz of 5 City Hall square, H. Grove of 2121 Pacific avenue and R. J. Hancock of 723 Broderick. The list of citizens in attendance being exhausted, another venire was ordered and a continuance taken until today.

Bull May 23

PETER McGLADE is again on trial on a charge of forgery, of which he should have been acquitted many months ago or for which he ought now to be doing a large chunk of time. Doubtless Peter, who during the long interval has been a man considerably 'round town, feels that the trial is nothing more than a formality and a bore.

WITNESSES COULD NOT REMEMBER

McGlade Case Proceeds With Indifference and Little Show of Interest.

The trial of Peter W. McGlade has, for the time being, lost all claim upon public excitement. It has passed into a consideration of figures and accounts, and for several days, at least, will draw no more than passing attention.

The transition from sensation to dull routine is due to apathy on the part of the witnesses for the prosecution. It will be remembered that McGlade fled from the city when his defalcation was discovered, thus morally admitting his guilt. He was captured in Texas. On the first trial he escaped conviction. The second trial, which commenced last week, was begun with considerable display. Otto I. Wise, who was employed to assist in the prosecution, exhibited considerable pugnacity in selecting a jury, but with all his show, did not succeed in obtaining a jury satisfactory to the prosecution. When he discovered his ill-success he sought to have the jury discharged. He alleged various irregularities in the selection of the different jurymen, but made such an indifferent showing that the court refused to sustain him.

In deciding that the jury must continue Judge Cook held that as the honor or honesty of the jury was not attacked, it could not be discharged. An alleged irregularity in its selection was, he said, far from sufficient to warrant extraordinary action.

Wise was given an opportunity to carry the investigation further in the form of a charge of contempt of court against Clerk Tolle and Deputy Sheriff Dasher, who summoned the jury, but he declined to take that step.

Instead he proceeded with the trial. This morning he produced ex-Superintendent of Streets Ambrose as his first witness. He attempted to prove forgery on the part of McGlade, but Ambrose would give no such testimony. He was not even sure of his own signatures. He could not distinguish the alleged forged writings from those admitted to be correct. After an hour of fruitless examination Ambrose was dismissed from the witness-stand and Harry Piper was called upon to identify his signature to McGlade's commission. He was formerly Deputy County Clerk, but that was so long ago that he has forgotten his own signature. He could not positively identify his name at the foot of McGlade's commission. When the court adjourned Joseph Goddard, now Chief Deputy County Clerk, was under examination. He is expected to identify the signatures in McGlade's commission and thus prove the regular employment of the latter in the service of the city.

SIGNATURE IDENTIFIED.

County Clerk Deane Swears to the Writing of Former Deputy Harry Piper.

In the trial of Peter W. McGlade on a charge of forgery, County Clerk Deane testified yesterday that he identified the signature of Harry Piper, a former deputy in the office of the County Clerk.

In order to establish McGlade's official character as a deputy in the office of the Superintendent of Streets, where the forgery is said to have been committed, a paper purporting to be his oath of office was offered in evidence. The oath appears to have been acknowledged by McGlade before Piper. When Piper was asked to identify the signature and just said to have been written by him, he said that the writing looked like his, but it was a long time ago and he was not sure that he wrote it; he must really decline to express an opinion in a matter of such uncertainty.

Mr. Deane had no such trouble as was experienced by Piper. As soon as he saw Piper's signature he recognized it and identified the McGlade oath of office as one of the original documents on file in his office.

M. M. Regensburger and J. E. Bier testified positively to the identification of McGlade's signature to several papers which were admitted as exemplars of the defendant's handwriting.

When Deputy District Attorney Deuprey offered the McGlade oath of office in evidence objection was made by Attorney T. J. Lennon, representing the defendant. After argument Judge Cook ruled that the document should be admitted, subject to a motion to strike out if the prosecution should not legally complete the connection between the defendant and the alleged forgery.

Theodore Kytka, an expert in handwriting, produced a number of photographs to show that the writing on the documents alleged to be forged were by McGlade.

The trial will be resumed to-morrow.

Chronicle May 20 - 1900

COOK SEES MRS. BOTKIN AND SAYS, "THAT IS THE WOMAN."

JUDGE CARROLL COOK, with Sheriff Lackmann and Chief Deputy Sheriff Hare, visited Branch County Jail No. 3 yesterday afternoon. After seeing Mrs. Cordelia Botkin, first in her quarters in her indoor dress and then in the office of the jail, attired in her street costume, Judge Cook declared that he was more than ever convinced that he saw her with a male companion on an in-bound Guerrero-street car on Sunday, April 22d. He said that he would be unwilling positively to identify any man, but that Guard William Nixon, who was presented to him during the investigation at the jail, answered the general description of Mrs. Botkin's escort, both as to features and dress. Jail Superintendent J. F. Kincaid, Matrons Rose C. Kincaid and Mary Condon, and Guards William Nixon and John Gillespie reiterated their sworn statements that Mrs. Botkin was not absent from the jail on the day in question.

Superintendent Kincaid offered the suggestion to Judge Cook that perhaps he had seen Mrs. Georgiana Thompson of 219 Hermann street, who he had been told by a number of people bore a striking resemblance to Mrs. Botkin. The Judge stated that he could easily tell whether Mrs. Thompson was the woman who was on the car, and instructed Kincaid to take her, if she were willing, to his chambers to-day.

Mrs. Thompson was seen by a "Chronicle" reporter later in the day and declared that she did not ride on a Guerrero-street car on Sunday, April 22d. Other women have also often been taken for Mrs. Botkin, but none of them, so far as is known, were in the vicinity of Guerrero street two weeks ago Sunday.

That Mrs. Botkin was in the Parrott building on April 18th was admitted by Superintendent Kincaid to Judge Cook. Kincaid had driven her down to a dentist's office at 6?? Sutter street, and as they were returning by way of Powell street he went to the Parrott building with her to the offices of Knight & Heggerty, her attorneys. According to Kincaid's statements, he was at no time farther than an arm's length from his prisoner. He said that Attorneys Knight and McGowan talked with Mrs. Botkin for a while, and that he and she then resumed their journey to the jail. Judge Cook directed the Sheriff to have the attorneys in his court at 10 o'clock to-morrow, when the investigation will be resumed.

The investigation at the jail yesterday was somewhat informal, but still thorough.

Guard William Nixon was first brought forward and Judge Cook looked at him steadily for a moment. "That man's face is just like the face of the man in the car," he said, "and his figure is similar, too, but a little tall. The man I saw wore a grayish-colored suit and I can't tell his exact height, but he seemed smaller than the woman."

Nixon admitted that he wore a suit of this color on April 22d, but stated that he was in the jail all that day.

At the solicitation of Captain Kincaid the party paid a visit to Mrs. Botkin in her "cell." With an eye to dramatic effect she had placed the sleeping child of another prisoner on her bed and was bending over it when the party entered.

"What is the meaning of this intrusion," she demanded theatrically, and then seeing Judge Cook she exclaimed, "Oh, his highness," and subsided. She stood side by side with Guard Nixon, but Judge Cook confessed that in the dress she wore he looked too tall beside her to have been her escort in the car. He suggested that a high hat and street clothes might equalize their heights. Mrs. Botkin was requested to dress in that way.

The party adjourned to the superintendent's office and awaited the prisoner's coming. Her entrance was Botkinesque in the last degree. With her head thrown back and wearing a nobby tailor-made dress the murderess entered and swept across the room to within a few feet of Judge Cook. He looked at her sharply for an instant.

"I am convinced that that is the woman," he said; "you may take her away."

NEW JURY IS WANTED

Unusual Motion May Be Made in McGlade's Case.

THE DISTRICT ATTORNEY FAR FROM SATISFIED.

HE INTENDS TO ASK THAT THE TWELVE JURORS BE DISCHARGED.

Most of Them Acceptable, but This Course Must Be Followed to Get Rid of the Others.

District Attorney Byington and his assistant, Eugene Deuprey, who, with Otto I. Wise as special counsel, are conducting the prosecution of Peter W. McGlade in Department 12 of the Superior Court, are not satisfied with the jury that was sworn in last week to try the case, and the District Attorney will probably make an effort to-morrow to have the present jury discharged and a new one chosen. The motion to dismiss the jury, if it be made in accordance with the intention which the District Attorney had formed yesterday, will be an unusual one. The twelve jurors are:

F. L. Guntz, secretary Gantner & Guntz, Undertaking Company, 3 City Hall square.
B. Grove, 2121 Pacific avenue.
R. J. Hancock, real estate, 323 Broderick.
Clarence Musto of the Neapolitan Paste Company, 705 Battery.
E. A. Sachs of Martin Sachs Company, real estate, 615 Leavenworth.
J. B. Williams, 142 Fourteenth.
F. E. Shafer, California Milk Company, 3671 Twenty-third.
Harry F. McGurren, saloon, 1238 Market.
Frederick Dieling, solicitor, 163 McAllister.
John Corbett, 1014 Lombard.
Adolph Hiller, stationery, 421 Chestnut.
M. E. Willis, 504 Eddy.

Only to some of these men does the prosecution object, but in order to get them out of the jury box the motion to discharge must apply to all of the twelve. The motion will be made on the ground that the jury was not summoned in exact conformity with the provisions of the law. District Attorney Byington had a conference with Sheriff Lackmann on this subject yesterday.

The securing of a good jury was considered by McGlade's prosecutors as a highly important part of the court proceedings. As McGlade had long been in politics and had political connections as well as many friends among the men about town, it was desired that citizens who would not be influenced by political acquaintances, and who could be trusted to decide the case on the evidence should compose the jury. The prosecution was limited under the law to five peremptory challenges, however, and after these were exhausted the District Attorney could find no means to get more jurors excused, though he did not like to accept some of them. The defense had ten peremptory challenges, and these were employed to send away well-known business men who had been summoned by the Sheriff.

The first six jurors were obtained from the regular panel of the court, which was then exhausted. A special venire was thereupon issued for forty citizens. Out of the forty summoned by the Sheriff's deputies twenty-nine appeared, and from these the next three jurors—Shafer, McGurren and Dieling—were selected. Then twenty-five names were drawn from the regular jury-box, and from this list the last three jurors were secured. The objection which the prosecution contemplates making relates to the special venire. Not all of the forty citizens who were ordered to appear in court did so. It will be contended that the special venire should have been exhausted in the regular way before another list was drawn.

McGlade is being tried on one of the indictments for forgery which were presented against him on account of his alleged manufacturing of warrants on the city treasury while he was a bookkeeper in the Street Superintendent's office under William F. Ambrose. He is out on a bond in the sum of $1500 on each forgery charge. At his first trial last year he was acquitted. At that trial it was necessary to produce evidence as to handwriting, and Ambrose and Harry Piper, who were called as witnesses, were reluctant to testify as to writing of which only they had personal knowledge. Ambrose will have to be called as a witness at this trial also, and it is said that he still sympathizes with McGlade.

Post May 21. 1900

CHARGE OF FRAUD IN M'GLADE CASE

The Prosecution Makes a Savage Attack on Clerk Oscar Tolle.

Attorney Otto Irving Wise, special counsel retained in the prosecution of Peter McGlade before Judge Cook, sprung a decided sensation when the case was called this morning by entering a motion that the entire jury be dismissed and by filing an affidavit in behalf of that motion.

He charges that Clerk Oscar Tolle has been guilty of criminal interference in the case and that by his unlawful manipulation of the jury ballot box, men have been chosen to decide the case who are not competent to sit in the jury box and whose decision can be readily foreshadowed as favorable to the defense. The motion and charges caused a stir in the court room and is being widely and excitedly discussed now.

Attorney Thomas Lennon for the defense moved, as soon as Attorney Wise had closed his arraignment, that the matter be laid over until to-morrow so that he might have a chance to prepare a counter motion.

The motion which Attorney Wise recited in court this morning was preceded by a concerted demand from Jurors A. Hiller, John Corbett and J. B. Williams that they be relieved, owing to the fact that charges of irregularity had been made in connection with their selection.

Attorney Wise arose then and asked that the entire jury be discharged. He filed an affidavit at once which set forth that when a special venire of 40 men had been exhausted, 25 more names were drawn from the regular jury panel in the County Clerk's office and 8 from the court's venire.

Wise declares then in his affidavit that he later inspected the jury ballot box and that he there discovered that Clerk Oscar Tolle had failed to revolve the box at all, and that he had the ballots so arranged as to enable him to pick from either the 25-name stack or the 8-name stack, at will. Of the 8 men whom the clerk is said to have drawn, it is claimed, one works in the streets, one was taken from a milk wagon and induced to serve, one was picked up in the City Hall corridors and one had only just arrived in the city from Los Angeles. Wise then named several of the jurymen who are not on the assessment roll.

The defense was plainly staggered by the procedure, but got in the counter motion and the case went over. Tolle claims he was guilty of no fraud and Judge Cook says he is at sea in the matter for the present, as there is no parallel case on record in this State showing the dismissal of a jury after it had been completed, and under these circumstances.

The jury now under a cloud is made up as follows:

A. Hiller, John Corbett, M. E. Willer, Fred Dierling, H. F. McGuenen, F. E. Shafer, J. B. Williams, E. D. Sacks, Clarence Musto, R. J. Hancock, D. Grane and F. L. Quintz.

Bulletin - May 21 - 1900

SCANDAL DEVELOPS IN THE M'GLADE CASE.

The McGlade Trial This Morning.

Jury Alleged to Have Been Irregularly Drawn==Clerk Tolle Implicated.

Accusations of irregularity and fraud envelop the trial of Peter McGlade, charged with forgery. The jury impaneled to determine his guilt or innocence is involved in the scandal and may be dismissed from further consideration of the case.

Nearly a week was consumed in drawing the jury. The twelfth man was obtained Friday. He, with his two predecessors, were drawn from a special venire issued Wednesday. The venire in question was returned Thursday, when all but eight men responded. Attachments were issued for the delinquents and on Friday they were produced in court by the Sheriff. At the same time twenty-five additional talesmen were returned from the regular panel. To complete the jury but three men were required. They were selected by the Court Clerk, Oscar Tolle, from the eight men returned by the Sheriff. They were A. Hiller, John Corbett and M. E. Willen. The selection of these men was approved by the court and an adjournment was taken until today.

When court convened this morning Otto I. Wise, employed with Assistant District Attorney Deuprey in the prosecution of McGlade, created a sensation by asking that the jury be dismissed. He alleged that the special venire from which the majority of the jurors were selected had been improperly drawn. In an affidavit he swore that several members of the venire had been taken from the public streets. One man was summoned by Deputy Sheriff Dashiel from a milk wagon which he was driving along Market street. Another was hailed on Sansome. He had been in San Francisco but six weeks. Several others proved not to be upon the assessment roll.

Wise supplemented his accusations against the methods pursued by the Sheriff with a direct charge of misconduct against Clerk Tolle. He alleged that on Friday Tolle placed the names of eight men returned by the Sheriff in one corner of the jury box and the names taken from the regular panel in another corner. He did not revolve the box, and when called upon to draw the three jurors needed to fill the box he selected them from among the eight men. Wise discovered the trick after the jury had been completed, but too late to use it in objecting to any individual juror. He reported the matter to Judge Cook, who advised that affidavits setting forth the misconduct of the clerk and the Sheriff be filed to-day.

Upon presenting his affidavits this morning Wise asked that the jury be discharged, and was about to argue his motion when Thomas Lennon of Lennon & Hawkins, attorneys for McGlade, forced a postponement until to-morrow in order to obtain time in which to file counter affidavits.

The position taken by Wise is unusual. In the criminal history of California there is no record of an order discharging a jury once completed. It is contended by Lennon & Hawkins that if the McGlade jury were dismissed now the court would be compelled to discharge the defendant, he having been once in jeopardy. The jury which Wise desires discharged is made up as follows:

A. Hiller, John Corbell, M. E. Willer, Fred Dirling, H. F. McGuenen, F. E. Shafer, J. B. Williams, E. D. Sacks, Clarence Music, R. J. Hancock, D. Grave and F. L. Quintz.

McGlade was formerly a bookkeeper in the Street Department. While employed in that capacity he cashed a number of salary warrants to which he is said to have forged the names of his fellow employes. When accused of forgery he fled to Texas, where he was subsequently arrested. In all, three charges stand against him.

May 23 1900

CHARGES OF FRAUD UNDER INVESTIGATION.

Judges Cook, Lawlor and Dunne Inquire Into the McGlade Jury.

Assistant District Attorney Asks That Jury Be Discharged, But No Action Yet Reached.

The demand of District Attorney Byington for the dismissal of the jury impaneled to try Peter W. McGlade was today submitted to Judges Cook, Lawlor and Dunne for decision. As it involves varied questions of law and fact it may remain undetermined for several days. Though two hours were consumed this morning in arguing into the various issues raised, no decisive steps were taken by either the court or the attorneys interested in the scandal.

When Judge Cook and his associates took their places upon the bench Assistant District Attorney Deuprey asked that the jury be discharged, pending a decision as to its validity. Attorneys Lennon and Hawkins, representing McGlade, objected to the proposal. They were sustained and the jury was ordered to remain in attendance during the argument.

The objection of the defendant to any interference with the jury was then renewed by Attorney Lennon. He attacked the sworn statement made yesterday by Attorney H. L. Wise, and in a lengthy argument attempted to show that the affidavit did not demonstrate that such an emergency existed as would warrant the dismissal of the jury.

He contended that the conduct of Lennon ... assertions made by Wise. Tolle swears that the jury was regularly drawn. He denies that the slips upon which the names of the different jurors were written were in any way separated. "The slips were thrown into the box in the usual way," said Tolle to-day, "and the box was revolved. It was a mere accident that the men selected were drawn from the special venire."

PETER W. M'GLADE.

JUDGE CARROLL COOK.

CLERK OSCAR TOLLE

Judge Cook has so far refused to comment upon the case. He has neither affirmed nor denied the statement that Wise called his attention to the manner in which the names of jurors were drawn from the box. It is probable that he will leave the facts to Judges Lawlor and Dunne for decision. He is inclined to give his attention exclusively to the questions of law.

W. & J. Sloane & Co.
Manufacturers, Importers,
Wholesale and Retail,
Carpets, Furniture, Upholstery Goods,
SLOANE BUILDING,
114-116-118-120-122 Post St.,
SAN FRANCISCO

bathrooms, kitchens and offices.

PROSECUTION OBJECTS TO THE M'GLADE JURY.

Discharge of the Panel Demanded—Irregularity in Drawing Names Alleged.

When the case of Peter W. McGlade, charged with forgery, was called in Department 12 of the Superior Court yesterday morning one of the jurors, J. B. Williams, arose in the jury-box and said he wished to be excused from serving at the trial. He referred to an article that was published last Sunday in which it was stated that the attorneys for the prosecution were dissatisfied with the jury, and that on Monday morning they would move to have it discharged and a new jury chosen. Williams did not desire to stay on the jury in view of this dissatisfaction. John Corbett and A. Hiller also arose and said that for the same reason they would like to be excused. Otto I. Wise, special attorney for the prosecution, who has been engaged by Bier & Regensburger, the brokers, who were defrauded by the bogus warrants on the city treasury which McGlade was accused of manufacturing, moved that the request of these jurors be granted. The defendant's attorneys, Lennon & Hawkins, objected. Lennon said the jurors merely felt intimidated by the publication concerning them. As the jurors had been sworn in Judge Cook would not excuse them unless a good reason was shown. Thereupon the following motion in writing, signed by District Attorney Byington and his assistant, Eugene Deuprey, was offered:

Now come the people of the State of California, complainants therein, and hereby move this honorable Superior Court to forthwith discharge the alleged jury had and obtained herein, as the said people of the State complain, against the law. Your complainants allege as the grounds for this motion:

That section 204, Code of Civil Procedure, concerning the drawing of the Grand Jury and trial jurors, has provision for the selection thereof, and that the following sections to and including section 211, Code of Civil Procedure, also relate thereto.

That the requirements of the law for drawing jurors for courts of record are set forth in sections from 211, Code of Civil Procedure, to and including section 220.

That sections 225 to and including 228 provide for the manner in which jurors for courts of record shall be summoned.

That the alleged jury obtained for the trial of the following action has not been had in accordance with the provisions of the law as hereinbefore specified, but has been impaneled in mixed form—first, from an alleged regular selection from names taken originally from names of citizens selected for the twelve Superior Judges of the Superior Court for the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, in January, 1900, second, from a special venire ordered by the court and violated in summoning in this—that a large portion of said special venire was summoned from people in the street and from a milk wagon, the driver thereof being summoned, and that such summoning under order for special venire was in part from bystanders and not from the body of the county, third, in seeking to obtain a part of said alleged jury had herein from names of twenty-five citizens whose names were drawn from the trial jury box containing the names of talesmen selected by the Judges of the Superior Court in January, 1900, fourth, that these summoned as trial jurors under the order for special venire herein were summoned irrespective of whether they were residents, citizens, taxpayers or competent.

That the said alleged jury had herein has been summoned and selected for qualification to serve as trial jurors in violation of the law and against the interest of justice.

Said motion herein will be made upon all the records and minutes of the cause herein and upon the affidavit of O. J. Wise hereto annexed.

"This is an unusual motion," remarked Judge Cook. Lennon termed it a most remarkable one, and said he never knew of such a motion emanating from the prosecution in any other criminal proceeding. He declared the motion came too late, as the jury had been impaneled and none of the jurors could then be challenged. Deuprey remarked that the prosecution was ready to argue that point as soon as the affidavit was presented. Wise then read his own affidavit, in which he said:

In Department 12 on Tuesday, May 15, 1900, at which time this cause was marked ready for trial and the empaneling of a jury was proceeded with, the clerk proceeded to draw the names from the jury box of those last attendant upon the court, and when said list appeared to be exhausted an order was made by the Court directing that a special venire of forty jurors be drawn out of the body of the community for service as trial jurors in this cause. The Court then adjourned proceedings until Wednesday, May 16, 1900, at which time the said special venire was made returnable and the empaneling of the jurors then proceeded from said special venire. On the afternoon of said date the special venire seemed to be exhausted and the Court ordered that twenty-five names be taken from the regular jury list, and those taken to be made returnable on Thursday, May 17, 1900, at 2 P. M. The Court then adjourned proceedings for the day. On Thursday, at 2 P. M., the Court ordered that the said twenty-five names be placed by the clerk of the court in the jury box, together with such additional names from the special venire of persons who had not responded at the call when said special venire was returnable and against whom attachments had been issued.

At that time and in open court I inquired of the Court whether both the list [...] either side of the jury box and each carefully placed so that an intermingling of the names was absolutely impossible. The two packages were at least two inches apart and each package was carefully piled up. I called the attention of the Court to this proceeding, but presently the clerk had sworn the jury, closed the box and revolved the same.

I further depose and say positively that at no time before this, during that session of the court, did the clerk revolve the box, for I took special notice. Immediately after the adjournment of the court I went to the office of the Sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco and ascertained that when the special venire was issued, four deputies were assigned to serve subpoenas and that their instructions from the Sheriff were to serve only the best citizens obtainable; that Deputy Metzner did serve the following persons: Messrs. Armstrong, Cardall, Smith, Townsend, Covert, Deardorf, Lundy, Brener, Brady and Glendanem, all of whom were excused. The second deputy employed by the Sheriff to serve subpoenas, Jenny, served the following men: Hahn, Purry, Roslah, Gullixon, Levison, Beresford, Kearney, Kragen and Kelleher. Out of this list only one name was called, to-wit, the name of J. L. Levison, who was excused. Another deputy, Mr. McCarthy, subpoenaed the following men: Messrs. Kronberg, Demot, Darling, Rall, Lee, Bezaro, Wright, Bill and Smith; out of these names none were called except Mr. Demut, who was excused as a non-resident, and Messrs. Rall, Lee and Bill, all of whom were excused.

The remaining deputy was one Dasha, who is also the bailiff of Department 12 of the Superior Court, and said Dasha subpoenaed the following names: Corbett, Dreyfuss, Dieling, Fitzgerald, Fitch, Levy, Watkins, Willis, Birch, Cleary, Walback, Horton, Hiller, McGurren, Newmark and Shafer, out of this list subpoenaed by said Dasha, Messrs. Fitzgerald, Fitch, Levy, Watkins, Birch, Cleary and Horton were not called, and Messrs. Corbett, Dieling, Willis, Hiller, McGurren and Shafer were called and accepted as jurors by defendant.

Said Dasha was sent for by Sheriff Lackmann, and I questioned him, said Dasha, in the presence of Under Sheriff Hare. Dasha stated at that time that he did not know and had never seen before Messrs. Corbett, Willis, Hiller, Dieling, Shafer and McGurren, and that he served them in the following way. He stated that he was walking on Kearny street and met Hiller, whom he had never seen before, and that he did not know said Hiller's name or his address or business, and that he then served a subpoena on him. He made the same statement as to Messrs. Corbett and Willis. The said Dasha further stated that he served Mr. Dieling on Sansome street, and that he met him as the said Dieling was leaving a building, that he did not know said Dieling or his residence or his business. He further stated that he served Mr. Shafer as follows. That he was walking along Tenth street when he saw a milk wagon approaching, and he served the driver of said milk wagon, whom he did not know and had never seen before. He further stated that he served Mr. McGurren in a saloon on Market street near the City Hall.

Lennon objected to further consideration of the motion. "Taking this affidavit as true, there is nothing in it which would justify the discharge of the jury at this time," he said. Judge Cook overruled the objection and stated that his attention was called by Wise to the alleged separation of the slips only after the names of the last jurors had been drawn from the box. Wise said "That is correct," and, as no other evidence was offered, he began the argument.

"As your honor said, this is a most unusual motion," Wise remarked. "It is a proper motion now, however, as it is made before the taking of any testimony."

Judge Cook interrupted and said that any evidence which the defense had to present in relation to the motion should be offered before the arguments.

"I cannot be expected to answer that affidavit this morning," Lennon responded, "although to my mind it does not state facts sufficient to justify action. I am willing to let the prosecution present its argument, and, if I cannot convince your honor on the authorities which I have here that this motion should be denied, I will then submit such evidence as may be necessary."

Judge Cook observed that in fairness to the prosecution the evidence of the defense should be put in before the arguments. Lennon stated that he asked the District Attorney last Saturday to let him see the affidavit that was to be filed, so that he could answer it. To give the defense time to prepare counter affidavits an adjournment was taken until this morning.

Judge Cook, when dismissing the jury, said: "If you see anything in the newspapers relating to this case it is your duty to pass it by and not give it any attention. No one has any right to make any communication to you concerning this case outside of the courtroom."

Lennon stated after adjournment that Wise had taken charge of the prosecution, and that it was simply on account of Wise's inexperience in criminal cases that he did not secure jurors who might have suited him better. "He has said that the solid business men who were summoned were challenged by the defense," Lennon remarked. "The fact was that he played into our hand. He questioned good business men and found out from them that they had formed an opinion in the case, which was based on reports that they read in the newspapers. An experienced prosecutor would have passed such citizens over to the defense and might have [...]

GENERAL MARKETS.

M'GLADE'S SECOND TRIAL IN A FAIR WAY TO BECOME A FARCE.

Blunder of the Prosecution and Active Sympathy of the "Push" Contribute to Save the Sporty Bookkeeper From State's Prison.

BLUNDERS on the part of the prosecution and the ardent sympathy of the [illegible] "push" [illegible] that Peter W. McGlade [illegible] will never be punished. It will be remembered that McGlade ran away when evidence was discovered in the Street Department and laid at his door, and thus, morally at least, confessed his guilt. On the first trial he "beat the case," as his admiring friends say, and now his second trial begins to have the appearance of a mere farce.

The District Attorney's office put the special prosecution of the case in the hands of Otis I. Wise, representing a firm of warrant shavers who were losers by McGlade's irregular transactions. It is current talk in City Hall circles that Wise, with whom Assistant District Attorney Deuprey is nominally associated in the prosecution of the case, passed jurors who on their own statements were friendly to the defendant and related to his political associates. Then they secured a jury who no one familiar with the matter believes will convict. Disagreement if not acquittal is freely predicted.

Deuprey allowed the proper time for challenge to pass, although reminded of it by Judge Cook, and then after the jury had been impaneled and sworn, moved that it be discharged. This motion was supplemented by an affidavit by Wise that Court Clerk Tolle and Bailiff Dasha had been guilty of irregularities—charges of fraud being carefully avoided in the paper—in the securing of a special venire and the drawing of the talesmen from the jury box.

Wise took the somewhat novel position that he did not question the honesty and good character of the members of the jury, but merely the irregularity of the manner in which they were secured.

Three Judges, Cook, Lawlor and Dunne, occupied the bench yesterday and held the scales of justice. There was an unusually large crowd of lawyers and politicians in attendance, the interest arising from the defendant's wide acquaintance and to the fact that the case is without parallel in this State or in any other, so far as the trial lawyers could ascertain.

After hearing arguments the trio of Judges unanimously declined to entertain the motion to discharge the jury, but left the charges in the affidavit for trial by the proper tribunal. This is probably the [illegible] of the [illegible] that resulted in charges [illegible] wrong later.

District Attorney Lennon, when asked if [illegible] could read any proceeding [illegible] "It is my disposition to do so, but [illegible] already [illegible] counter affidavits."

Clerk Tolle and Shorthand Reporter Joseph P. Stevens [illegible] filed with the court two affidavits [illegible] to discredit all the essential allegations of the Wise affidavit. There is another affidavit by Bailiff Dasha, [illegible] three to one.

Before proceeding with the argument Assistant District Attorney Deuprey asked that the jury be excused and instructed to withdraw from the courtroom pending the argument. This request was denied.

Lennon next presented his objections to the motion to dismiss, or challenge of the jury. He began to attack Wise's affidavit, whereupon Judge Lawlor suggested that he address himself to the motion to discharge the jury. Wise claimed that the motion was indefinite and uncertain and that it came too late, having been made after the jurors had been sworn and given charge of the case. He then read from the affidavit of complaint. When he reached that part in which Wise claimed to have seen two separate piles of slips containing names in the jury box and that he called Judge Cook's attention to that fact, Judge Cook interrupted and stated that he wished it understood that when his attention was called to the box the jury had been completed and no more jurors were subsequently drawn.

Lennon continued that the affidavit merely contained general statements of fact. The statement that "the jury was taken principally from a milk wagon and not from the body of the county" was absurd. The affidavit itself showed that the jury was taken from the highways and byways, even if they were on coal carts and milk wagons.

Deuprey interposed that he had entered an objection as to the right of the Court to call a special venire.

This brought a sharp contradiction from Judge Cook, who said, "The objection was not made at that time or in that manner." The Judge explained that the objection was made after the venire was returned. "I then told you," he continued, "that you could challenge the whole venire in the usual way, but you declined to so exercise your right of challenge and the record will so show."

Lennon said that he gave the District Attorney's office credit for not having drawn the Wise affidavit, for he thought that office had a slight knowledge of the English language.

Lennon was informed that Deuprey was the author of the affidavit, but he [illegible] expunge anything [illegible]." He called the [illegible] and dwelt upon its [illegible].

Wise said that he thought the allegations of the affidavit were sufficient. "I have nothing to say against the jury as to its honesty," he continued, "but I do say that the conduct of the officers of this court was fraudulent and corrupt."

Wise repeated his statement of having seen two separate bunches of names at least two inches apart in the jury box. "When the clerk returned," he said, "he gave the box a whirl and mixed them all up again. When I had noticed what I did notice I called the attention of the Court and of Assistant District Attorney Deuprey to it. I then went to the Sheriff's office, and he told me it was his intention to secure the best citizens on juries. Further investigation showed that Bailiff Dasha went down Market street taking men off milk wagons or wherever he could find them. If what I have said is true, then this court must not be prostituted to such methods. I cannot believe that the law intends that a jury tainted with fraud shall be retained to try a case."

At the afternoon session Wise and Deuprey submitted authorities holding that the Court, under certain conditions, might discharge a jury at its discretion, but admitted that there had been no parallel to the case, either in California or elsewhere.

Again the Judges consulted, and Judge Cook announced:

"The Court is unanimously of the opinion that this motion cannot be entertained. The jury has been impaneled and sworn, and all the proceedings of record are regular. The affidavit does not state that the acts of either the Sheriff or the clerk were fraudulent, merely saying that they were done, and that is not sufficient ground for dismissing the jury. The Court has no power or jurisdiction to entertain the motion at this time. The allegations in the affidavit may be presented in an independent proceeding and the persons charged given an opportunity to reply to them."

The Court sustained the calling of a special venire to fill a jury, when the regular panel was exhausted, as both customary and regular. The demurrer of the defense to the motion to dismiss the jury was sustained.

The three indictments against McGlade for forging Street Department laborers' warrants were read to the jury and the trial ordered to proceed at 10 o'clock this morning.

Call May 30 - 1900

PICKING TO PIECES M'GLADE'S WRITING

An Afternoon With Theodore Kytka and His Plates, Prints and Blackboard.

The McGlade case has reached the expert point and Kytka, with his potbooks and blackboards, his negatives and prints and comparisons, is doing his turn before the jury. An attenuated "B" and a more than usually rotund "e" were claiming the attention of the jurors when court adjourned. Kytka is showing where the forged name of [illegible] on the Dwyer demand resembles specimens of McGlade's writing.

During the morning there were more signatures of McGlade identified by M. M. Regensburger and J. E. Isler. Ambrose was called to see if he had remembered anything more about his signature, but he had not. He would not admit any signature shown him to be his, and finally he came down from the stand and wrote his name five or six times. These signatures were put in evidence and will be used by the expert.

The case went over until to-morrow morning.

RING BACK OF M'GLADE

City Hall Gang Comes to the Forger's Aid.

SOME WITNESSES WITH CONVENIENT MEMORIES.

"BILLY" AMBROSE REFUSES TO IDENTIFY HIS OWN SIGNATURE.

Harry Piper Will Not Swear Either Way—Important Witness for the Prosecution Is in the East.

The professional holders of political jobs held a field day yesterday in the courtroom of Superior Judge Carroll Cook. The feature of the exhibition was the concerted effort of the "push" to clear Peter W. McGlade, sometime bookkeeper of the Street Department, of three charges of forgery and one of obtaining money under false pretenses—crimes for which he was indicted by the Grand Jury.

The farce was so broad that even the members of the jury laughed and made merry among themselves over the antics of the crooked politicians assembled in a common defense. The defense bore all the earmarks of preparation by the City Hall ring, and the lubricating of adverse conditions is said to have been attended to by a soda water man who associates on the "tenderloin" with McGlade.

A leading feature of the judicial performance was the elastic and convenient memories of the "push" assembled to sweat their old chum in office-holding out of his difficulties. Ex-Superintendent of Streets and present Grand Juror Ambrose, in whose office the several felonies were committed, could not remember his own signature nor anything else. Still another accommodating memory was that of ex-Deputy County Clerk Harry Piper, who, also, was unable to identify his own signature.

Much confusion was caused by the painful deafness of Assistant District Attorney Deuprey, who repeated many questions that had been asked by the Judge, and failed, seemingly, to get a proper conception of the answers to questions that he asked himself.

In his opening statement Deuprey selected for this trial the indictment charging forgery of a demand for $96 wages for T. Dwyer, a fictitious sewer laborer, in August, 1898. The names forged were those of William F. Ambrose, T. B. Maginnis, assistant clerk of the Board of Supervisors, and Thomas F. Clark, deputy superintendent of streets.

Grand Juror Ambrose was the first witness called. He said that he could not give from his own knowledge the routine of a laborer's demand for wages. He said it was merely hearsay with him.

"Was P. W. McGlade authorized to certify to the correctness of demands in your office during August and September, 1898?" Ambrose was asked.

"I don't remember."

"Who did have that authority?"

"I don't remember."

"Was it a fact that P. W. McGlade had authority to certify to those demands?"

"I don't remember."

"Could you refresh your memory by reference to your books?"

"I might, but I couldn't swear to it."

Then the witness with the elusive memory was shown his own signature to his appointment of McGlade to the position of bookkeeper, but he was as shifty as ever when asked to identify it.

"I don't know whether it is or is not," was his reply.

Neither did this witness know the signature of McGlade when it was shown him. So nimble was he in his evasive answers that members of the jury chatted and laughed among themselves as the farce proceeded. The only admission gained from Ambrose was that he had not employed any one named Thomas Dwyer in the Street Department during the months of August and September, 1898.

Otis Wise, who is retained as special counsel in the case by a firm of City Hall warrant shavers, made special inquiry as to whether Ambrose ever delegated to any one authority to sign demands as correct. His evident intention was to lay the groundwork for a civil action against Ambrose, but that worthy, scenting danger of an attachment being levied on the big house he acquired while he was Superintendent of Streets, was equal to the emergency and gave the following elastic answer:

"If the deputy was authorized by me to certify for me that the demands were all right then he had the power."

Ambrose was next shown an official record of the Street Department kept during his term of office—1897-98—and asked to identify it.

"I would not swear whether it was or not," responded the agile Ambrose. "I have no recollection of those particular items."

Then the prosecution gave him up and the well-pleased defense said, "No cross-examination," and thanked the man with the convenient memory for his testimony.

Harry Piper, who was chief deputy [illegible]

As Piper did not know his own signature, Joseph Goddard, chief clerk to the County Clerk, was called to identify it for him. Goddard said: "This signature is the signature of Harry Piper." After recess, however, the witness reversed his testimony, and said he could not identify the writing, as he had no personal knowledge of it. Neither could he swear, he said, that the paper in question was McGlade's official oath or that there ever was such an official oath, the paper having passed out of the custody of the office.

Piper was recalled, but his memory was still balky. He was shown a batch of oaths of office indorsed by him, but he declared:

"I would not swear it was my signature or that it was not."

Policeman Thomas Gibson swore that he got the paper from the County Clerk's office during the last trial and gave Deputy Johnson a receipt for it. Inquiry for Johnson disclosed the fact that he was very sick and could not appear.

Thomas F. Clark, a deputy under Ambrose, testified that he had not written his name in the bogus Dwyer salary demand, nor authorized any one else to sign it. No man named T. Dwyer had been employed by or had done any work for the Street Department in the period mentioned. The witness said it was his duty to certify to all underground work, and he had always done so.

Juror McGuerren, a brother-in-law of Superintendent of Streets Ackerson, under whom McGlade served two years, asked the witness several questions.

It was developed by the testimony of Clark that J. G. Cathcart, assistant bookkeeper to McGlade and an important witness for the prosecution, had gone East. The witness had seen Cathcart at the ferry last Saturday with a ticket in his hand.

Ambrose was recalled and shown several books of record of his administration, but he refused to identify them.

John Ryan, assistant clerk of the Board of Supervisors, showed by the record that McGlade had signed for the bogus demand. Ryan said that he saw McGlade write his name.

On cross-examination the defense brought out that at the time in question Ryan had not taken the oath of office, and therefore his acts were not official.

The wretched farce of trying McGlade will be resumed this morning.

Call May 23-1901

Post May 22-1901

NO FREEDOM FOR McGLADE'S JURY

It Must Stay to Try the Case of Forgery Against the Defendant.

The Question of "Once in Jeopardy" Would Arise if the Panel Were Let Go.

THERE will be no change in the jury to try McGlade, a fact that was decided yesterday by the three Judges of the criminal departments of the Superior Court. It took the morning and a good part of the afternoon to reach the conclusion, for counsel for each side argued the matter thoroughly.

Judge Cook had invited Judge Lawler and Judge Dunne to sit with him to hear the point argued. It was a new one to the lawyers of this city, and perhaps elsewhere, for when Otto Wise was asked to present authorities on the discharge of juries after they had been sworn, he admitted that so far as he knew it was a motion which, under the existing conditions, was without precedent.

Matters were made much easier for the court by the admission of Mr. Wise that there was nothing about the personnel of the jury to which he took exception, and the burden of the remarks of T. J. Lennon, counsel for the prisoner, in his answering argument was that if the prosecution was sure the jury was fair and honest, they had secured just what the law endeavors to guarantee them, and so any motion for its discharge could not be maintained.

Lennon opened proceedings in the morning with a demurrer to the motion. For nearly an hour he argued that the jury was properly summoned and properly drawn. He argued that the filling of the jury box by means of a special venire was right and proper and good according to all custom in the courts. The prosecution had objected to it, but Lennon took occasion to say that it was a custom well known to all Judges, most lawyers and some District Attorneys. Whereat the bailiff rapped for order. Lennon also criticized the English in the motion, said the meaning was obscure in some places and absent in others. He was generally sarcastic and caustic regarding the motion to discharge.

Wise opened for the prosecution. He asked the Judges not to confound the question of jeopardy with their right to dismiss. He admitted the proceeding was without precedent, but claimed that the court had discretion in extraordinary cases to discharge the jury when it became apparent that it had not been properly drawn. In saying this he was careful to explain that he cast no reflection upon the jury. He said he thought the jury eminently fair and impartial, but he did blame the officers of the court, and for their irregularities he asked that the jury be discharged. He said the question of jeopardy was not relevant at the time, but might come up later, a statement that Judge Lawler took up quietly with the remark, "Then it might be too late."

Deuprey then followed with arguments upon the special venire and why it should not have been ordered. Judge Lawler asked if the prosecution had any authorities in support of the motion to discharge, even under the circumstances that the allegations were all true. They had none handy, and so the court took a recess until 2 o'clock, at which time the prosecution submitted a formidable list that was afterward ruthlessly set aside. Lennon was asked to close, and he confined himself to the two points—first, that there was no fraud alleged against the court officials, and secondly, that the jury being so entirely satisfactory to the prosecution, there could be no reason in a motion to discharge it.

Judge Cook spoke for the court. It was the unanimous opinion of the Judges, he said, that the motion to discharge could not be entertained. No actual fraud had been alleged, and so what had happened could be looked upon only in the light of an irregularity. As to the objection to the special venire, it could not be considered, as without special venires the general jury box would always be empty. As to the allegations, he said, they could be brought before the court upon application and in another and independent proceeding.

Judge Lawler delivered the dictum of the court upon the subject of jeopardy. Unless it was clearly shown that the question of jeopardy would not attach itself to the case, he said, the jury sworn could not be discharged. A prisoner is on trial and consequently in jeopardy, he continued, when the jury is impaneled and sworn, and in support of this he quoted the opinion of Cooley in his "Constitutional Limitations."

In conclusion Judge Lawlor said it should be distinctly understood that the court did not pass upon the merits of the allegations, only upon the question of law involved.

That ended the matter and the case against McGlade was set for trial this morning.

As the question of fact had not arisen in the proceeding before the three Judges affidavits made by Oscar Tolle, clerk of the court, and Stevens, the court reporter, were not read. In Tolle's affidavit he maintains that he dropped the names into the box in an "indiscriminate mass," and that he twirled the box and drew them in the proper way. He denied also that there were any packages of names in the box or that it was possible for him to tell one name from another. Stevens swore that he saw the clerk shuffle the name slips after he dropped them into the jury box one by one, and that there were no packages of names segregated in the box. He avers that he was in a position to see the box and its contents, and he knows there was no irregularity in the drawing of the jury.

"I have not as yet decided whether or not the charges against Clerk Tolle and Bailiff Dasha will be prosecuted further," said District Attorney Byington after the court adjourned yesterday. "In the face of their affidavits, two against one, it is difficult to formulate plans for further investigation of the case. I have my individual opinion, but that would not assist the Grand Jury in an investigation of the alleged frauds. The Grand Jury requires evidence on which to act. I shall endeavor to back up my individual opinion by obtaining more evidence. I will consult with Mr. Wise, and if the conditions warrant I will lay the matter before the Grand Jury."

COLD FACTS ARE REQUIRED

The McGlade Scandal Bids Fair to Fail.

Three Judges Demand Proof of Attorney Otto Wise.

It is more than likely that the sensational charges brought by Attorney Otto Irving Wise against Clerk Oscar Tolle, in the McGlade perjury case, before Superior Judge Cook yesterday, will go up in thin air.

Mr. Wise must prove his charge and the jury will not be dismissed unless cold facts are brought out showing that Deputy Sheriff Dasha secured jurors irregularly, and unless it can be shown that Tolle actually juggled with the ballot box.

Judges Cook, Dunne and Lawlor of the Superior bench sat in banc this morning when the matter was brought up. Deputy District Attorney Deuprey asked at once that the motion to dismiss the jury be brought up and considered.

Attorney Thomas Lennon for McGlade promptly protested, and declared that the court could not take any action unless facts were presented showing that such a procedure would ge warranted. Mr. Lennon then declared that none of the facts suggested in the Wise affidavit of yesterday had been proven and that mere allegations could not demand recognition from the court. Mr. Lennon then declared that the deputy Sheriff had conformed to the law in taking men from the highway.

"The law specifically states," said Mr. Lennon, "that the jurors shall be taken from the body of the county, and if the highway is not in the body of the county, then what does the law mean?"

Lennon then attacked the Wise affidavit. He claimed that a dismissal of the jury at this juncture would effect a miscarriage of justice, and then Mr. Wise had an inning.

Decisions were read in support of yesterday's motion, although counsel admitted that there was no case of record in California where a jury had been thus dismissed.

A counter argument was made, and Judge Lawlor then ended the arguments by ruling that facts would have to be presented in absolute proof of the charge made, and that the court would have to look into the alleged fraud, probing for the facts and seeking to ascertain if it really had authority to act if the charges were proven. The matter was then adjourned until a late hour this afternoon.

Three affidavits await the next attack from Mr. Wise. One is made by Clerk Oscar Tolle, pointedly denying Mr. Wise's charges, one is made by Deputy Sheriff Dasha and another by Stenographer Stevens. They all deny the fraud alleged.

Call May 22-1900

CHARGES OF IRREGULARITY AGAINST THE McGLADE JURY

Sensational Affidavit Filed by Otto I. Wise and a Motion Asking for the Discharge of the Jurors.

Principal Actors in the Latest Court Scandal.

THE McGlade case before Judge Cook came to a sudden and unexpected stop yesterday. Three jurors demanded that they be excused from the panel. Counsel for the defense refused to entertain an excuse for the cause they alleged and counsel for the prosecution moved that the whole jury be discharged and that the case start over again.

The three jurors asked for their liberty on the ground that it had been stated that they had been irregularly drawn. They declared it was a reflection upon them and they did not wish to serve under the circumstances. Then Otto I. Wise, special counsel for the prosecution, came forward with an affidavit to the effect that the jury was irregular and making charges of irregularity against Oscar Tolle, the court clerk who drew the jury. There was a hot argument for a few minutes, when it was decided to allow the matter to go over until this morning, when it will be heard before the three Superior Judges of criminal departments, Judge Lawlor, Judge Cook and Judge Dunne.

J. B. Williams was the first juror to demand his release. He was followed in his plea by John Corbett and then by A. Hiller, but their prayer was not heeded. Then Mr. Deuprey, the assistant District Attorney, rose and suggested that, as what he had to say was not exactly proper for the jury to hear, it be ordered to withdraw from the courtroom. T. J. Lennon, who represents McGlade, objected on the ground that the jurors, having heard so much, had better hear the remainder. His objection to their absence prevailed. Deuprey moved that the jury be discharged on the ground of irregularity and read an affidavit sworn to by Otto I. Wise.

The fore part of the affidavit related to the drawing of the first nine jurors. The panel had been exhausted on May 15 and the Judge had ordered a special venire of forty to be returned by the Sheriff. This panel also was exhausted on May 16 and the court ordered twenty-five names to be drawn from the general jury box. He also ordered attachments against eight of the special venire of forty, who had failed to respond. These were returnable on May 17. The affidavit then picks up the case on May 17 and goes on to relate:

At that time but three vacant chairs remained in the jury box and the clerk proceeded to impanel the balance of this jury. That from the list he drew the names of Corbett, Willis and Hiller, all of whom had been subpenaed by order of the court for the special venire, and no names from the list of twenty-five ordered by the court were called. I then went to the desk of the clerk upon which the jury box was placed and looked into the said jury box where I saw that the names of jurors upon the slips of paper were not placed in the box to comply with custom and the law, but that there were two separate and distinct packages, one on either side of the jury box, and each carefully placed so that an intermingling of the names was absolutely impossible. The two packages were at least two inches apart and each package was carefully piled up. I called the attention of the court to this proceeding, but presently the clerk had sworn the jury, closed the box and revolved the same.

I further depose and say that at no time before this during that session of the court did the clerk revolve the box, for I took special notice.

Continuing his affidavit Wise goes on to say that immediately after the adjournment of the court he went to the Sheriff's office to investigate. He found that four deputies were ordered to summon the special venire and to serve summons only upon the first citizens obtainable. Deputy Sulzner served ten, out of which but three were called, and all were excused. Deputy Jenny served nine, out of which one was called and excused. Deputy McCarthy served nine, of which four were called and excused. The fourth deputy was William Dashn, bailiff of department 12, where McGlade is under trial. He summoned sixteen, out of which six were called and accepted by the defendant. These were Corbett, Delling, Willis, Hiller, McGurren and Shafer.

Dashn was called and questioned in the presence of Sheriff Lackmann and Under Sheriff Hare. He said he had never seen the men mentioned before. He said he was walking along Market street when he met Hiller. He had never seen him before, did not know his name, residence or occupation, nor anything else about him, but he served a subpena on him. He pursued the same tactics in the cases of Corbett and Willis. In the case of Delling, he said he met the juror on Sacramento street just as he was leaving a building. He knew nothing about Delling. As to Shafer, Dashn said he was walking along Tenth street when he saw a milk wagon approaching, and he served the driver of the wagon, whom he did not know and had never seen before. And as to McGurren, he was served in a saloon on Market street near the City Hall.

Upon this statement of facts the District Attorney made his motion for the discharge of the jury. In his motion he made the following points:

That the alleged jury obtained for the trial of the foregoing action has not been had in accordance with the provisions of the law as hereinbefore specified, but has been impaneled in mixed form.

First—From an alleged regular selection from names taken originally from names of citizens selected for the twelve Superior Judges of the Superior Court for the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, in January, 1900.

Second—From a special venire ordered by the court and violated in summoning in this: That a large portion of said special venire was summoned from people in the street and from a milk wagon in summoning the driver thereof, and that each summoning under order for a special venire was in fact from bystanders and not from the body of the county.

Third—In seeking to obtain a part of said alleged jury had herein from names of twenty-five citizens whose names were drawn from the trial jury box containing names of talesmen selected by the Judges of the Superior Court in January, 1900.

Fourth—That those summoned as trial jurors under the order for special venire herein were summoned irrespective of whether they were residents, citizens, taxpayers or competent.

Lennon opposed the motion on the ground that it was made to intimidate the jury and to prejudice them against the defense. He was asked by the court if he had any counter affidavits, and he replied by asking for time to prepare arguments in the matter. It was then ordered that the case come up again this morning.

Oscar Tolle, the clerk, made a statement to the County Clerk in regard to his connection with the affair. He said he drew the jury as he had drawn every jury for the past fifteen years that he has served in the County Clerk's office. He said the names of those jurors attached, as well as the twenty-five new ones, were all put into the box together and shaken up. He declared that the names drawn were drawn properly and regularly. As for any heaps of names in the box, he said if there were any he did not see them.

Dasha made a statement to the Sheriff in which he described the manner in which he secured the jurors for his part of the special venire of forty. He said he went out as he always did and took the first likely looking men he met on the street and that the three other deputies did the same.

As it stands, the case is one of veracity between the court officials and the prosecuting counsel, but it may be that there has been so much said that the Judge today may consider it better to let the jury go and start again. The defense makes no secret of its theory in regard to the whole affair. The challenges of the prosecution had been exhausted and they were powerless to stop objectionable jurors, so the defense believes this method was resorted to to secure a more satisfactory jury. The prosecution maintains, however, that the question of challenges never entered into the controversy, for they were exhausted long before any irregularity was discovered in the drawing of the names. It is also the theory of the defense that the prosecution has allowed the matter to go too long and having allowed the jury to be sworn without objection it must accept it without further complaint.

The matter will be settled one way or the other this morning.

Those on the jury are F. L. Guneiz, D. Gruve, R. J. Hancock, Clarence Musto, E. D. Sachs, J. B. Williams, F. E. Shafer, H. F. McGurren, Fred Delling, E. Willis, John Corbett and A. Hiller.

News Letter May 26-1900

THE trial of Peter McGlade has from the first presented many of the aspects of a merry farce. While it is in progress comment as to the guilt of the defendant is of course withheld, but it is safe to say that if an unfixed jury were to declare him not guilty, he would immediately die of surprise.

Chron May 25 1900

293

BIG LEGAL GAPS ARE YAWNING IN McGLADE'S CASE

Principal Witness Gone and the Indictment Found to Be Faulty.

Jack Cathcart Has Skipped East After Being Summoned to Appear and Testify Against the Prisoner.

After only one day's testimony the McGlade case has developed holes big enough to drive a coach and four through. There is an error in the indictment that brings a smile to the faces of the defendant's counsel every time the instrument is referred to. John J. Cathcart, the principal witness against the defendant, is missing, and the last heard of him he was checking his trunk for a journey East. The Deputy Sheriff who arrested McGlade has telegraphed to the prosecution that he has broken his arm and cannot attend, and Clarke, the man who had charge of the sewer gangs of the Street Department, may be ruled out as a witness altogether, because his name is not properly given in the accusation.

The absence of Cathcart may prove a serious blow to the prosecution, for he is the only man who can prove McGlade's signature, and proof of this and also of McGlade's handwriting must be the basis for the expert testimony connecting McGlade with the forgeries. Cathcart has been in court at almost every session at which the McGlade case came up, but he has not been in attendance this week. His absence was not noticed until Thomas Clarke told Tom Gibson, the detective, that he met Cathcart at the ferry depot Saturday evening, and Cathcart said he was going East to take charge of the business of some firm. Gibson at once started a hunt for the elusive witness, but his search was in vain. He has not been able to find Cathcart anywhere, and the chances are that by now he is well out of the way of any process from this State.

Phillips, the Deputy Sheriff who arrested McGlade, was up here some days ago when the case was called in Judge Cook's absence. It was announced that the case would go on, anyway, but when it was called it was put over until the return of Judge Cook. Phillips went back home to Arizona, and now he has sent word that a broken arm will keep him from attending the trial.

As to the error in the indictment, it may work the prisoner's liberty before the defense has done with it, although to an everyday man, with no sense of the law, it seems trivial. McGlade is being tried for the forgery of the name of Thomas Dwyer in a fraudulent demand for payment for work done on the city's sewers. In addition it is charged that all the other signatures certifying to the demand are forged, and Clarke was one of those whose duty it was to keep track of the men working on the sewers and indorse their demands. His name was one of those said to be forged, but in the indictment he is described as Thomas Y. Clarke, while on the stand he swore he was Thomas F. Clarke.

Immediately Attorney Lennon objected to any of his testimony on the ground that he was not the man described in the indictment, and it looked for a while as if the court would sustain the objection. He finally overruled it, however, on the ground that the man's name was Thomas Clarke, anyway, and there is a long line of decisions which says the middle initial is not material, but these do not bear upon indictments, and there is a case on record where the Supreme Court of this State reversed a conviction because the indictment charged "larcey" as the crime instead of "larceny." In overruling the objection the court did so on the understanding that the District Attorney would be responsible, a risk which Mr. Deuprey took upon himself.

The testimony itself is bringing into the light a strange and wonderful collection of short memories. W. F. Ambrose, who was Superintendent of Streets at the time McGlade was in his financial prime, could not identify his own signature on McGlade's certificate of appointment, nor could he say it was McGlade's signature that was signed to the acceptance. It was so long ago that he really could not attempt to say if the signature was his. Later on he took hold of the "blotter," timebook and payroll of the office of the Superintendent of Streets for his term, but he could not say if they were the books of his administration. He kept books, and the books were the same as those handed to him and the entries were the same and they were strangely familiar, but he could not say that the books were his, and no amount of questions would persuade him to do so.

Then Harry Piper was called to show the surprising shortness of his memory. He was shown McGlade's oath of office. It was signed by him as Chief Deputy County Clerk, but he did not know it, nor could he say more than that the signature looked like his signature.

Joe Goddard, the present Chief Deputy County Clerk, was then called, and he identified Piper's signature, getting a scowl from the McGlade friends in the courtroom for his pains. He was also called on to identify the oath, but he would not do it, nor would he say more than that it looked like an official document. It was afterward identified by Gibson, who got it from the County Clerk.

Thomas F. Clarke, after springing the middle letter of his name and telling what he knew of the flight of Cathcart, swore that he had all the sewermen under his charge, that he had to keep their time and certify to their demands, that he had no such man as Thomas Dwyer working for him at the time the Dwyer demand was presented and paid, nor before nor after, and that he never certified to any demand for Thomas Dwyer. But he knew nothing of McGlade's writing or his signature.

John Ryan, the only man with a good memory called during the day, swore that three receipts for demands in his record book were written and signed by McGlade. He is a clerk in the office of the Board of Supervisors, and his duty is to look after the demands. He declared that the Dwyer demand never passed through his hands.

The plan of the prosecution was to prove McGlade's handwriting, and for that reason the day was spent dickering over signatures. If Cathcart could be got at he could perhaps be made to swear to some of McGlade's writing, but as it seems now no one will admit he ever saw enough of McGlade's writing to know it again and the slender thread of Ryan's evidence and the few words in the demand record book may be all the experts will have to work on.

Richardson, Estelle Grace Robin, Eugene Wellington Roland, Evangeline Sale, Fannie May Sanborn, William Beaumont Schaw, *Karl Schluss, Milton Henry Schwartz, Florence Margaret Scott, Elizabeth Mitchell Seupham, Paul Selby, Charles Robert Seesdon, Walter Samuel Seeston, William James Shaw, Hiram Franklin Sheldon, Mary Southern Shiree, Paul Marlin Sinsheimer, Elizabeth Jackson Skinner, Howard Hughie Smith, John Stanislaus Soares, Michael Charles Specht, Mrs. Marion Cummings Stanley, Jesse Henry Steinhart, Robert Pettinger Stephenson, Theresa Viola Stone, Fannie May Sumner, Amy Tabbott, Taishi Tanabe, Irene Taylor, *Ollie Lord Taylor, Edith Bruce Thatcher, Helena Pearl Thomas, Mabel Winifred Thomas, Margaretta Louise Thornton, Edward Ingram Tillow, Margaret Todd, Richard Walton Tully, *Grace Abbie Terrell, Mary Winifred Tyrrell, Amy Henriette Van Deetlin, Lillian Claire Verssloten, Mosebeth Vargeman, Elly Jay Wager, Albert Morton Walsh, Anna Florence White, Howard Collins White, Louise Huckley Whitehead, Ellen Wilkinson, Mabel Lucinda Williams, *Flora Wilson, Andrew McLellan Wellenden, Miriam Mae Wollner, Alice Bowman Wright, Otto Charles Zinns.

The students whose names are marked with stars completed last Christmas the work required for graduation, but by a rule of the faculty are considered as graduating with the entire class.

To Teach Without Pay.

OAKLAND, March 8.—At the meeting of the Board of Education to-night it was announced that the teachers of the High School would teach next week without pay, hoping to be remunerated some time. Then for the week following that, from March 18th to 25th, the mid-term vacation will be declared. This will give the Council two weeks in which to transfer to the High School fund sufficient money to keep that department going until the end of the school year.

CLASS ATHLETES WILL STRUGGLE FOR HONORS.

Freshmen and Sophomores to Hold Their Field Day at Berkeley To-Day.

BERKELEY, March 8.—Freshmen and sophomores of the University of California are to meet to-morrow afternoon in the great interclass event of the college year, their annual field day. The contest is to take place on the campus cinder track, beginning at 1:30 o'clock. With several men in the entries capable of breaking university records there is every chance of an exciting meet. Athletic rivalry is running high between the two classes, and each has had a squad of lively sprinters and jumpers in close training for a month. Both classes expect to win. The second year men have the advantage of the most experience and can undoubtedly take the sprints, but the baby class claims the points in the field events. The hurdles and the distance runs are expected to prove the debatable events in which the result of the day is to be settled.

The best man in the field day is Cadogan, the little runner who is supposed to be yards better than any other sprinter in college. He is expected to win all the dashes for the sophomores. Townsend of the same class is picked to finish second in the 220-yard and the 440-yard events. For the 100 and 220 the freshmen have Stephen Ashli and Ligda, both cracks of the Academic League last year. Freshman Cheek, a long-limbed youngster from Oakland, is first choice in the hurdles. He, with Freshman Cooley, should win the jumps. Wilcox and Starr, both of the baby class, have been vaulting better than any others. In distances the sophomores have Bailey and Clifford, while the freshmen have entered Woods and Graves.

Later in the afternoon the varsity nine is to cross bats with the Alumni team for a second baseball game. The graduates are to be strengthened by the addition of McLaren '99, Krug '98, Cheesebrough '93, "Cub" Baer '99 and Fuller '02, all former varsity stars, who have promised to be on hand to-morrow. Swindells of Stanford is to catch and Pete Kaarsberg to twirl for the Alumni.

FATHER MADE GOOD DAUGHTER'S DEFICIENCY.

Postmistress at San Quentin Short in Accounts, Which She Claimed Was Due to Robbery.

SAN QUENTIN, March 8.—Last December Postal Inspector R. H. Munro men-

WILL DENOUNCED AS A FORGERY.

Attorney Stevens Says Four Witnesses Committed Perjury

HE ALSO IS ACCUSED OF DESIRING MONEY.

ARGUMENT IN THE CONTEST OVER LEROS ERICKSON'S WEALTH.

Conduct of Mrs. Annie J. Armstrong, Who Was Named as Sole Legatee, Is Criticised in Unsparing Manner.

The persons interested in having the will of Leros Erickson admitted to probate were severely denounced yesterday by Martin Stevens, whom Judge Troutt appointed as attorney for the absent heirs. Attorney John J. Scrivner made an argument in favor of the admission of the will, but Stevens insisted that it was a forgery, the temptation to manufacture it being the $[illegible] that the old man left. Erickson died on December 31, 1900, at the Cosmopolitan House, on Sansome street. Adrian Cabrol, one of the proprietors, and his partner, Frederick Delmas, suggested to the aged Erickson, who had no relatives or particular friends here, that he should leave his bank deposits to them, and they had an assignment drawn up by an attorney for him to sign, but it was not signed. The will was shown four days after Erickson's death. It gave his estate to Mrs. Annie J. Armstrong of 625 Pine street, because of friendship. It bore a cross mark for Erickson's signature and was witnessed by Delmas and Cabrol. H. E. Thomas of [illegible] Pine street testified that he wrote the ink copy of the will from a penciled draft furnished by Mrs. Armstrong, who said that the draft was dictated by Erickson.

"My friend, Mr. Stevens, blames Delmas and Cabrol for wanting a little of Erickson's wealth," Scrivner remarked in his argument, "but he would not object to having a little of it himself. He would get some of it if he could; is that not so? They knew that it would escheat to the State unless it were given to some one."

"Did they know that?" asked Stevens.

"They knew that it would go to the State or to the attorney for absent heirs," responded Scrivner. "Now, tell me, as an honest attorney for absent heirs——"

"There is no such attorney," said Stevens sarcastically, interrupting.

"Tell me why, if Cabrol and Delmas forged this will, they did not forge Erickson's name to the assignment?" Scrivner continued. "Then they would have had no need to divide the money with others. I ask your honor to admit this will to probate, for within a year that action can be revoked and if there be any such wrongdoing as has been alleged it will be made manifest before the expiration of a year."

Stevens, in replying, said: "We claim that Thomas, Mrs. Armstrong, Cabrol

WANT FLAT TAX RATE FOR PARKS

Commissioners Think They Are Not Given Full Justice

PUBLIC LIBRARY HAS SIMILAR COMPLAINT.

LAWYERS SAY CLEAR INTENT OF CHARTER HAS BEEN IGNORED.

Fixed Apportionments in the Budget In Place of a Tax Levy Are Held to Be Not in Accordance With the Law.

The Park Commission has been hampered this year by an insufficient appropriation, and in canvassing the possibilities for more money next year it has raised the question whether it was treated fairly in the last apportionment. Its conclusion, backed by the opinion of Reuben H. Lloyd and other attorneys, is that it should have received more money from the tax levy than was allowed it. In support of this contention it quotes section 11, article 14 of the charter, which reads as follows:

> The Supervisors shall provide all necessary money for the maintenance, preservation and improvement of said parks, squares, avenues and grounds, and to that end shall annually levy a tax on all property in the city and county not exempt from taxation, which shall not be less than 5 cents nor more than 7 cents upon each $100 assessed valuation of said property.

The Supervisors made their apportionment for the current fiscal year on the assumption that the total valuation of property for assessment purposes would be $315,000,000, and the amount allowed for parks was $245,000, which was a fraction less than 6.634 cents on each $100. The assessment roll actually amounted to considerably over $400,000,000, and if the Supervisors had allowed the rate agreed on, instead of apportioning a fixed sum, the Park Commission would have profited by the increase in the assessment roll. As it was, it made no difference what the roll might amount to, as the appropriation was fixed. It is claimed that the charter requires a tax rate of not more than 7 nor less than 5 cents, and that this tax shall be levied on all the assessable property, which was clearly not done this year. The same contention is made by the Board of Library Trustees. Under the heading "Public Library and Reading-rooms," article 7, chapter 1, section 2, the charter says:

> The Supervisors shall, for the purpose of maintaining such library and reading-rooms, * * * annually levy a tax on all property in the city and county not exempt from taxation, which shall not be less than [illegible] cents nor more than [illegible] cents upon each $100 assessed valuation of said property. The proceeds of said tax shall be credited to the library fund.

There was allowed this year for the library the sum of $59,600, which would have been increased materially had the Supervisors fixed a rate for the library instead of apportioning a specific sum.

Auditor Wells has had this matter called to his attention, and he will bring it to the notice of the Supervisors when ...sity to Send Out ...gest Class in May.

March 8.—As a result of [illegible] increase of late years in entering students the University will graduate next [illegible] class it has ever sent out [illegible] young men and women are [illegible] forth from the regular course at the coming commencement, fifteen or twenty more [illegible] graduate department. The [illegible] last year had 221 members [illegible] of 1899 contained 2[illegible] Sutton gave out to-day the prospective graduates [illegible] be a few additions. Those who will receive their [illegible] in May will be as follows:

[illegible]

[illegible] postoffice, which was forwarded to Washington, that the cash of the Postoffice, of which Miss Ebella Edwards is Postmistress, failed to agree with the books to the amount of $[illegible]. The shortage had been promptly met by Miss Edwards' aged father, who refunded the amount to the Government in full, and since that time no action further than reporting the matter to Washington has been taken.

Miss Edwards claims that some time previous to the shortage a thief entered her house at night and robbed her of the missing cash which she had taken home with her. She says she confided the facts of her loss to her father, who came forward and gave her sufficient money to meet the deficiency. The Postmistress failed, however, to report the matter to the Postoffice Department until the arrival of the inspectors, when she claims she made an open statement of the whole affair and handed them the cash before they commenced working on her books. This explanation would seem plausible enough did it receive the support of Miss Edwards' father, but the aged man refuses to stand back of it. When interviewed today he burst into tears and gave the following story:

"I am going to the poorhouse to-morrow morning because every cent I had in the world has been given to protect my daughter's name. I have lain sick and alone in my house when neither my son nor my daughters would come to see me, but because Ebella bore her mother's name I have sacrificed myself to save her. This morning she threatened me if I talked she would commit suicide, but the whole truth is better than the suspicions with which this whole affair is now regarded. On the 15th of last December Inspector Monroe of the Postoffice Department came to me and told me my daughter's accounts were short $[illegible] and asked me who her bondsmen were. I said to him: 'You will not need the bondsmen, for every cent of that deficiency I will make good.' At that time all I had left in the world was $[illegible] in bank and the little chicken ranch from which I gained support. I drew out the $[illegible] and borrowed $[illegible] more, and every cent of it I gave to square my daughter's name on the books. Later I sold my chicken ranch to pay back the money I borrowed, and to-day I have left not a cent in the world. I believe my daughter gave most of the missing money to her brother, who has been my undutiful son. After the death of my wife my son and daughters drove me from my home so that I have had to live on the little chicken ranch which I have been obliged to sell."

Miss Edwards' friends, however, deny her father's story. They say he has a large amount of money in bank and that he was not obliged to sell his chicken ranch to make good her loss. They say the $[illegible] was undoubtedly all stolen and that the father made the deficiency good with the knowledge that he would be paid back. Later the father himself admitted that the Postmistress had out of her own meager savings made up a small portion of the deficiency.

Band of Mercy Choral Society.

The children comprising the choral section of the Bands of Mercy met yesterday afternoon at the residence of Miss Katherine Black, teacher of music in the public schools. Besides practicing the numbers which will be sung at the entertainment and lecture to be given next Wednesday evening at the Academy of Sciences, the little people had a feast, provided by County Clerk William [illegible] Deane, whose wife is deeply interested in humane work. They had all the ice cream, cake and candy they could eat and spent a very happy few hours.

[illegible] witness stand. I stand here as a friend of the Court. On December 31st Cabrol told Mr. [illegible] that Erickson left no will, and the conduct of everybody concerned in this conspiracy agrees with the idea that the will was not written in ink until after Erickson's funeral. Mrs. Armstrong had done nothing for Erickson before December 3, 1900. She only had a speaking acquaintance with him before that date. If Erickson had bequeathed his estate to her and she knew it, she would have shown more interest in him. She would have called in a doctor and sought spiritual consolation for him on his deathbed. She would not have made merely a casual visit to the Coen House on the morning after his death, but have treated the news of it indifferently. She would have assisted in the funeral arrangements and put on mourning.

Stevens criticised her testimony that she had not intended to go to Erickson's funeral on being first informed of his death. He first called this statement "a monstrous proposition" and then "a faux pas." He referred to Mrs. Armstrong as "a $4 a month seamstress, a female nondescript, who was neither a widow, a wife nor a divorcee." He did not spare condemnatory words in picturing her. She sat in the courtroom while he spoke.

Stevens said of Cabrol: "He graduated from the kitchen of the Bohemian Club to be the keeper of a cheap lodging-house. He was shifty and evasive on the stand. He would venture a little out of his hole and then, with a whisk of his tail, dart back into the opening. His physiognomy betokens the daring criminal. He is of a type with the men whose heads ornamented the baskets at the foot of the Parisian guillotine. He and his accomplice, Delmas, robbed the room of their tenant, Erickson. Mrs. Armstrong made no inquiry as to when the funeral would be. She went to the funeral with Cabrol, but, although he had the will in his pocket while they were in the carriage, as he testifies, he did not deliver it to her until after the funeral, when he appeared at 625 Pine street and handed it over with a spectacular display. Since Erickson's death she has not paid a visit to his grave."

Scribner stated that her reason for not going was that for three weeks she was sick, and he could testify that she was sick. Stevens said that the fact that Scribner armed himself in advance with affidavits concerning the making of the will showed that he doubted its genuineness. Attention was directed to words and figures in the will to support the theory that it was forged. The case was submitted for decision.

MARRIAGE LICENSES.—The following marriage licenses were issued yesterday: [illegible] Haskell, [illegible] Minnesota street, aged 21, and Ada [illegible] Caton, [illegible] Minnesota street, 20; James H. White, [illegible] Mission street, 28, and Sadie Willie, [illegible] Mission street, 21; Charles [illegible] [illegible] street, 33, and Margaret [illegible] Nelson, [illegible] street, 22; Jacob Marks, 47 [illegible] street, 21, and [illegible] [illegible] street, 29; [illegible] street, 18; Frederick [illegible] [illegible] street, 20, and [illegible] street, 2[illegible], and [illegible] [illegible] street, 2[illegible].

[illegible] penditures on the first Monday in May, as required by law.

SERVICES BY THE BRIGGS BROTHERS.—The services for men only at the Young Men's Christian Association Auditorium, Mason and Ellis streets, conducted during the month of March by the Briggs brothers, will be especially interesting to-morrow. Rev. Herbert F. Briggs will give the address and the Oakland Quartet will render several selections. The service commences at 3 o'clock and is open free to all young men.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Straighten up. Why do you wash in the hardest possible way? Use PEARLINE, there's no bending over the tub, no back kinks, no work to speak of, no wear and tear from rubbing. Millions use PEARLINE. No matter how or when you use PEARLINE, or however delicate your hands or the fabric, it is absolutely harmless. 636

SICK HEADACHE

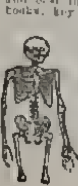
Positively cured by these Little Pills.

They also relieve Distress from Dyspepsia, Indigestion and Too Hearty Eating. A perfect remedy for Dizziness, Nausea, Drowsiness, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Coated Tongue Pain in the Side, TORPID LIVER. They Regulate the Bowels. Purely Vegetable.

Small Pill. Small Dose. Small Price.

MEDICAL BOOK FREE

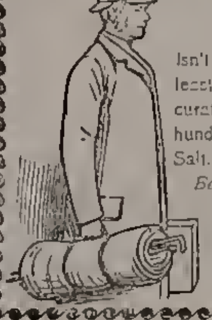
[illegible]



Visit DR. JORDAN'S Great Museum of Anatomy [illegible]

DR. JORDAN—Private Diseases. [illegible]

Philosophy of Marriage. MAILED FREE.



Going to Carlsbad

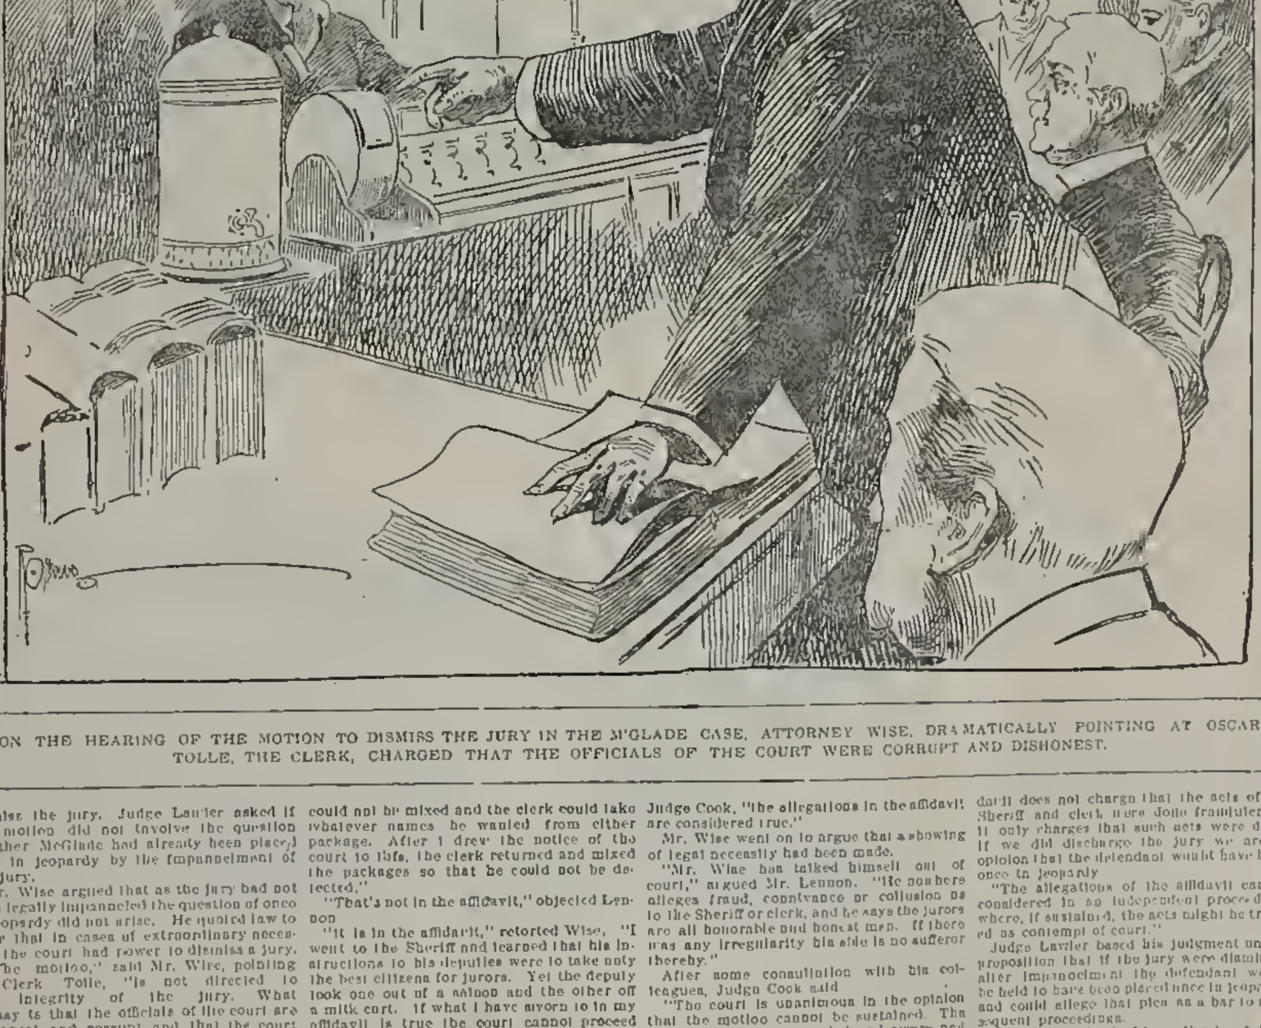
Isn't necessary now. Carlsbad is coming to you. At least, the health-giving part of it is. You get every curative quality that has made the place famous for hundreds of years, in the Carlsbad Sprudel Water and Salt. That is, if you get the genuine.

Beware of the so-called "improved" or "artificial" salts offered in the market. The genuine has the signature of "Eisner & Mendelson Co., sole agents, New York," on every package. Write for pamphlet.

THE EXAMINER, SAN FRANCISCO WEDNESDAY MORNING, MAY 23, 1900.

LEGAL FENCE ERECTED TO SAVE TOLLE AND DASHA FROM INVESTIGATION FOR THE FRAUDS CHARGED BY WISE

Court Holds That to Dismiss the Jury After Impanelment Would Be to Place McGlade Once in Jeopardy.



ON THE HEARING OF THE MOTION TO DISMISS THE JURY IN THE M'GLADE CASE, ATTORNEY WISE, DRAMATICALLY POINTING AT OSCAR TOLLE, THE CLERK, CHARGED THAT THE OFFICIALS OF THE COURT WERE CORRUPT AND DISHONEST.

A FROWSY huddle of politicians gathered in Judge Cook's courtroom yesterday morning and nudged and whispered in sympathy with the men under fire—Oscar Tolle and Bailiff Dasha. It seemed as if every man who had ever held a job by the grace of Buckley or Kelly or Crimmins had assembled to lend moral support to the defense. It was in the air that nothing would be done and the prophetic sense of the "push" was sound. Nothing was done. The thing began in fizzle and ended in smoke—legal smoke.

For one thing the attack admitted itself out of court almost at the start when Attorney Otto Wise laid his hand on his heart and with his best bow to the jurors vowed he would rather perish than insinuate anything that might reflect on their honesty. They were all honorable men. Now, this certificate of good moral character—put up by the dozen—elicited a reply like this:

"Wherefore, then, O wise guy, do you object and where does your kick come in? Suppose Tolle, the clerk, has monkeyed with the wheel of justice and suppose that Dasha, the bailiff, has called on his friends of the push to be officers of the court—what then? You say that you have twelve good men and true in the box. Go to. You are a trifler. You are wasting the valuable time of the court and are therefore no gentlemen."

Perhaps this was not the exact language, but if you spread it out over about three hours' talk it will come to nearly the same thing.

The language was not always polite. Lawyer Lennon, who, as counsel for Peter McGlade, undertook the defense of Tolle and Dasha, introduced a whiff of melodrama at the start by charging that the whole thing was a dark and midnight conspiracy, hatched in the District Attorney's office. He rather disappointed hope, raised to the tiptoe of expectancy, by neglecting to say how he had discovered the foul plot and who did the hatching and where were the eggs, but he was certain that the averment that the Sheriff's deputy ought to know whether he was summoning unfit persons to the jury was an "asinine allegation."

A deputy could not be expected to pass on the qualifications of talesmen. Then District Attorney Byington retorted that if Mr. Lennon would present more facts and less vituperation it would be to the purpose.

The court sat in bank, Judges Cook, Lawler and Dunne constituting the bench. The merits of the case and the facts were not touched in the way of proof. The argument went only to settle the point whether there was legal ground to entertain the motion to dismiss the jury. Judge Lawler asked if the motion did not involve the question whether McGlade had already been placed once in jeopardy by the impanelment of the jury.

Mr. Wise argued that as the jury had not been legally impaneled the question of once in jeopardy did not arise. He quoted law to show that in cases of extraordinary necessity the court had power to dismiss a jury.

"The motion," said Mr. Wise, pointing at Clerk Tolle, "is not directed to the integrity of the jury. What we say is that the officials of the court are dishonest and corrupt and that the court cannot proceed with the trial. I saw in the box two packages of names so that they could not be mixed and the clerk could take whatever names he wanted from either package. After I drew the notice of the court to this, the clerk returned and mixed the packages so that he could not be detected."

"That's not in the affidavit," objected Lennon.

"It is in the affidavit," retorted Wise. "I went to the Sheriff and learned that his instructions to his deputies were to take only the best citizens for jurors. Yet the deputy took one out of a saloon and the other off a milk cart. If what I have sworn to in my affidavit is true the court cannot proceed with this trial."

"For the purposes of this motion," said Judge Cook, "the allegations in the affidavit are considered true."

Mr. Wise went on to argue that a showing of legal necessity had been made.

"Mr. Wise has talked himself out of court," argued Mr. Lennon. "He nowhere alleges fraud, connivance or collusion as to the Sheriff or clerk, and he says the jurors are all honorable and honest men. If there was any irregularity his side is no sufferer thereby."

After some consultation with his colleagues, Judge Cook said:

"The court is unanimous in the opinion that the motion cannot be sustained. The jury has been impaneled and sworn and the proceedings were regular. The affidavit does not charge that the acts of the Sheriff and clerk were done fraudulently. It only charges that such acts were done. If we did discharge the jury we are of opinion that the defendant would have been once in jeopardy.

"The allegations of the affidavit can be considered in an independent proceeding, where, if sustained, the acts might be treated as contempt of court."

Judge Lawler based his judgment on the proposition that if the jury were dismissed after impanelment the defendant would be held to have been placed once in jeopardy and could allege that plea as a bar to subsequent proceedings.

After the motion had been dismissed, District Attorney Byington was asked if he would proceed in the manner indicated by Judge Cook, to bring the clerk and bailiff before him for contempt of court. Mr. Byington said he was not certain what course to pursue, but he feared such a proceeding would be useless.

"The attaches of the court would simply do as they have done in this case—that is, swear that everything had been done honestly and rightly. It would result in an inconclusive conflict of testimony."

County Clerk Deane was asked if he would take cognizance of the affidavit concerning the conduct of his deputy, Oscar Tolle.

"I have known Mr. Tolle for a great many years," said Mr. Deane. "He swears that he did not do the acts alleged by Mr. Wise, and I believe him."

Sheriff Lackmann said he hoped the matter would be investigated further by the court.

The trial of McGlade goes on to-day with the same jury.

Ex. June 1-1900

Kytka Testifies Against McGlade.

In the case of Peter W. McGlade, charged with forgery, on trial before Judge Cook and a jury, Theodore Kytka testified yesterday that the disputed document was written by McGlade. He identified McGlade's signature on several papers alleged to be spurious.

Bulletin May 31 1900

EXPERT KYTKA PASSES ON THE M'GLADE FORGERIES.

When the trial of Peter McGlade was resumed before Judge Cook to-day, Theodore Kytka, the writing expert, was placed upon the witness stand. He testified that McGlade wrote the forgeries charged to him. His opinion was founded upon the resemblance between the defendant's genuine signature and the spurious writings.

Post May 31 1900

KYTKA ON THE STAND.

Small Interest Shown in the McGlade Forgery Case.

Expert Theodore Kytka was placed on the witness stand in the McGlade perjury proceeding before Judge Carroll Cook of the Superior Court this morning in a further effort to positively identify McGlade's handwriting. Up strokes, down strokes, dashes and curved lines have been the sole topic of to-day's session, Kytka endeavoring to clearly define his theories as to McGlade's chirography and then apply them so far as the submitted specimens were concerned.

Lax interest and a small attendance at court were features of the trial to-day.

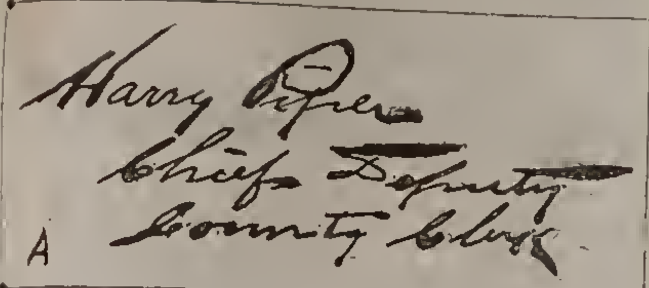
Jun 1-1900.

Theodore Kytka, the handwriting expert, was the only witness in the McGlade forgery trial yesterday. He identified various signatures of the defendant and pointed out the difference in the characteristics manifested in his handwriting and that of Clerk T. B. McGlade.

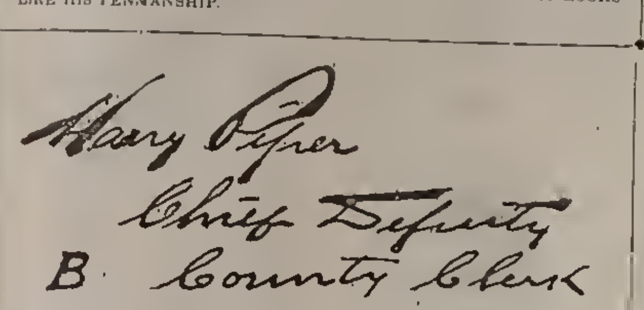
Ex. May 24 1900 Ex May 24 1900

FORMER CITY OFFICIALS SAY THEY FORGET THEIR OWN SIGNATURES

Harry Piper, Ex-Deputy County Clerk, and W. F. Ambrose, Ex-Superintendent of Streets, Claim to Be Afflicted With Amnesia.



THE EXHIBIT MARKED "A" IS A FAC-SIMILE OF THE SIGNATURE WHICH HARRY PIPER SAYS HE CANNOT IDENTIFY; THAT HE DOESN'T REMEMBER WHETHER HE WROTE IT OR NOT, BUT THAT IT LOOKS LIKE HIS PENMANSHIP.



THE EXHIBIT MARKED "B" IS A REPRODUCTION OF THE SIGNATURE WHICH THOMAS F. CLARK SWEARS HE SAW HARRY PIPER WRITE JANUARY 4, 1897.

IN the effort to save Peter W. McGlade from the consequences of the criminal acts charged against him, two men have been produced as witnesses. They are William F. Ambrose, the former Superintendent of Streets, who appointed McGlade, and Harry Piper, the Deputy County Clerk under Charles F. Curry, who accepted McGlade's oath of office. Both of these men say that they cannot identify their own signatures. It will be remembered that Ambrose was Superintendent of Streets during one of the most inefficient administrations of that office in the history of the city, and that Piper narrowly escaped indictment for selling one salary warrant to two different brokers.

Harry Piper (machine Republican), who was chief clerk in the County Clerk's office while Charles F. Curry was County Clerk, swore in Judge Cook's court yesterday that he was not able to identify his signature to the paper which purported to be Peter W. McGlade's oath of office as a Deputy Superintendent of Streets. William F. Ambrose (machine Democrat), a few minutes later swore that he could not identify his signature to the certificate of appointment naming McGlade as a Deputy Superintendent of Streets.

It became necessary to prove that McGlade had legally qualified to act as a deputy in the office of the Superintendent of Streets by taking the oath of office before proof could be adduced to show that McGlade had committed forgery by imposing a spurious claim for $96 for sewer work in the name of T. Dwyer on the city and county of San Francisco.

Piper looked at the paper which purported to bear his signature, and seemed to be puzzled. He rubbed his forehead and scratched his head as if trying to remember something, scrutinized the paper carefully, and then handed the document back to Deputy District Attorney Deuprey.

"Well, is that your signature?" asked Mr. Deuprey.

"It looks like my signature, but I am not sure that it is," replied Piper.

"Do you swear that it is not your signature?" was the next question.

"No, I don't swear that it is or is not my signature. It looks like my writing; that is all I can say," and Piper would go no further.

Joseph Goddard, the present Chief Deputy Clerk, produced a sheaf of documents purporting to be oaths of office sworn to by other deputies who served in the office of the Superintendent of Streets. All the papers purported to be signed by Piper, but Piper could not, for the life of him, say whether the signatures were written by himself or some one else. He admitted that the signatures looked like his handwriting, but he could not remember having signed the papers in question. He signed a great many papers, he said, and could not recall all that he signed.

Mr. Goddard had stated that he believed the signatures to be the genuine signatures of Piper. The oath of McGlade had been obtained from the County Clerk's office by a police detective for the purposes of this trial, and therefore Mr. Goddard could not positively identify it, since he did not produce it. The additional papers, he said, came directly from the files of the County Clerk's office, and he identified them as public documents.

Thomas F. Clark, who was a deputy in the office of the Superintendent of Streets, swore that he took his oath before Piper on January 4, 1897, the same date that appeared on McGlade's oath of office, and that he saw Piper sign his name to his (Clark's) oath. The signature on Clark's oath appeared to be almost identical with that on McGlade's oath and as Detective Thomas Gibson swore that he obtained the oath of McGlade from the office of the County Clerk for the use of the District Attorney the disputed paper—that is, McGlade's oath of office—was admitted in evidence. It required three hours of hard work to secure this much for the prosecution, as technical objections to receiving the paper were urged by Attorney T. J. Lennon, representing the defendant, at every step of the procedure.

William F. Ambrose testified that he appointed McGlade to a deputyship in the office of the Superintendent of Streets in January, 1897. The oath of office over which there had been so much contention was shown to Ambrose. On the face of the paper there appeared a certificate that Ambrose had appointed McGlade a Deputy Superintendent of Streets, but Ambrose swore that he was not able to identify his signature. His recollection was like Piper's memory, he was not sure whether he signed that particular paper or not, and he was afraid to be too positive in a matter when there was a possibility that he might be mistaken. After the manner of Piper, Ambrose said he would not swear the signature was not written by himself. It looked like his writing, but how could he remember a little thing like that for so long?

As in the case of Piper other witnesses will be called to prove the genuineness of Ambrose's signature to other appointments, after which experts will be called to prove that the hand which wrote the other certificates of appointment to deputyships in the street department office also wrote McGlade's certificate of appointment. Ambrose's amnesia will cost the prosecution some time and trouble, but Deputy District Attorney Deuprey says he has no doubt of being able to prove that Ambrose actually did sign the certificate of appointment that gave McGlade his position in the office of the Superintendent of Streets.

Witness Clark swore that the claim presented by McGlade in the name of T. Dwyer for $96 was unauthorized, for the reason that no such person as T. Dwyer was employed in the street department at the date for which the money was drawn by McGlade. Clark was asked what had become of John J. Cathcart, who was McGlade's assistant in the office of the Superintendent of Streets, December 21, 1898, the date of the issue of the claim for $96, alleged to be spurious.

"I saw Mr. Cathcart at the ferry depot last week. He was checking his trunk and told me he was going East," said Clark.

John H. Ryan, assistant clerk of the Board of Supervisors, swore that he delivered the Dwyer claim to McGlade, and that McGlade signed for it in his presence. He identified McGlade's signature on the paper.

Mr. Lennon called in question the right of Ryan to administer an oath at the time of the issuance of the Dwyer claim to McGlade on the ground that Ryan had not at that time taken his oath of office. Ryan promised to look up the record and report the result at the opening of court this morning.

Crimes Against the City.

The scandal that has arisen over the trial of Peter McGlade, on trial for frauds committed as an official of the Street Department, will strengthen the prevailing suspicions that unlawful means are used to protect thieves in public office. The charge has been openly made that Oscar Tolle, the Deputy County Clerk in Judge Cook's court, had tampered with the jury slips in such manner that he was able to pick out such jurors as he wished to complete the jury to try McGlade, and it is assumed that he did pick out jurors who would prevent a conviction.

If the charge made by the attorney for the prosecution is true, the deputy should be sent to the prison from which he tried to save McGlade. Tampering with a jury is one of the most serious crimes known to a free people. The jury is the safeguard of the individual against tyranny, the protection of society against those crimes that destroy it.

Attorney Wise, in his affidavit setting forth his discoveries, states that he found that the clerk had separated the slips in the jury box in such manner that he could select the jurors. The statement shows how easy it may be to name the jury that the clerk wants, unless the attorneys and the court are watchful of every detail in connection with its selection. In the absence of watchfulness, a conspiracy between the Deputy Sheriff who summons a venire from the body of the county, and the Deputy Clerk who draws the names from the box, would determine the membership of the jury.

There have been suspicions of this sort of work for a good while, and there is especial reason to look for it in the case of men who are prosecuted for stealing from the city or State. Few men who are prosecuted for such crimes are convicted, and there has been reason to suspect that just such tactics as are charged in the McGlade case have been used to rescue these criminals from the clutches of justice. If one of the men who are ready to commit a crime to save another criminal from justice has been caught, we trust that he will be put where he will be a warning to others.

Ex. Jun 2 - 1900

M'GLADE TRIAL JURORS HAVE NOT YET AGREED.

Locked Up for the Night by Judge Cook Because No Verdict Was Reported.

The trial of Peter W. McGlade, charged with forgery, was concluded in Judge Cook's court yesterday, and at 5 o'clock the case was submitted to the following jury:

F. L. Gunts, Secretary Gantner & Gunts Undertaking Company, 8 City Hall square.

B. Grave, merchant, 2121 Pacific avenue.

H. J. Hancock, real estate, 628 Broderick.

Clarence Musto of the Neapolitan Paste Company, 705 Battery.

E. A. Sachs of Martin Sachs Company, real estate, 615 Leavenworth.

J. H. Williams, 142 Fourteenth.

F. R. Shaler, California Milk Company, 3171 Twenty-third.

Harry F. McGurren, saloon, 1308 Market.

Frederick Dieling, solicitor, 953 McAllister.

John Corbett, collector, 1014 Lombard.

Adolph Hiller, stationery, 421 Chestnut.

M. E. Willis, 804 Eddy.

At half-past 10 o'clock last night the jurors reported that they had not agreed on a verdict and Judge Cook ordered them locked up until 10 o'clock this morning.

May 25 1900

KYTKA WORKED SIX LONG DAYS FOR NOTHING

He Has a Complaint Against His Prospects in the McGlade Case.

Another Tiresome Day Spent in Trying to Get Writings of the Prisoner Before the Court as Evidence.

There is a striker of the writing expert in the prosecution of Peter McGlade, and if he continues in his present frame of mind he will not testify to the pothooks with which McGlade used to decorate street department paper. Theodore Kytka is the expert the prosecution thought it had, but Kytka has been working for six days over what he thought Cathcart was going to identify, and now Cathcart has skipped and Kytka's six days of labor will have to go to his own satisfaction.

"I have forty-eight pages of photographs," he moaned, "and I will get not a cent for them. I do not like this, and I will not longer remain with the case."

In the anticipation that Cathcart would identify certain exemplars of the handwriting of McGlade, Kytka got his camera out and photographed them in all sorts of poses and situations, in all kinds of lights and shadows and on as many different kinds of plates as he could think of. Now the identification of all that he has been working on has become impossible and all his work has gone for nothing. And the worst of it all is that Kytka does not receive any pay unless he testifies, and if he cannot testify about his photographs, what can he testify to? Evidently nothing, or Kytka's woe would not be so deep nor so lasting.

There were some signatures let in yesterday, however, and these Kytka may work on, but the six days he has put in are irretrievably lost, and so his tale of woe resounds throughout the courtroom.

"It looks bad," he says, "but what can you do? An expert cannot testify to handwriting without preparation, and I have no time to make preparation. My work is lost and I will get nothing for it."

As for the disappearance of Cathcart it looks as if he were gone until next December, for a letter written to Judge Cook, but sent to the lawyers for the prosecution, says he will be away at least until that month. The letter is from M. J. Brandenstein & Co., and they volunteer the information that Cathcart has been waiting for a month for the trial to come on, that he has not been able to take up the territory in the vicinity of Omaha to which they have now assigned him and that in consequence they have lost much business. They say, too, in the letter that Cathcart had a conversation with Judge Cook in regard to his going. To this Judge Cook answers that he does not remember having spoken to Cathcart, and if he did he probably impressed upon his mind what he impressed upon the minds of the other witnesses—that they must not under any circumstances leave the city until allowed to do so by order of court.

The energies of the prosecution were directed yesterday to the introduction of exemplars of McGlade's signature and handwriting. In this they were successful only to the extent of a few signatures which he signed to notes in the possession of Bice and Regensberger. They were identified by Charles Trull, a bookkeeper for the firm, who swore he saw McGlade take his pen and write each signature.

During the morning three lawyers conducted the prosecution. Deuprey started, Wise followed him in an hour or so and Byington wound up the morning on J. J. Lyons, who, as assistant to McGlade when he was in the street department, was supposed to know a good deal more than he was willing to swear to. Lyons could not swear to McGlade's signature, his handwriting or anything that was his, and he further complicated matters by saying he frequently signed McGlade's signature for him. There were several more ex-employes of Ambrose who gave but little testimony during the morning, and in the afternoon T. J. Hastings and T. W. Rivers, ex-members of the Finance Com-

Bank of Chico

Chico, Cal. June 26th 1897

Pay to San Francisco Exch or bearer $ — Two thousand 00/100 — $ 2,000 00/100 and charge to account of

Alfred Fuller

$15000.00 Chico Cal. June 25th 1897

One year after date, (without grace) I promise to pay to the order of A. J. Landis

Fifteen Thousand Dollars, for value received with interest at per cent per until paid, both principal and interest payable only in UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

No.

Alfred Fuller

Chico Rec
May 9 - 1907

DELAYING TRIAL.

Interest Continues to Pile Up on the Fuller Note.

For some unknown reason there appears to be a determined effort on the part of the defense in the case of Dr. A. J. Landis against the estate of Alfred Fuller (the suit in which Landis sues to recover $15,000 and interest on a note alleged to have been given by Fuller to Landis) to prevent the case from coming to trial. So many times has this trial been continued on motion of Attorney Lusk, that it would appear that the defense is either confident of winning the suit or is willing to permit the heavy loss in the way of accumulating interest. However this may be, it is an illustration of the slowness of justice.

In justice to the estate and to the claimant against the estate, an early trial should be had. The court has been ready to hear the case for several months past, but the attorney for the defense has seen fit to cause repeated delays, so that at present there is no more prospect of its being tried than two years ago. Should Landis win, the estate will suffer by several hundred dollars.

M'GLADE IS FOUND GUILTY

And the "Pull" of Another Politician Is at an End.

At 10:30 o'clock this morning the jury in the case of the People vs. Peter W. McGlade returned a verdict of guilty. The verdict was, to say the least, unexpected. It has been a foregone conclusion from the first that the prisoner, who was at one time a politician of no mean influence, would be acquitted. Charges were made against the jury, and Judge Cook was asked to dismiss them after they had been impaneled, because it was alleged crooked work had been used in the selection of the supposedly twelve good men and true. Charges were also brought against Oscar Tolle, the clerk of the court, and Bailiff [illegible] for using undue influence in selecting the jurors. It was also openly declared though not officially, that Judge Cook was a party to the scheme, whose object was the acquittal of McGlade, and even Presiding Judge Dahrs had given the case to Department 12 with the tacit understanding that if the case were placed on the calendar of that court the criminal would be railroaded to freedom.

The case went to the jury last night about 6 o'clock. At 10:[illegible] in the evening they notified the Sheriff that they were unable to agree as yet, and were locked up for the night. McGlade was at liberty on a $[illegible] bond, which Judge Cook accepted last year. This morning, after the twelve men had begun to consider the case again, they took another ballot, with the result that the prisoner was found guilty as charged. McGlade bore the news stolidly, showing no visible signs of emotion.

The jurors were:

F. L. [illegible], secretary Gardner & Gantz Undertaking Company, 8 City Hall square.

D. Grave, Pacific avenue.

R. J. Hacurk, real estate, 923 Broderick street.

Clarence Musto of the Neapolitan Paste Company, 716 Battery street.

E. A. Sache of Martin Sachs Company, real estate, 135 Leavenworth street.

J. B. Williams, 14[illegible] Fourteenth street.

F. E. Shuler, California Milk Company, 3061 Twenty-third street.

Harry F. McGurren, saloon, 138 Market street.

Frederick Dieling, solicitor, 93 McAllister street.

John Corbett, 1014 Lombard street.

Adolph Hiller, stationery, 421 Chestnut street.

H. E. Willies, 504 Eddy street.

The prisoner was immediately ordered into custody. The two other charges pending against him, one for forgery and the other for obtaining money under false pretenses from [illegible] & Regensburger, will be called Monday, and one of these will be tried.

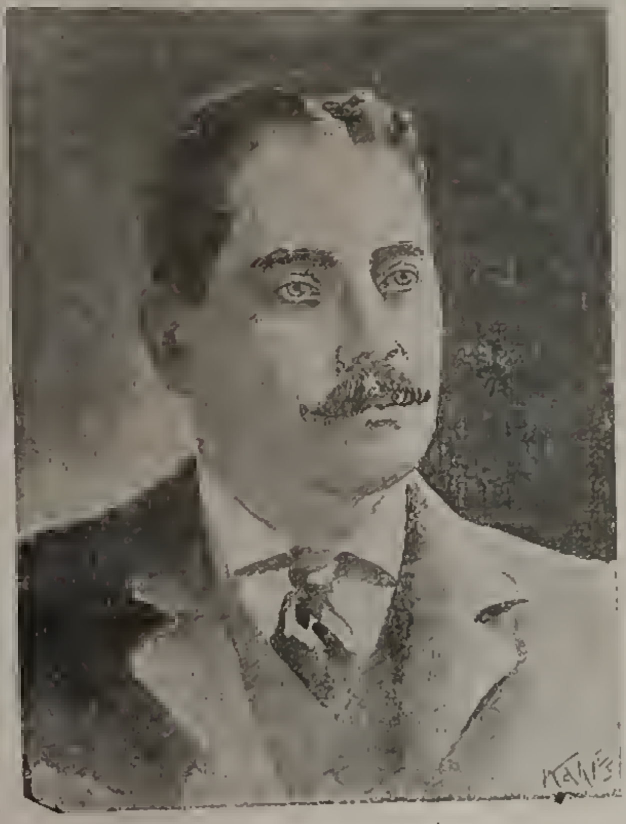
McGlade was tried upon an indictment accusing him of forging the name of T. H. McGlade, deputy clerk of the Board of Supervisors, on a demand in favor of Thomas Dwyer for $96 for underground work for twenty-four days in August, 19[illegible]. Dwyer was not employed in that department. His name and that of T. F. Clark were forged to the documents necessary to secure the money. Sixteen other orders similarly forged were found in the archives of the Street Department.

The case is one that has attracted the closest interest of the politicians of San Francisco. It has defined just how far certain politicians of this city may juggle with justice public funds and public records to meet their own individual ends.

June 2 – '00 Bull

June 2 – '00

PETER W. M'GLADE GUILTY OF FORGERY



Peter McGlade.

Verdict That Will Send the Well-Known Politician to the Penitentiary.

Peter W. McGlade, who, a few years ago, occupied a prominent place in the councils of the Democratic party, was convicted of forgery to-day in Judge Cook's Court. The question of his guilt or innocence was submitted to a jury at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon. At midnight it was announced that the jury could not agree, but Judge Cook refused to consider the prospect of a disagreement, and ordered the jury locked up for the night. During the early morning the jurymen who differed from the majority modified their views and agreed to vote for conviction. At 10:30 o'clock this morning they presented their verdict to Judge Cook. It was immediately recorded and McGlade was placed in the custody of the sheriff.

McGlade received the verdict with some emotion. He expected, at least, a disagreement of the jury, and had a firm hope that he would be acquitted. His hopes disappeared, however, almost as soon as the jurymen took their seats. Their countenances pictured their verdict. McGlade read it in a glance, and sank back into his seat before the bar absolutely dejected. He failed to arouse when friends in the courtroom stepped forth and offered their sympathy. His attorneys, Lennon & Hawkins, though taken by surprise, did not lose their alertness, however, and, as soon as the verdict was recorded, entered a formal protest as to its legality, thereby laying a foundation for an appeal to the Supreme Court.

At the request of Lennon the jury was polled. Each juryman repeated his vote of guilty. The jurors were:

F. L. Guntz, secretary Gantner & Guntz Undertaking Company, 5 City Hall square.

B Grave, Pacific avenue.

R. J. Hancock, real estate, 923 Broderick street.

Clarence Musto of the Neapolitan Paste Company, 726 Battery street.

E. A Sachs of Martin Sachs Company, real estate, 616 Leavenworth street.

J. B. Williams, 142 Fourteenth street.

F. E. Shafer, California Milk Company, 3071 Twenty-third street.

Harry F. McGurren, saloon, 1236 Market street.

Frederick Dieling, solicitor, 933 McAllister street.

John Corbell, 1014 Lombard street.

Adolph Hiller, stationery, 421 Chestnut street.

M. E. Willis, 504 Eddy street.

The other cases pending against McGlade were postponed until Monday. A date for their trial will be selected at that time. It is probable that sentence will be imposed next Friday upon the verdict rendered to-day. Under the law McGlade may be committed to the penitentiary from one to fourteen years.

The indictment on which McGlade was tried charged him with forging the name of T. B. McGinnis, deputy clerk of the Board of Supervisors, on a demand in favor of Thomas Dwyer for $85. Dwyer's name and that of T. F. Clark, an employe of the street department, were also forged to the demand, Clark's name being used to indicate that the instrument had passed through the proper channels. The name of a clerk of the Supervisors was subscribed to the demand in order that it might appear that it had been sworn to when filed with the Board of Supervisors. It was shown that this demand and sixteen other similar forged warrants on the city treasury were in the bundles of street department demands for which McGlade receipted in the clerk's office, after the Board of Supervisors had passed on them and ordered their payment.

Theodore Kytka, the handwriting expert, testified that the forged signatures were undoubtedly the work of McGlade. He produced a number of specimens of McGlade's writing and by comparing them with the forgeries demonstrated the guilt of the defendant almost beyond any doubt.

McGlade was formerly one of the best known politicians in the city. He was once a deputy in the office of the Registrar of Voters and in 1894 he was a candidate for Clerk of the Supreme Court. Under Superintendent of Streets Ambrose he was a bookkeeper in the street department. It was while employed in that capacity that he committed the crimes that now carry him toward the penitentiary.

THE EVENING POST: SATURDAY.

PETER M'GLADE IS CONVICTED OF FORGERY

Jury Returned the Unexpected Verdict in His Case To-Day.

P. W. M'GLADE.

The unexpected has happened, and Peter McGlade has been convicted by a jury in Department 12 of the Superior Court of having uttered and passed forged paper.

The jury came into court at 10:30 o'clock this morning, after an anxious night had been spent by the defense, and the foreman read the finding of the jury without delay. McGlade sat with his lawyers just before the jurymen, and it was plain that he had not prepared himself for the verdict that was brought in. His countenance fell as the foreman addressed Judge Cook, and he turned appealingly to his counsel. Somebody whispered in McGlade's ear that an appeal would be taken, and the convicted man settled back in his chair, resigned and silent.

McGlade was taken into custody, and the court announced that on Monday a day for pronouncing sentence would be set. Attorney Thomas Lennon for McGlade announces that the case will be carried to the Supreme Court. The crime of which McGlade is convicted is punishable by a term of imprisonment not exceeding fourteen years and not less than one year.

The jury which found McGlade guilty today had been out since 5:15 o'clock yesterday afternoon when its decision was reached. Attorney Lennon made an effort to have the jury instructed to acquit before it retired, but a motion to this end was denied, and then followed strong arguments by Milo Irving Wise, special counsel for the prosecution, and Deputy District Attorney Eugene Deuprey. At a late hour last night the jury was unable to agree, and was locked up. The personnel of the body which has adjudged McGlade guilty was as follows:

F. L. Guntz, secretary Gantner & Guntz Undertaking Company, 5 City Hall square.

B Grave, Pacific avenue.

R. J. Hancock, real estate, 923 Broderick street.

Clarence Musto of the Neapolitan Paste Company, 706 Battery street.

E. A Sachs of Martin Sachs Company, real estate, 616 Leavenworth street.

J. B. Williams, 142 Fourteenth street.

F. E. Shafer, California Milk Company, 3071 Twenty-third street.

Harry F. McGurren, saloon, 1238 Market street.

Frederick Dieling, solicitor, 933 McAllister street.

John Corbell, 1041 Lombard street.

Adolph Hiller, stationery, 121 Chestnut street.

M. E. Willis, 501 Eddy street.

The trial has been rather one of mystery because of the apparent indisposition of witnesses to testify against the accused. Many days were passed in which signatures of McGlade and others were not identified, and there was an impression abroad that he would go free.

Today's conviction came like a bolt from an almost clear sky, and while McGlade and his immediate sympathizers are much cast down and completely amazed, the various cliques at the City Hall are stirred over the surprise meted out to them today, and the conviction is widely discussed in all departments of the city service.

McGlade was tried on an indictment charging him with having forged the name of T. B. McGinnis, a deputy clerk of the Board of Supervisors, to a demand drawn to Thomas Dwyer for $90, alleged to be due for underground street work. Dwyer did not even work for the Street Department, and several other names were forged to the order. Tiler & Regensburger, brokers, bought the paper and brought the action, McGlade being captured in New Mexico.

The convicted man, now surrendered into custody, has been out on $1500 bonds.

"The McGlade jury is locked up," says a morning paper. It is gratifying to state that we will be able to chronicle the same good news regarding Mr. McGlade at an early date.

Chronicle May 25-1900

JURY THINKS IT IS FUNNY.

Forger Peter McGlade and His Farcical Trial.

THE CITY HALL RING LOSES ITS MEMORY.

A BOOKKEEPER WHO DOES NOT RECOGNIZE HIS OWN WRITING.

Professional Officeholders Swear Their Hardest to Help Their Old Political Pal Out of Trouble.

The City Hall ring held high carnival again yesterday before Superior Judge Cook in the farcical trial of Peter W. McGlade. The professional political jobholders left their memories behind them when they entered the courtroom, and the volubility with which they swore in an effort to prevent the conviction of their associate caused Judge Cook to remark, "This is the worst case I ever saw."

Members of the jury were inattentive and paid little attention to the testimony. In the earlier part of the day's proceedings they read the daily papers and exchanged mirthful comments on their contents. Juror Sachs devoted much time to reading a book, which he placed on the rail in front of him and occasionally did some vigorous figuring with a lead pencil in a blank book. The spectators drew the conclusion that he was entering up his profit and loss account.

Among the interested auditors was the real Thomas Dwyer, an old chum of McGlade's, who was employed in the Tax Collector's office at the time the defendant was manufacturing demands for wages as a sewer contractor in his name.

The prosecution has been making strenuous effort to get some genuine signatures and other standard writings of McGlade in evidence for the purposes of the trial but the defective memories of the City Hall witnesses have balked them at every turn. They thought they had an exemplar yesterday in the signature of McGlade to an affidavit for a continuance, sworn to before Oscar A. Tolle, clerk of the court, on the 15th inst, but when Tolle was called to the witness stand he said that he did not see McGlade write his signature, and only swore him as to the truth of the contents of the paper. According to the experts the craftiness of McGlade is shown by his having sought to disguise this his most recent signature of record.

Late in the day seven signatures of McGlade to receipts were placed in evidence as exemplars, Charles Troll, a bookkeeper for Bier & Regensburger, swearing that they were written in his presence.

Theodore Kytka, one of the handwriting experts, claims to have a genuine grievance in having spent six days examining writings of McGlade that Bookkeeper Cathcart was to have identified. Cathcart left for the East on Saturday night.

John Ryan, assistant clerk of the Board of Supervisors, was recalled, and swore positively that he saw McGlade sign a receipt for the forged demands. The defense raised the technical point that Ryan had not taken the oath of office at the time McGlade committed his felonies, and had no right to exact a receipt from the defendant.

Charles S. Derham, a deputy superintendent of streets under Ambrose, testified that the "Chas. S. Derham" indorsed on the bogus demand was not his signature, and that he had not authorized anyone to sign it for him. His name had also been forged on the back of other fraudulent demands.

When it came to an attempt to connect McGlade with the frauds Derham was as evasive as other witnesses. Although he had worked on the books with McGlade, he said he could not identify the records of the Street Department as McGlade's handwriting.

So well pleased was the defense with Derham's contribution to the unsavory record that Lennon announced. "No cross-examination."

The next man with a conveniently bad memory was A. J. Donovan, chief office deputy under Ambrose, and in the employ of the Board of Public Works as the representative of the street contractors by the political grace of Mayor Phelan. He identified the books of record of the office, but said that he did not know the handwriting of McGlade. Donovan's testimony was too satisfactory to the defense to require cross-examination.

Each witness seemed to vie with his predecessors as to faulty memory. John J. Lyon's memory was so bad that it had fallen into an offensive decay. He was assistant bookkeeper to McGlade and had free access to, and worked with McGlade on, all the books of the Street Department. When shown the records and asked to identify them, he replied:

"I would not swear to McGlade's handwriting."

When this witness was asked to point out some of his own handwriting, he calmly responded:

"I find some handwriting that resembles my handwriting, but I would not say positively that it is mine."

This nimble member of the professional City Hall "push" said that he saw McGlade write frequently in all of the books, but could not recall any particular occasion.

"I saw McGlade write every day," he continued, "but I am not familiar with his writing."

District Attorney Byington tried to evolve something from the offensive memory of Lyons, but did not succeed in even getting the witness to identify his own handwriting, he giving such answers as, "It is similar to," and "It looks very much like mine."

Lyons gave further evidence that his memory should be vaccinated and then quarantined when he was asked,

"Did not McGlade and you work on that book for two years?"

"We worked on a book similar to it," was the shifty reply.

This artful dodger declined to swear to anything McGlade did, and the witness was, of course, not cross-examined.

Ex-Supervisors Thomas H. Haskins and J. W. Rivers and ex-Auditor William Broderick testified to the routine of a salary demand, but could not identify McGlade's writing or signature.

T. B. Muginnis, assistant clerk of the Board of Supervisors, was shown his name on several forged documents, and testified that he never wrote it or authorized any one else to do so.

Owing to sickness in the family of one of the jurors, a recess was taken until next Monday morning.

Rep. May 23-1900

M'GLADE FARCE

Continued in Judge Cook's Court Today.

The case of "Pete" McGlade was continued in Judge Cook's court today. William Ambrose, ex-Superintendent of Streets, could not identify his own handwriting signed to documents five years ago. Harry Piper, an ex-deputy County Clerk, had a lulling of memory. Joseph Gotthelf, the present deputy County County Clerk, had a period of mental vacuity also regarding the festive Peter's signature.

Ex. May 25, 1900 : Chronicle

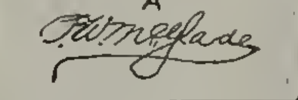
MAN WHO SAW PETER M'GLADE SIGN HIS NAME

Charles Trull Gives Direct Testimony in Forgery Trial.

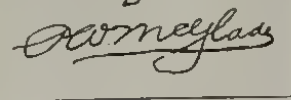
FORGETFUL WITNESSES

John J. Lyons Swore That He Never Inspected McGlade's Chirography.

A



B



THE EXHIBIT MARKED "A" IS A TRACING OF THE SIGNATURE ON THE DOCUMENT WHICH IS ALLEGED TO BE M'GLADE'S OATH OF OFFICE, THE GENUINENESS OF WHICH HE DOES NOT ADMIT.

THE EXHIBIT MARKED "B" IS A REPRODUCTION OF A SIGNATURE WHICH CHARLES TRULL SWEARS HE SAW M'GLADE SIGN IN BIER & REGENSBERGER'S OFFICE AUGUST 2, 1898.

WITNESSES in the McGlade case had another hard day of it in Judge Cook's court yesterday, trying to remember whether they ever knew anything about Peter W. McGlade's handwriting.

John J. Lyons, who was assistant bookkeeper in the office of the Superintendent of Streets for two years, while McGlade was head bookkeeper in the same office, was shown a book that purported to have been used in the office in which McGlade and Lyons were working together.

"Is that your writing?" asked District Attorney Byington, pointing to an entry that was supposed to have been made by the witness.

"It looks like my writing, but I am not sure about it," responded Lyons, after the manner of Harry Piper, who, the day before, could not identify his signature on an official document, and William F. Ambrose, who not only failed to recollect his own signature, but said he had actually forgotten the record books of his office that were handled daily by him when he was in office.

Lyons' attention was directed to a page which was written in a swinging script that greatly resembled the elegant penmanship of Peter W. McGlade. In fact, experts who have scrutinized the book say the page was written by McGlade, and stand ready to prove it. Lyons was asked if he knew who wrote the entries on that page, and he answered in the negative.

"Did you ever see Peter W. McGlade write?" asked Mr. Byington.

"Well, yes, I have seen him engaged in writing, but I never paid any attention to his manuscript," replied Lyons.

In this manner Lyons escaped identifying the manuscript of McGlade. He said he had seen McGlade, by whose side he worked for two years, in the posture of a man writing in a book, but in all that time he was never so impolite as to look over his companion's shoulder to inspect his penmanship. So he swore that he could not identify McGlade's chirography, declaring under oath that he did not witness the production of the writing referred to, by McGlade or anybody else.

A. J. Donovan, a clerk in the office of the Board of Public Works, somewhat relieved the monotony by declaring that he recognized the book handed him as one of the books from the office in which he is employed. He explained that the Board of Public Works inherited the records of the Superintendent of Streets, and consequently the book formerly belonged to the Superintendent of Streets. Here Donovan's knowledge ended. He did not know McGlade's handwriting.

William Broderick, former Auditor, had seen McGlade sign some papers, but could not identify his signature.

J. H. Ryan, assistant clerk for the Board of Supervisors, testified that he took his oath of office after the conclusion of McGlade's former trial.

T. B. McGinnis, a deputy clerk in the office of the Board of Supervisors, swore ...bazaar in aid of the sufferers of the war. The stalls are attended by titled personages and the elite of London's society. Emperor William of Germany has shown his sympathy for the war sufferers by contributing to the bazaar some royal Dresden China and engravings of pictures painted by His Majesty, bearing the imperial signature and inscribed: "For the National Bazaar, 1900. By the Emperor Himself." He then sent a number of his photographs, signed, and bearing a brief sentence in German.

The Princess of Wales, after making a tour of the bazaar, officiated as a saleswoman at the stall of the Household Cavalry stalls.

Chronicle

THEY HAVE LOST THEIR MEMORIES.

QUEER TESTIMONY IN THE M'GLADE TRIAL.

THE CITY HALL GANG AIDS THE PRISONER BY BEING FORGETFUL.

Ex-Superintendent of Streets Ambrose Has No More Acquaintance With His Own Signature.

The prosecution in the case of Peter McGlade, the Street Department forger, devoted yesterday to an effort to secure some acknowledged signatures and other writings of the defendant. As the City Hall ring is throwing every obstacle in the way of the prosecution, it was only by the aid of the money-brokers, to whom McGlade failed to return various sums of borrowed money, that the desired exemplars were secured.

Ex-Superintendent of Streets, and present Grand Juror, William Ambrose, was again recalled to the witness stand to see if his memory had recuperated since last Thursday. At that time he could not recognize his own signature to McGlade's appointment, or anything else that might tend to implicate the Street Department ring.

Ambrose's memory was just as convenient as ever, and he still refused to identify his signature to McGlade's appointment. He was shown his own signature to fourteen other appointments of his office, but dodged identification with the following answers:

"I will say that I signed certain documents, but they went out of my possession three and one-half years ago, therefore, I cannot say whether it is my name signed to them or not."

The witness was shown his signature to his salary warrant as Superintendent of Streets in 1897, and also his receipt signed on the books. His answer was the following tricky evasion:

"I have signed such receipts, but I cannot swear that I signed this one."

Ambrose was shown several of his signatures, but would not acknowledge having written any of them. This superserviceable witness was excused to give his memory another rest.

Martin W. Fleming, who was a deputy in the Registrar of Voters' office, June 7, 1898, identified McGlade's signature to his certificate of registration, the defendant having signed his name and taken the oath of registration before the witness.

Timothy Donovan, who was a clerk in the Registrar's office, May 27, 1896, and who registered McGlade at that time, refused to identify the prisoner's signature or even his own signature to the oath taken by McGlade. Donovan is an old member of the City Hall ring, having fed at the public manger since before the plane for the City Hall were drawn.

M. M. Regensburger, the broker, identified McGlade's signature to a number of notes for money borrowed and to letters. In this way the prosecution was enabled to secure several good exemplars of the prisoner's writing.

Ferdinand Smith, a money broker to whom McGlade has failed to pay $700 borrowed money, identified the prisoner's signature to notes and other papers.

Regensburger was recalled and identified some of McGlade's handwriting in the records of the Street Department. Assistant District Attorney Deuprey

Chronicle

May 30 - 1900

Call

May 29 - 1900

Chron June 2 - 1900

FORGERIES BY A CLEVER PENMAN.

EXPERT KYTKA'S VIEW OF M'GLADE'S WORK.

THE CITY HALL RING IS STILL BOASTFUL AND DEFIANT.

Ex-Superintendent of Streets Ambrose Can Recognize His Own Signature If the Ink Is Wet.

The City Hall ring has decided that Peter W. McGlade, the self-confessed criminal, convicted out of his own mouth of robbing the city of $1600 by aid of twenty-eight forged Street Department demands, must not be convicted, and is bending all its energies to effect his acquittal.

When the fugitive from justice returned from Mexico he confessed his crime, but the City Hall ring and particularly the Street Department gang has, as a matter of self-protection, decreed otherwise, and it was common talk in the vicinity of the courtroom of Department 12 yesterday that the forging bookkeeper would again escape conviction.

But it is said that the efforts to bring McGlade to justice will not end with this trial. The sporting bookkeeper did not confine his criminal work to the city treasury, but robbed money-brokers in a corresponding sense, each of his transaction being double, both the city and the brokers being defrauded. As each salary demand required at least four forgeries, the criminal transaction involved about 120 fabrications of names by the cool and audacious criminal. Expert Kytka testified that the forgeries were the work of an expert penman.

There are still three untried charges of perjury and obtaining money under false pretenses pending against McGlade, and an effort will be made to have them transferred for trial to Judge Lawlor's court, where the quality of justice is less pleasing to criminals and more satisfactory to honest and law-abiding citizens, and where an affidavit that the jury box had been tampered with would not be treated as a mere incident.

Ex-Superintendent of Streets Ambrose, who, according to a story circulated at the City Hall, is placed under shotgun intimidation to such a degree that he is threatened with paralysis at the sight of his own signature, was called to the witness stand for the fifth time. Deputy District Attorney Deuprey asked Grand Juror Ambrose to write his signature four or five times. Lawyer Lennon, representing the defendant, vigorously objected, but was overruled.

Ambrose proceeded to write his name, but was stopped on a motion of the defense that Theodore Kytka, the handwriting expert, remove his "eagle eye." The eye being withdrawn from the courtroom, Ambrose wrote his signature six times.

While Ambrose still held the signatures in his hand and before the ink had dried he was asked if they were his signatures. The witness hesitated and acted as though he was looking down two barrels of a shotgun, but, to the surprise of those assembled in the courtroom, admitted that the writings were his signature.

County Clerk William A. Deane, who was a deputy in that office in 1897-98, identified Harry Piper's signature to McGlade's oath of office, and also the file signature of Piper to twelve other appointments made by Ambrose. These are official records of the County Clerk's office, but Piper's memory was too elusive to recall his own signature to anything that might jeopardize the City Hall ring.

The original Thomas B. Dwyer, who the fertile McGlade had as one of his sewer cleaners at $96 a month, testified that he never worked in the Street Department, never signed the demand nor authorized any one else to sign it, nor did he receive the $96 or any part of it.

J. E. Bier, the broker, identified McGlade's signature to several notes for borrowed money. Testimony was also given by D. J. Leary, chief deputy auditor at the time of the forgeries, T. B. McGinnis, assistant clerk of the Board of Supervisors, Harry C. Farquharson, deputy clerk of the Board of Supervisors, and Detective Thomas Gibson.

The afternoon was devoted to testimony by Kytka, who said that the forged signature of T. B. McGinnis was written by McGlade, and illustrated the reasons for his conclusions by the aid of enlarged photographs and exemplars. The forgery, the expert said, was by a clever penman.

The trial will be resumed Thursday at 9:30 A. M.

BROUGHT INTO COURT UNPAID McGLADE NOTES

Money Lenders Whose Memory of Defendant Was Very Vigorous.

Some Outstanding Accounts That Will Help the Writing Expert to Complete the Case of Forgery.

There were more signatures of P. W. McGlade admitted as specimens of his handwriting yesterday and there were a few pages of the books of the Street Department which, it was testified, were written by him.

M. M. Regensberger, a broker with whom McGlade did business, was the witness that identified the pages in the books. He swore that several pages were in McGlade's handwriting, every word of them, but when it came to cross-examination Attorney Lennon got an admission from him that in one case there was a "July" that McGlade had not written and in another there were a few words that did not look like McGlade's writing.

Regensberger was also asked about how he discovered the frauds in the Street Department, but he was prevented from answering by the objections of the defense. He will be called again later on to tell of some conversations he had with McGlade regarding the forged demands "just before McGlade fled to Mexico," as Regensberger put it.

In addition, Regensberger identified several signatures of McGlade on unpaid notes, a circumstance which accounted for the ease with which the witness identified them.

There was some testimony and more unpaid notes from Ferdinand Smith, another lender of money, and the signatures of these two were admitted as exemplars for the writing expert to work on. There was also another signature from the certificate of registration sworn to before Martin W. Fleming, a deputy registrar, who produced it in court.

Jurors McGurren and Williams took a great interest in the exact standing of Regensberger as a writing expert. They asked if he claimed to be one, and they asked the court if they were to take him as one. Mr. Deuprey had stated to the court that Regensberger was produced as an expert on McGlade's handwriting only, and the witness then supplemented this with the statement that he was familiar with the McGlade writing, but he was not an expert upon it. He had seen it so often, however, that he could identify it whenever he caught sight of it.

M'GLADE JURY IS LOCKED UP.

HAD NOT REACHED A VERDICT AT LATE HOUR.

TWO OTHER INDICTMENTS ON WHICH HE IS TO BE TRIED.

History of the Crookedness in the Street Department and Flight of Accused to New Mexico.

The trial of Peter W. McGlade on one of the charges of forgery against him was finished in Department 12 of the Superior Court yesterday. C. S. Derham testified that after McGlade's sudden departure in November, 1898, he took McGlade's place as bookkeeper in the Street Department and found the numerous fraudulent and forged demands that were offered in evidence. T. B. McGinnis and John H. Ryan, deputy clerks of the Board of Supervisors, and D. J. Leary, deputy in the Auditor's office, gave testimony as to the many forged demands. Christian Reis, former Treasurer, testified that McGlade frequently cashed Street Department demands which were drawn in favor of other names than his own. Charles Trull testified that McGlade sent Bier & Regensburger, the brokers, a list of employes of the Street Department, among the names being those of the fictitious employes in whose favor the forged warrants were drawn. The brokers were to cash the demands of these employes. Once when Trull went to get the demands on which money was advanced McGlade took him into the corridor, told him that he had cashed the demands and gave him the money. Former Street Superintendent Ambrose testified that McGlade left without notification and without being discharged from the office. Officers Cody, Colby and T. Gibson and ex-Chief of Police Lees gave testimony as to McGlade's flight and arrest in New Mexico.

Attorney Lennon, after a vain motion to instruct the jury to acquit on technical grounds, called McGlade to the stand. McGlade merely denied that the forged signatures were written by him. Judge Cook refused to permit him to be cross-examined as to his writing on other documents or as to the writing of his own name on the demand which he was charged with forging. Otto I. Wise, special counsel for the prosecution, made the opening argument. After Lennon spoke Assistant District Attorney Deuprey closed. The jury retired shortly before 5 o'clock.

The jurors were:

F. L. Guntz, secretary Gunther & Guntz Undertaking Company, 8 City Hall square.

B. Grave, Pacific avenue.

R. J. Hancock, real estate, 928 Broderick street.

Clarence Musto of the Neapolitan Paste Company, 705 Battery street.

E. A. Sachs of Martin Sachs Company, real estate, 616 Leavenworth street.

J. H. Williams, 142 Fourteenth street.

F. E. Shaler, California Milk Company, 3071 Twenty-third street.

Harry F. McGurren, saloon, 1398 Market street.

Frederick Dieling, solicitor, 953 McAllister street.

John Corbett, 1014 Lombard street.

Adolph Hiller, stationery, 421 Chestnut street.

M. E. Willis, 504 Eddy street.

At 10:30 o'clock the jurors were unable to reach an agreement and were locked up for the night. McGlade was at liberty on a $1500 bond which was accepted last year by Judge Cook.

The indictment on which McGlade was tried charged him with forging the name of T. B. McGinnis, deputy clerk of the Board of Supervisors, on a demand in favor of Thomas Dwyer for $96 for underground work for twenty-four days in August, 1898. Dwyer did not work in the Street Department. His name and that of T. F. Clark, who had charge of the underground workers, were also forged on the demand, Clark's name being on the certificate as to its correctness. The name of a clerk of the Supervisors had to be put on so as to make it appear as if it had been sworn to when filed in the Supervisors' office. It was shown that this demand and sixteen other similar forged warrants on the City Treasury were in the bundles of Street Department demands for which McGlade receipted in the clerk's office after the Board of Supervisors had passed on them and ordered their payment.

Theodore Kytka, the handwriting expert, testified that the forged signatures were undoubtedly the work of McGlade. He devoted his statement on the stand mainly to the forgery of McGinnis' name, as that forgery was particularly alleged in the indictment.

McGinnis and the others whose names were said to have been forged testified that they did not write their names on the demand. Many specimens of McGlade's writing were produced, and their characteristics were compared with the forgeries. Against all the testimony for the prosecution, the presentation of which took six days, was placed McGlade's denial that he committed the forgery. The prosecution at first seemed handicapped with witnesses whose memories conveniently deserted them, but District Attorney Byington was satisfied at the close of the evidence yesterday that all the facts against McGlade had been presented.

Juror Hancock, during the testimony of Kytka, asked many questions which tended to clear up points that might otherwise have appeared doubtful, but the listlessness of some of the other jurors was noticeable.

Two other indictments against McGlade for forgery and one for obtaining money on false pretenses from Bier & Regensburger remain on the calendar of Department 12, and on one of these he is next to be tried.

PETER McGLADE IS GUILTY OF FORGERY

Convicted of Street Department Frauds by a Jury.

PETER W. McGLADE.

Call June 3 1900

PETER W. McGLADE, at one time prominent in the councils of the Democratic party, successful in politics and well known as a good fellow, stands convicted of forgery. After deliberating for over seventeen hours the jury that sat during the many days of his trial came into court shortly after 10 o'clock yesterday morning and filed a verdict adjudging the defendant guilty as charged. The verdict handed to the clerk by the foreman of the jury reads:

"We the jury find the defendant, P. W. McGlade, guilty of forgery in having uttered, published and passed as genuine and true the demand described in the indictment, then and there knowing the same to be false and forged, as charged in the indictment."

The demand referred to bore date of September 1, 1896, and purported to have been legally made by T. Dwyer. It contained a demand for $96 on the treasury and showed an indorsement by T. B. McGinnis, who, as a Supervisor's clerk, passed on such demands. This indorsement, it was charged, was forged by McGlade, and the jury has found him guilty.

In view of the many sensational reports that the jury had been tampered with in the interest of the defendant and his well-known political affiliations McGlade's conviction came as a surprise to the "push." After elaborate evidence Friday afternoon the jury, on whom all eyes were centered, retired to deliberate on a verdict. A minute after the verdict was entered yesterday Attorney T. J. Lennon of the firm of Lennon & Hawkins, who represented the accused, took an exception to the same and will take an appeal to the Supreme Court. Mr. Lennon then asked that the jury be polled. Each juror repeated the verdict, "Guilty as charged." The jurors were:

F. L. Guntz, secretary Gantner & Guntz Undertaking Company, 8 City Hall square; B. Grave, merchant, 2321 Pacific avenue; R. J. Hancock, real estate, 925 Broderick street; Clarence Musto of the Neapolitan Paste Company, 706 Battery street; E. A. Sachs of Martin Sachs Company, real estate, 615 Leavenworth street; A. B. Williams, 142 Fourteenth street; F. E. Shaler, California Milk Company, 3071 Twenty-third street; Harry F. McGurren, saloon, 1691 Market street; Frederick Hieling, solicitor, 363 McAllister street; John Corbett, collector, 1014 Lombard street; Adolph Hiller, stationery, 421 Chestnut street; M. E. Willis, 804 Eddy street.

Many other charges still stand against McGlade. His conviction was the result in a great measure of testimony given by handwriting experts, who testified that all the disputed documents were the handiwork of the accused. One witness testified that he saw McGlade sign the demands exhibited as Nos. 81, 82 and 83, and this was the strongest evidence against him. All of these cases were continued until Monday to be set for trial. Judge Cook will pass sentence next Friday. Under the law McGlade may be committed to the penitentiary for from one to fourteen years.

McGlade's political career, which ended on the discovery of the frauds in the Street Department, began in the office of the Registrar of Voters. In 1891 he was a candidate for the office of clerk of the Supreme Court. Under Superintendent of Streets Ambrose he occupied a position of responsibility. It was in this office that the scheme for making money evolved which now threatens to close the doors of a penitentiary upon him, for how many years will only be known when judgment in the last charge against him has been pronounced.

Ex June 3 1900

The Significance of the McGlade Case.

The conviction of Peter McGlade is a matter for congratulation, not so much because McGlade has to go to jail, but for what the conviction represents. McGlade himself is a petty criminal, and it does not particularly matter to the public whether he is in jail or out. But McGlade represents the "push"—the element in San Francisco that makes its living by crooked politics—and because of that fact his case has acquired a considerable importance. He was a self-confessed criminal, for he fled from the State when he knew that he was suspected, and was brought back only after extradition proceedings. But in spite of this the "push" rallied to his defense. Men who have been elected to office in San Francisco went on the stand and swore that they could not remember their own signatures. Men who hired McGlade, handled his work, and sat by him at his desk for months and years swore that they could not recognize his handwriting. Men who have been charged with the duty of receiving oaths and recording documents refused to swear to McGlade's signature to documents that he had sworn to before them. It was, in short, a battle between the "push" and justice, in which the "push" would stop at nothing. The case was to decide whether it is possible to convict a politician in the courts of San Francisco.

It is important to find out that the "push" is not above the law. It is a lesson that appears to be needed.

[illegible] June 5 1900

Criminal Cases Postponed.

The arraignment of Mrs. Nellie R. Craven, Adolph Sylva and George W. Simpton on indictments based on the alleged perjury in the Fair estate case, was postponed for one week in Department 12 of the Superior Court yesterday. Proceedings on the motion for a new trial in the case of Peter W. McGlade, convicted of forgery, were continued for one week also.

HANDSOME "PETE" M'GLADE, TO SURPRISE OF POLITICIANS, IS CONVICTED OF FORGERY

PETER W. M'GLADE.

PETER W. M'GLADE was declared guilty of forgery by a jury in Judge Cook's department of the Superior Court yesterday, much to the surprise of those who are well acquainted with affairs about the City Hall.

The trial of McGlade lasted two weeks, the prosecution being conducted by District Attorney Byington, Deputy District Attorney Deuprey and Attorney Otto I. Wise. T. J. Lennon and Joseph K. Hawkins appeared as counsel for the prisoner.

The prosecution offered proof to show that a warrant for $96, in the name of Thomas Dwyer, was presented by McGlade against the city treasury, and that it was paid; that the signature of T. B. McGinnis, attached to the instrument, was spurious; that no such person as Thomas Dwyer worked for the Street Department at the time for which McGlade made out the claim; that McGlade obtained the money and that he knew the warrant to be spurious and fraudulent when he issued it, that he fled from the city and was arrested in New Mexico, under an assumed name, as a fugitive from justice.

The case was submitted to the jury at 6 o'clock Friday evening. Five hours later the jurors were returned in court, at their own request, and reported to the Judge that they were not able to agree, but Judge Cook replied that they ought to take more time in which to consult, and had them locked up for the night.

Shortly after 10 o'clock yesterday the jurors asked that the indictment against McGlade be sent to the jury-room, and, as no objection was made, the request was granted. Within twenty minutes after they had the indictment delivered to them, the jurors filed into their places in the jury-box and announced that they had agreed on a verdict.

When Foreman Corbett arose to read the verdict of the jury, McGlade's face was glowing with hopefulness. The long delay of the jurors in arriving at an agreement was construed by him as a favorable omen. When the word "guilty" was pronounced by the foreman, McGlade turned pallid. His countenance took on an ashen hue, but his perturbation was only momentary, for he quickly recovered the self-control that has characterized his demeanor since he was brought back from New Mexico.

"I have never talked about this trouble since it began, and I don't intend to start in now," was McGlade's response to a request for a statement of his views of the trial and its result.

That the outcome of the McGlade case was as much of a surprise to the prisoner as to the habitues of the City Hall was apparent to all who noted his manner when the verdict was announced. Yet some of the more observant looked for just such an outcome, because of McGlade's decline in popularity. During his days of prosperity, when he was a successful politician, in receipt of a handsome income from salary and other sources, McGlade was surrounded by crowds of flatterers. He was of fine appearance, and, being a genial fellow, had a large following. Then came the sensation of crookedness, his flight, his apprehension and his return to this city. Even then not all of his adherents fell away. Many who had enjoyed his hospitality were apparently ashamed to desert him at once, so they kept about him during the first trial and cheered him with their presence. The first trial ended in a disagreement of the jury. That was over a year ago. In the mean time McGlade was out on bonds. When his second trial began, a fortnight ago, it was seen that many of his former companions had deserted, and the few who still persisted in their friendship were comparatively lukewarm. There remained, however, the regular attendance of the old City Hall "push," warmly sympathetic for the accused, but not so potent as formerly in controlling the result of the trial. They were immensely disappointed when the jury's verdict was announced, and the opinion was openly expressed among them that this is no longer a free country where a politician is placed in jeopardy of a felony conviction for nothing more serious than juggling with public funds.

Attorney Lennon moved that the court set aside the verdict, on the ground that it was not supported by the evidence. This motion was denied, and further proceedings were adjourned until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock, which is the time set for passing sentence.

Ex June 5 1900

M'GLAOE NOT SENTENCED.

Event Postponed Until Next Monday, at Prisoner's Request.

Peter W. McGlade, convicted of forgery, was not sentenced to the State Prison by Judge Cook yesterday, that event being postponed for a week at the request of defendant.

McGlade was in court and though pitying glances were bestowed on him by some of his old-time adherents, it was noted that the only ones who were faithful in their sympathetic attendance were his attorneys and the sheriff's deputies who brought him from the County Jail and took him back after the adjournment of court.

Attorney T. J. Lennon, representing McGlade, intimated that at the next calling of the case, Monday, June 11th, he will present the usual motion in arrest of judgment, or for a new trial.

Two other felony charges pending against McGlade—one for forgery and the other for obtaining money by false pretenses—were continued until August 20th, when they may be set for trial.

Ex Jun 5-1900

CHRONICLE, SUNDAY, JUNE 3, 1900.

M'GLADE IS FOUND GUILTY

Jury Returns a Verdict That Furnishes a Surprise.

THE CITY HALL GANG IN A STATE OF PANIC.

SINGULAR BALLOTS HAD IN THE SECRECY OF THE NIGHT SESSION.

One Case in Which a Political "Pull" Proved of No Avail Against Public Opinion and Evidence.

Peter W. McGlade, the sporting bookkeeper of the Street Department, was pronounced guilty of forgery yesterday morning by a jury. The verdict was a surprise to both the prosecution and the defense, as the peculiar conditions surrounding the jury had caused a disagreement to be expected.

The City Hall gang, which had undertaken to prevent the conviction of its old member, was thoroughly demoralized at finding that justice had prevailed, despite the united opposition of the "push." In the conviction of McGlade the professional place-holders, who contributed a quantity of false swearing to McGlade's cause, found that they were no longer invincible in the jury-rooms of the City Hall, and that even one of their own number might get his just deserts.

The case of McGlade has attracted much attention. The forger was conspicuous in political circles, having been a candidate on the Democratic ticket for Clerk of the Supreme Court. In 1897 and 1898 he was employed as bookkeeper for the Street Department. In the latter year he forged nineteen demands for wages and collected the money on the warrants from both the City Treasury and the money-brokers. His method was to select men not employed in the department and make out demands for their labor, forging such signatures as were necessary to pass the demand through the usual routine.

When the forgeries were discovered McGlade went into hiding, being concealed by a woman of the half-world upon whom he had squandered some of his ill-gotten money, other portions of his stealings being lost on horses and expended along the "cocktail route." Later he fled to Mexico, but was brought back, and several indictments were found against him by the Grand Jury after he had made a clean breast of his fraudulent transactions.

His first trial was had a year ago before Superior Judge Cook and a jury, but through the good offices of the City Hall ring he was acquitted. After many delays he was again brought to trial two weeks ago. The indictment selected for the purposes of this trial was that for forging the name of T. B. McGinnis, assistant clerk of the Board of Supervisors, to a bogus warrant for $96 drawn in favor of Thomas Dwyer. Once more the City Hall gang came to the aid of their old associate. The prosecution moved that the jury be dismissed after it had been impaneled, and an affidavit setting forth that the jury-box had been tampered with by Clerk Tolle was filed by one of the lawyers for the prosecution. The manner in which Court Bailiff Daske had picked up a special venire to complete the jury was also a matter of objection. The bailiff's system, whether by accident or premeditation, resulted in the return of some intimate friends of the defendant. Judges Cook, Lawlor and Dunne, sitting in bank, decided not to dismiss the jury mainly on the ground of once in jeopardy.

In the early days of the trial the jury was inattentive, the members devoting themselves to the reading of newspapers and books and to the exchange of jokes. The City Hall gang became openly boastful that there would be no conviction. Ex-Superintendent of Streets Ambrose refused to identify his own signature or any other official's signature. Other members of the Street Department crowd were equally forgetful [illegible] points that might incriminate the [illegible]

[illegible] o'clock Friday afternoon the case [illegible] to the jury, and that body [illegible] John Corbett was elected foreman. The first ballot stood [illegible] for conviction and 5 for acquittal. All the ballots, numbering about twenty, were [illegible], the jurors retiring to the corners [illegible] to prepare their slips. The [illegible] stood 6 to 6. Then there [illegible] change to 3 for conviction [illegible] 3 for [illegible]. From this the vote went back [illegible] 5, and there remained until 10:30 [illegible] Friday night, when the jury [illegible] word to the Judge that it could not agree. Judge Cook ordered the jury locked up for the night, and intimated that he would not discharge it for at least forty-eight hours. The jurors were then taken to a restaurant and fed and subsequently given lodgings at the California Hotel.

On resuming the balloting yesterday morning the vote stood 6 to 6. The indictment was sent for and read.

The discussions among the jurors were not animated. Juror McGurren, who is a brother-in-law of ex-Superintendent of Streets Ackerson and supposedly a sympathizer with McGlade, had little to say. Williams, who was also thought to have City Hall gang affiliations, said nothing. Sachs, an associate along "the line" and at wayside houses with Ambrose, was on both sides of the case. Hancock, who used to play baseball with McGlade and was known to be friendly to the prisoner, was his main champion.

Whatever the cause, the six for acquittal went over in a bunch to the other side at 10 o'clock yesterday morning, and at 10:40 o'clock the jury went into court, when Foreman Corbett announced that they had agreed upon a verdict of guilty of forgery. The jury was polled by Court Clerk Tolle, and Attorney Lennon made the usual formal motion to set aside the verdict, because the evidence did not warrant. This motion was denied by Judge Cook. McGlade, who has been out on $1500 bail, was then taken into custody by the deputy sheriff. Next Saturday was set as the day for passing sentence.

The penalty for the crime of forgery is not less than one year nor more than fourteen years. An appeal will be taken to the Supreme Court, but unless there was error in the rulings of Judge Cook or in his charge to the jury the verdict will stand.

Following were the jurors: F. L. Guntz, secretary Gunther & Guntz Undertaking Company, 8 City Hall square; B. Grave, Pacific avenue; H. J. Hancock, real estate, 928 Broderick street; Clarence Mustin of the Neapolitan Paste Company, 705 Battery street; E. A. Goelis of Martin Sachs Company, real estate, 615 Leavenworth street; J. R. Williams, 147 Fourteenth street; F. E. Shafer, California Milk Company, 3011 Twenty-third street; Harry F. McGurren, saloon, 1395 Market street; Frederick Dieling, solicitor, 953 McAllister street; John Corbett, 1014 Lombard street; Adolph Hiller, stationery, 421 Chestnut street; M. E. Willis, 804 Eddy street.

THE FORGER WHOSE PULL FAILED HIM

Johns Case Closed.

Special Dispatch to The Call

WOODLAND, June 2.—In the Johns note-forgery case, which has occupied the attention of the court for two weeks, argument was concluded this afternoon. Judge Gaddis announced that as the case is one of great importance he desires to give reasons for his decision and he therefore took it under advisement.

The District Attorney and the McGlade Case.

The conviction of Peter McGlade for forging warrants of the Street Department shows the public the advantages that come from having in office an honest and capable District Attorney.

The District Attorney labored under great disadvantages in the McGlade case. In the first place McGlade is a member of the "push," and therefore brought to his assistance all the political influence that is so powerful about the City Hall. There was reason to fear that two or more members of the jury had been put in the box with improper motives. An attorney testified that he saw the Clerk of the Court manipulate the jury box so that he could select at will the slips bearing the names of jurors. Men who were in office with McGlade denied that they could identify his handwriting, and refused even to swear to their own signatures. By the repeated postponements of the trial, the evidence of the Deputy Sheriff who arrested McGlade after his flight and brought him back to California was lost. Altogether it was the general belief that the politicians had so arranged matters that McGlade would be turned loose, or at the most that there would be a disagreement of the jury and an indefinite postponement of further proceedings.

There is no doubt of the plot to accomplish the acquittal of McGlade, and it is due to the efforts of District Attorney Byington and his assistants that it did not succeed. They have won a victory for justice that is a good deal more important than it may appear on its face. It is not essentially important that there is one more petty thief in jail. But it is of great importance that the politicians shall have practical assurance that if they commit crimes they cannot escape by fixed juries, false swearing, and the other tricks that their associates in and out of office may bring to their aid.

JUDGE HUNT ADMITS THAT HE WAS WRONG.

Grants a New Trial Because, About Five Years Ago, He Gave Incorrect Instructions to a Jury.

A new trial was granted to the plaintiffs yesterday by Judge Hunt in the suit of Grace I. Hampton and others against the Occidental and Oriental Steamship Company, in which a verdict for the company was given. John C. Hampton, the father of the minor plaintiffs, was a passenger on the City of Chester when that vessel collided with the Oceanic in the fog on August 22, 1888, and his life was lost through the collision. Judge Hunt ruled that the defendant's counsel was not guilty of misconduct in reading to the jury the petition for guardianship of the minor plaintiffs, which stated that the value of their estate was $30,000. The Judge also said that he did not think that the testimony at the trial, which took place nearly five years ago, preponderated in favor of the plaintiffs. His reason for granting a new trial was that on reflection he concluded that some of the instructions to the jury were wrong, as urged by the plaintiff's counsel. Concerning one instruction Judge Hunt remarked yesterday: "The vice of this instruction exists in its enumeration of facts and in directing the jury what inference to draw therefrom. After the trial of this action I became convinced that it was dangerous if not improper for the Court in its instructions to the jury to group facts in this manner or to present hypothetical instructions."

He said that the suit was based on negligence, and this instruction informed the jury that no blame attached to the Oceanic if the Chester could have been handled in a certain manner, and did not leave the jury free to determine whether all reasonable precautions had been resorted to on the Oceanic. Another instruction also was faulty, Judge Hunt said.

302

Ex June 4 1900

June 16 '00

Chronicle June 16

BALL TOSSER, POLITICIAN AND FORGER

Pete McGlade's Rapid Trip Around the Bases of Life.

SLIDE TO PRISON CELL

Athlete Whose Salary Was Not Large Enough for His Dissipations.

When Pete McGlade pitched for Mike Finn's Pioneer aggregation at the Haight-street grounds a few years ago the rooters little thought that the active, strong-armed young college man would spend some of the years of his life in a cell barred and grated and dark in San Quentin or Folsom. There is not much choice between the two as an abiding place, and McGlade has not even the choice.

Many a long day and silent night will Pete McGlade think of the green diamond, the shouts from the bleachers when he struck out some heavy batter or retired the other side without a hit. He should have stuck to baseball. It was a bad day for the pitcher when he first learned that he could curve a signature as true as he could curve a baseball.

Forgery is an ugly crime. Men kill in the heat of passion; they become desperate when in ill luck and opportunity presenting, they rob; but the forger goes coolly and calmly at his work. It takes close study and much application, skill that comes from practice, to imitate a man's signature so it may pass as genuine under the scrutiny of one who is familiar with the handwriting of the person whose name is forged.

How many times did Pete McGlade copy the signatures he penned on the fraudulent demands on the City Treasury before he was satisfied they looked enough like the real handwriting to warrant him in taking the risk? How many hours did he spend tracing and comparing and copying before he felt secure in attempting to realize on his counterfeits? It takes steady practice to become a forger; no one commits this felony until after long premeditation.

McGlade was a handsome youngster eight years ago. His prowess on the ball field gave him a reputation that soon made a place for him in local politics. He was a Deputy Recorder, and in 1894 was nominated for Clerk of the Supreme Court on the Democratic State ticket. He was beaten, but Governor Budd found a berth for him in the Registrar's office.

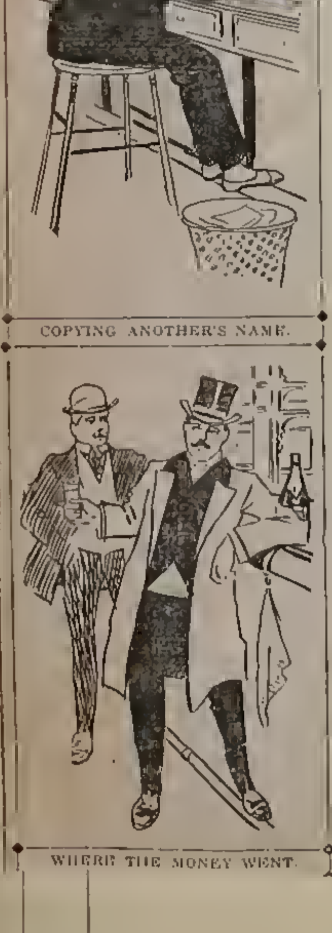
COPYING ANOTHER'S NAME.



WHERE THE MONEY WENT.

GUILTY OF FORGERY.

It has been said that McGlade had a host of friends; but that is not so. He made no friends. Of acquaintances he had hundreds. There was an air of arrogance about him that forbade real friendship. As a Deputy Registrar he discharged his duties faithfully.

There is no reason to doubt that McGlade was honest until he became a clerk under Superintendent of Streets Ambrose. Maybe he became inoculated from the taint in the atmosphere of that administration. It was bad enough to poison any man who was weak and needed more money than he could honestly earn.

Up to this time McGlade had been a frequenter of saloons, on the line, a visitor at the racetrack, a spectator at sporting events and something of a home man. But from the day he went into the office of the Superintendent of Streets the home was forgotten and the tenderloin became his haunt. His salary was not sufficient to keep up the life he was leading. His position was not one that would permit of his making money by hesitating to accept finished contracts. He had no income from loads of bitumen or tons of basalt blocks. There was no chance for him to assess the sewer men and the bricklayers and the tampers.

So Pete McGlade became a forger, and when detection was inevitable, he fled to New Mexico, only to be brought back. He was tried twice. The first time the jury disagreed. On Friday he was convicted, although it was suspected that at least two men on the panel desired his liberation. The verdict was a shock to the prisoner. He had expected his freedom.

From one to fourteen years in the penitentiary is the punishment under the law for forgery. It is a sad prospect for a man who is still youthful, and whose lines might have lain in pleasant places for a half century to come. But it is what comes to those who step the primrose path and forget that "honesty is the best policy." Had Pete McGlade forged that motto from his copy book into his mind and heart he could still enjoy the shouting from the bleachers. His ears would not buzz with the rattle of the jute mill or the roar of the water as it falls over the dam at Folsom.

Peter McGlade, a well known politician of San Francisco, has been convicted of the crime of forgery, to the utter amazement of the city hall clique. McGlade is a bright man. His fall is due to the race track that numbers its victims by the hundreds. Public sympathy was with him but the ex-city hall officials made such strenuous and flagrant efforts to save him that the San Francisco papers made a howl, and the jury responded to the demand for conviction.

ORDERS OF THE COURT DEFIED BY THE JURORS

They Read All About the McGlade Case in the Newspapers.

Application for a New Trial Made, Misconduct of Jurors Alleged and the Motion Will Probably Be Granted.

Peter W. McGlade came up for sentence before Judge Cook yesterday morning, but he was not sentenced, nor will he be for some time yet and perhaps not at all. His attorneys made a motion for a new trial, based upon alleged misconduct of the jury, and it will not be the fault of the jurymen if he does not knock out their verdict and come up again, primed with the prosecution's line of proof and ready to make a better fight next time.

The misconduct of the jury is not the only cause alleged, there is also a charge of misconduct on the part of the District Attorney and his deputies in having said what they thought about the trial and the case against the prisoner and there are also a few minor errors in the trial cited. But the principal cause is misconduct of the jury.

The court ordered the jurors not to read in the papers the reports of the case under consideration, they read the papers evidently when they pleased and now three of them come into court and swear that they became indignant at what they read. The court ordered them not to consult together about the case until it had been placed in their hands. They disregarded this and not only discussed what the papers were saying of the trial, but they went so far as to take one paper into the jury-room with them and read it aloud and discussed its comments after the case had been submitted. And they were warned that just such acts as this would nullify the city's efforts to secure a conviction by invalidating the verdict should it be rendered against the prisoner. The only charge the papers made was that, by the method of its drawing, the jury was open to the suspicion that it favored the prisoner. It has probably favored him to the extent of a new trial.

The facts in the motion for the new trial date back to the time the prosecution moved that the jury be discharged on account of alleged irregularities in the drawing. The defense vigorously opposed the motion and the court refused to grant it. In the meantime three of the jurors asked to be excused from serving on account of their comments, but their request was denied. The newspapers commented on the irregularities alleged and they were generally taken to mean that if such things had been done they had been done to serve the prisoner, as it could hardly be supposed that they were done for the people. It was these comments that found the joints in the jurors' armor and three of them started forward to declare that they could not serve after such an accusation.

They served, however, and the verdict was one of "guilty." It was rendered after such irregularities, however, it is the general supposition that it will not stand. The irregularities were of the jurors' own making. They could not be ignorant of the fact that such doings could redound only to the prisoner's benefit. A verdict of acquittal would have to stand and a verdict of "guilty" would be the only one affected.

Affidavits in support of the motion from J. P. Williams, John Corbett and Harry F. McGurren, the righteous jurors in the case, were read. They all recited the derelictions of the jurors and how they had outraged all law by reading papers and discussing them and by the reading aloud of one article after the case had gone to them for consideration. There was no mention in the affidavits of the Judge's warning and instructions. They dealt only with the flagrant irregularities.

Then an affidavit from McGlade was read. It set forth the same facts, but they came with better grace from him than they did from the jurors. He claimed that he had been injured by the misconduct of the jury to the extent that he did not receive a fair trial.

The misconduct alleged against the District Attorney and his assistant, Mr. Deuprey, consisted in telling a newspaper man, James Donohue, some facts about the irregularities of the jury. Donohue was put on the stand, but he would testify to but little.

In reply to the affidavits of the jurors and the prisoner, Mr. Deuprey said he would only submit the notes of the reporter referring to the charges against the integrity of the jury made by the prosecution and opposed so vigorously by the defense.

The Judge added that Williams had come to him the day after the first publication objected to appeared and asked to be excused from the jury on the ground that he was looking for a position in the city service and he feared that after the comments that had been made his chances would be impaired. The motion was then submitted.

The defense also submitted a motion to arrest judgment on the ground that the indictment was insufficient and then the case went over until Monday, June 25, to give the District Attorney time to prepare some affidavits on his side of the case.

M'GLADE ASKS A NEW TRIAL.

JURORS SAY THEY READ NEWSPAPER ARTICLES.

NO DIRECT STATEMENT THAT THE VERDICT WAS INFLUENCED IN THAT MANNER

One of the Twelve Men in the Box Was Anxious Not to Lose a Political Appointment.

Peter W. McGlade, who was found guilty of forgery, is seeking to have the verdict set aside. His attorneys, Lennon & Hawkins, presented a motion for arrest of judgment and a motion for a new trial in Department 12 of the Superior Court yesterday. The motion for arrest of judgment was on the ground that the evidence did not justify the verdict, it being argued that the demand on the city treasury which McGlade was accused of forging showed on its face that it was unauthorized. It was contended that T. H. McGlade, the assistant clerk of the Board of Supervisors, whose name McGlade was charged with forging, had no legal authority to administer an oath because his appointment as assistant did not come from the clerk of the Board, but from the Board of Supervisors. That consequently an oath taken before McGlade that a demand was correct was worthless, and that the imitation of his signature on the demand did not amount to forgery.

The motion for a new trial was based on an allegation that the jury was influenced by articles printed in the newspapers. Affidavits by three of the jurors were filed. J. H. Williams and John Corbett stated that on Monday, May 21st, they rose in the jury-box and asked to be excused from serving on the jury because they had read an article published on the previous day in which it was announced that the District Attorney would make a motion on Monday to discharge the jury because of alleged irregularity in the summoning and drawing of the jurors. Harry F. McGurren, another juror, stated that an article criticising the method of selection of the jury was passed around and read by the jurors in the jury-room after they had retired to deliberate on the case. The jurors had been duly admonished by Judge Cook to avoid reading newspaper articles concerning the trial and to pay attention only to the evidence given in court and the Judge's instructions on the law. Evidently this admonition was not strictly obeyed.

The reporter who wrote the article concerning the intention of the District Attorney to move for the dismissal of the jury was called to the witness stand by Attorney Lennon, and testified that his information came from one of the attorneys who were conducting the prosecution. Judge Cook said that Juror Williams told him in his chambers on May 21st that Williams was an applicant for a political position, the appointment to which was to be made by Mayor Phelan, and that he feared his chance of getting it would be endangered if he remained on the jury. Williams at that time asked to be excused, and mentioned the newspaper article as a reason for getting off the jury.

Assistant District Attorney Deuprey remarked that the jurors were not excused because of the objection of the defendant's counsel to letting them go. He asked for time in which to secure affidavits from the jurors and a continuance until June 25th was granted.

None of the jurors whose affidavits were filed said that the verdict was influenced by what was published in the newspapers.

JURORS READ "EXAMINER."

For That Reason Peter W. McGlade Demands a New Trial.

Peter W. McGlade has asked for a new trial on the ground that jurors impaneled to try his case read "The Examiner" after they were impaneled. Attorney Lennon presented an affidavit signed by McGlade in which he alleged that a copy of "The Examiner" of date of May 20th was taken into the jury-room, and that after the editorial contained therein was read aloud the paper was passed around among the jurors.

This was corroborated by the affidavits of John Corbett, foreman of the jury, and by Jurors Harry F. McGurren and J. H. Wright. They deposed that they also read other papers after being impaneled to try the case.

McGlade averred that in consequence of the reading of these papers his rights had been jeopardized and he had been placed in jeopardy.

Deputy District Attorney Deuprey said the State would be ready to meet and offset these allegations at the next calling of the case, and an adjournment was taken until June 25th.

M'GLADE ALLEGES THE JURY WAS INFLUENCED

Swears That He Was Convicted By Biased Publications In Local Newspapers.

Peter W. McGlade, awaiting sentence upon a charge of forgery, applied to Judge Cook yesterday for a new trial. He founded his petition upon the assumption that he was unjustly convicted.

In an affidavit detailing the various incidents attending his trial, he asserted that the jury was influenced in its verdict by charges of corruption made by the local newspapers. Particular objection was made to an article published in the Chronicle on the morning following the impanelment of the jury. This publication alleged that three of the jurymen were intimate friends of the defendant, and charged that they were illegally drawn from a venire pledged to vote for his acquittal.

McGlade's affidavit contained the additional charge that the Examiner on the day the case went to the jury, made a general accusation of corruption, and concluded with the statement that the jurors, if they did not find the defendant guilty, were open to the imputation that they were influenced by questions of friendship. This article, according to McGlade was read in the jury room. It had an ill effect on the jurors, he said, and in a large measure influenced their judgment.

In support of McGlade's affidavit Attorneys Lennon and Hawkins, counsel for the defense, introduced affidavits from Jurors John Corbett, Harry E. McGureen and J. B. Williams. Corbett swore that the publication in the Chronicle was particularly offensive, and that it so annoyed him that he asked in open court to be dismissed from the jury. His application was denied, and he was therefore compelled to serve on the jury against his will. Williams made a similar statement. Neither Williams nor Corbett made any attempt, however, to show that he was influenced by the publication in question, or by the fact that he was compelled to become a member of the jury.

McGureen swore that the Examiner article was read in the jury room. He did not comment upon its effect upon the verdict of the jurors.

Lennon and Hawkins offered to make an argument upon the motion for a new trial, but Judge Cook declined to hear them immediately, suggesting a postponement to permit the District Attorney to present counter affidavits. To this the District Attorney agreed, and on June 5 he hopes to prove by the oaths of the twelve jurors that McGlade was tried without regard for newspaper criticism and convicted without bias or prejudice.

Chronicle Sept 27, '9–

M'GLADE JURY WAS NOT MISLED

STATEMENT OF THE DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

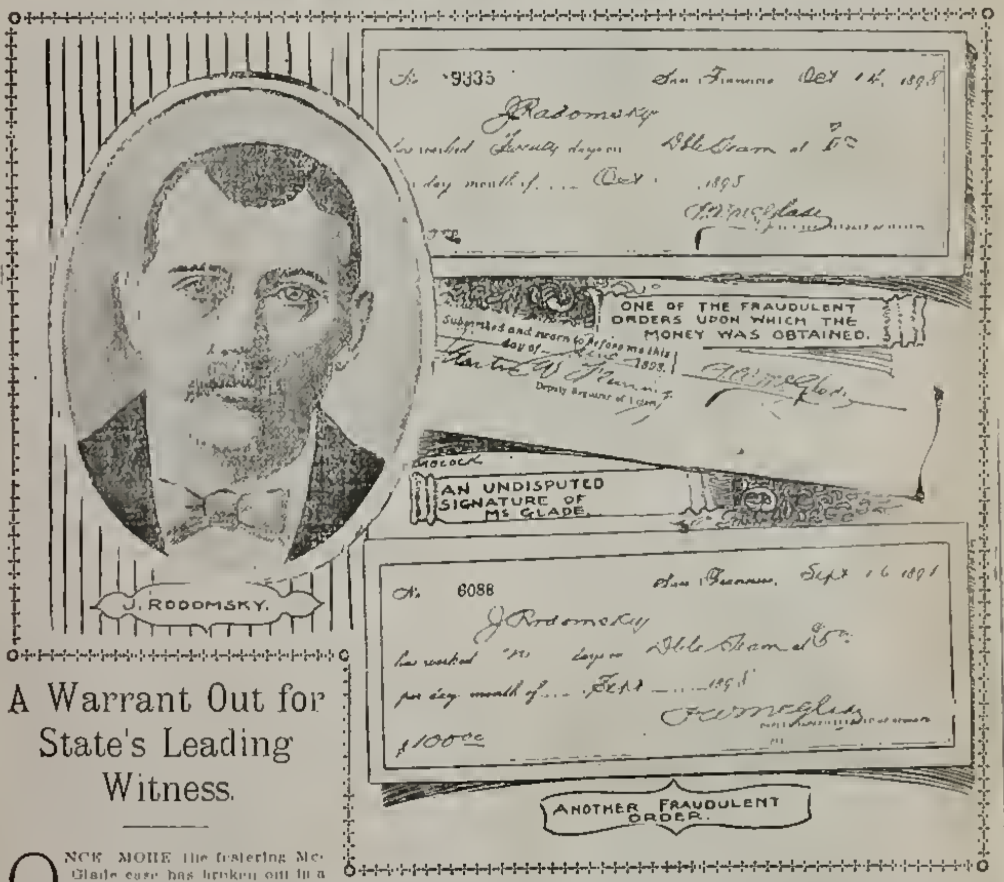
THE FORM OF THE VERDICT PREPARED BY JUDGE COOK.

Lawyers for the Prosecution Think That It Will Stand, Though the Court Expressed Doubts.

In regard to the verdict rendered by the jury in the case of Peter W. McGlade, over which a question arose last Monday, Oscar Tolle, clerk of Department 12 of the Superior Court, stated on Tuesday that three forms for a verdict were given to the jury. One of these was returned with the signature of John Corbett, the foreman, on it, and the two other slips were thrown away. A copy of these two is not now procurable, but Tolle and the District Attorney said that one of them was to the effect that McGlade had forged the Street Department demand mentioned in the indictment, as well as uttered, published and passed it. The third form was to the effect that McGlade was not guilty. The form that was selected by the jury for the declaration of the verdict stated that McGlade had uttered, published and passed the forged demand. In the indictment he was accused both of forging the name of Thomas B. McGinnis on it, and of uttering, publishing and passing the demand, knowing it to be forged. The jury did not decide whether or not he had forged the name of McGinnis, and part of the indictment was thus left undetermined. Tolle stated that the forms for the verdict were prepared by Judge Cook. Tolle copied them so as to put them in handy shape for the jury. The jurors had to act according to the instructions of the Court.

Last Monday during the hearing on the motion for a new trial, Judge Cook expressed doubt as to whether there was any evidence in the case to show that McGlade had uttered and passed the demand. Assistant District Attorney Dempsey said that it had been proven that McGlade received the forged demand from the office of the Clerk of the Board of Supervisors. It was one of a bundle of demands, and McGlade, as the bookkeeper in the Street Department, receipted for all of them at one time. Judge Cook responded that McGlade's possession of it did not establish that he passed it to the City Treasury, as it might have been taken from his desk by another person. District Attorney Byington said that, according to the expert testimony of Theodore Kytka, McGlade

NEW PERJURY TO SAVE FORGER M'GLADE, IDOL OF THE HALL GANG.



A Warrant Out for State's Leading Witness.

ONCE MORE the festering McGlade case has broken out in a new place. Yesterday a warrant was sworn out by Detective Gibson charging J. Rodomsky, the principal witness for the prosecution with perjury. This was no surprise to those familiar with this case, so full of perjury and forgery. Rodomsky had simply reversed his testimony of the preceding day after having come in contact with the City Hall ring that has been working for nearly two years to secure the acquittal of their former associate in raids upon the city treasury.

The course of Rodomsky calls special attention to the crimes for which Peter W. McGlade has been and is now on trial. This wholesale forger and obtainer of money under false pretenses—he is a forger by his own confession—was formerly a bookkeeper in the Street Department under one Ambrose, a jobholder with an accommodating and elastic memory. As a frequenter of the tenderloin and the race courses McGlade needed more money than his salary afforded. To raise it he forged the names of men not employed in the Street Department to demands for labor performed. These warrants for fictitious employes he sold by assign-had been stationed outside in the corridor. The verdict was set aside and a new trial ordered on the ground of the newspaper reading tricks. Judge Carroll Cook, who conducted the first two trials, censured the newspapers for criticising the corrosive case, but had no disapproving word for the jurors who were clearly in contempt of court for disobeying his instructions not to read the newspapers.

A third trial is now on with Judge Burnett of Santa Rosa upon the bench. The same City Hall gang is on hand to lend aid and comfort to McGlade. Twice have these corruptors of municipal departments succeeded in dazing justice and causing her scales to lose their equal balance in favor of the accused. Once more they are pitted against the machinery of the courts.

On the second trial an affidavit was filed charging that the jury-box had been manipulated during the drawing of the jury and that Bailiff Dasha had used irregular methods in summoning the jurors. No action was taken by Judge Cook in the matter of these serious charges. In the third trial the Sheriff has substituted another deputy for Dasha, but the latter was about the courtroom and corridor yesterday with plenty of leisure to rub elbows with jurors and witnesses and hold consultations with the Street Department gang

Ed and not Peter McGlade who gave him the fraudulent order of October 14 1895, which is the basis of the indictment on which McGlade is now being tried. Rodomsky admitted having been with Fitzpatrick until midnight, but denied that the latter had influenced his testimony.

Yesterday afternoon, under cross-examination by Lawyer Lennon, Rodomsky testified that no one had requested him to change his testimony after he left the witness stand.

"Which of your statements is true—the one you made a few days ago, or the one you made this morning?" asked Lennon.

"Both were true, only I got Ed McGlade mixed with Pete McGlade," explained the shifty witness.

Rodomsky was shown the two fraudulent orders and was then asked:

"Could you swear positively that you ever had either one of these orders in your possession?"

"I had orders that looked just like these, but I could not swear they are the same. They may have been imitations," contributed the accommodating Rodomsky.

On re-direct examination by District Attorney Byington and Assistant District Attorney Dempsey the witness admitted that in their presence and that of Detective Gibson he had made a statement that Peter McGlade gave him the Chronicle on the morning following the impanelment of the jury. This publication alleged that three of the jurymen were intimate friends of the defendant, and charged that they were illegally drawn from a venire pledged to vote for his acquittal.

McGlade's affidavit contained the additional charge that the Examiner on the day the case went to the jury made a general accusation of corruption, and concluded with the statement that the jurors, if they did not find the defendant guilty, were open to the imputation that they were influenced by questions of friendship. This article, according to McGlade was read in the jury room. It had an ill effect on the jurors, he said, and in a large measure influenced their judgment.

In support of McGlade's affidavit Attor-will. Williams made a similar statement. Neither Williams nor Corbett made any attempt, however, to show that he was influenced by the publication in question, or by the fact that he was compelled to become a member of the jury.

McGurren swore that the Examiner article was read in the jury room. He did not comment upon its effect upon the verdict of the jurors.

Lennon and Hawkins offered to make an argument upon the motion for a new trial, but Judge Cook declined to hear them immediately, suggesting a postponement to permit the District Attorney to present counter affidavits. To this the District Attorney agreed, and on June 5 he hopes to prove by the oaths of the twelve jurors that McGlade was tried without regard for newspaper criticism and convicted without bias or prejudice.

Chronicle Sept 27 '99

M'GLADE JURY WAS NOT MISLED

STATEMENT OF THE DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

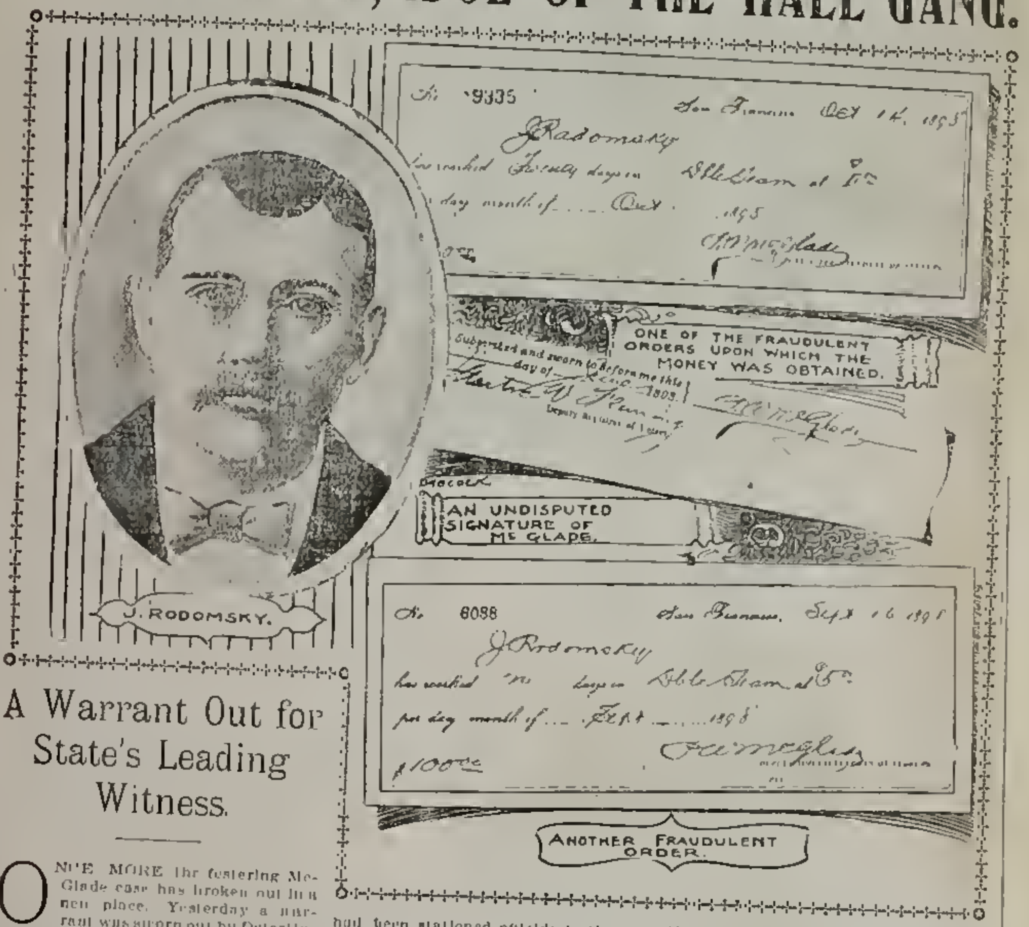
THE FORM OF THE VERDICT PREPARED BY JUDGE COOK.

Lawyers for the Prosecution Think That It Will Stand, Though the Court Expressed Doubts.

In regard to the verdict rendered by the jury in the case of Peter W. McGlade, over which a question arose last Monday, Oscar Tolle, clerk of Department 12 of the Superior Court, stated on Tuesday that three forms for a verdict were given to the jury. One of these was returned with the signature of John Corbett, the foreman, on it, and the two other slips were thrown away. A copy of these two is not now procurable, but Tolle and the District Attorney said that one of them was to the effect that McGlade had forged the Street Department demand mentioned in the indictment, as well as uttered, published and passed it. The third form was to the effect that McGlade was not guilty. The form that was selected by the jury for the declaration of the verdict stated that McGlade had uttered, published and passed the forged demand. In the indictment he was accused both of forging the name of Thomas B. McGinnis on it, and of uttering, publishing and passing the demand, knowing it to be forged. The jury did not decide whether or not he had forged the name of McGinnis, and part of the indictment was thus left undetermined. Tolle stated that the forms for the verdict were prepared by Judge Cook. Tolle copied them so as to put them in handy shape for the jury. The jurors had to act according to the instructions of the Court.

Last Monday during the hearing on the motion for a new trial, Judge Cook expressed doubt as to whether there was any evidence in the case to show that McGlade had uttered and passed the demand. Assistant District Attorney Deuprey said that it had been proven that McGlade received the forged demand from the office of the Clerk of the Board of Supervisors. It was one of a bundle of demands, and McGlade, as the bookkeeper in the Street Department, receipted for all of them at one time. Judge Cook responded that McGlade's possession of it did not establish that he passed it at the City Treasury, as it might have been taken from his desk by another person. District Attorney Byington said that, according to the expert testimony of Theodore Kytka, McGlade

NEW PERJURY TO SAVE FORGER M'GLADE, IDOL OF THE HALL GANG.



A Warrant Out for State's Leading Witness.

ONCE MORE the festering McGlade case has broken out in a new place. Yesterday a warrant was sworn out by Detective Gibson charging J. Rodomsky, the principal witness for the prosecution with perjury. This was no surprise to those familiar with this case, so full of perjury and forgery. Rodomsky had simply reversed his testimony of the preceding day after having come in contact with the City Hall ring that has been working for nearly two years to secure the acquittal of their former associate in raids upon the city treasury.

The course of Rodomsky calls especial attention to the crimes for which Peter W. McGlade has been and is now on trial. This wholesale forger and obtainer of money under false pretenses—he is a forger by his own confession—was formerly a bookkeeper in the Street Department under one Ambrose, a jobholder with an accommodating and elastic memory. As a frequenter of the tenderloin and the race courses McGlade needed more money than his salary afforded. To raise it he forged the names of men not employed in the Street Department to demands for labor performed. These warrants for fictitious employes he sold by assignment to brokers and also cashed them at the city treasury. By these double transactions he obtained about $5000. The papers he prepared to secure this money involved more than 100 deliberate forgeries.

When pressed McGlade fled the State. On being brought back he confessed to his crimes in detail. He was indicted by the Grand Jury on several counts. The City Hall ring and particularly the clique of jobbers that fattened for years on the corruption of the Street Department came to his support. The jury-fixers, contract sneakers and manipulators of fictitious labor demands declared that their fellow must be acquitted and that no judicial obstruction should be placed in the path to the vaults of the city treasury.

On the first trial the jury, notwithstanding that a complete chain of evidence of McGlade's criminality was presented, acquitted the defendant. On a second trial the jury performed some extraordinary antics. Newspapers were openly read in the jury box and the jurors discussed the case both in and out of the courtroom. It had been programmed by the City Hall gang that the jury should disagree, but so notorious had become the acts of certain members of the trial body that a different tack was taken. After the case had been given to it for final consideration, the jury caused newspaper reports of the case to be read in such loud tones that they were heard by witnesses who had been stationed outside in the corridor. The verdict was set aside and a new trial ordered on the ground of the newspaper reading tricks. Judge Carroll Cook, who conducted the first two trials, censured the newspapers for criticising the corrosive case, but had no disapproving word for the jurors who were clearly in contempt of court for disobeying its instructions not to read the newspapers.

A third trial is now on with Judge Burnett of Santa Rosa upon the bench. The same City Hall gang is on hand to lend aid and comfort to McGlade. Twice have these corruptors of municipal departments succeeded in dazing justice and causing her scales to lose their equal balance in favor of the accused. Once more they are pitted against the machinery of the courts.

On the second trial an affidavit was filed charging that the jury-box had been manipulated during the drawing of the jury and that Bailiff Dasha had used irregular methods in summoning the jurors. No action was taken by Judge Cook in the matter of these serious charges. In the third trial the Sheriff has substituted another deputy for Dasha, but the latter was about the courtroom and corridor yesterday with plenty of leisure to rub elbows with jurors and witnesses and hold consultations with the Street Department gang which is manipulating McGlade's attempt to defeat the ends of justice.

The charge upon which McGlade is now being tried is "obtaining money under false pretenses." He forged two orders on Bier & Regensburger for $100 each, purporting to be the amount of the demands of J. Rodomsky, twenty days' work at $5 a day, in each of two different months. The orders represented that Rodomsky drove a double team for the Street Department, whereas he occasionally drove for a man who had a cart in the department and was not on the public pay roll. In his leisure he ran errands and did dirty work for McGlade.

On Tuesday Rodomsky testified that McGlade gave him the two orders—one dated September 16th and the other October 14th—in a corridor of the City Hall. He swore that he got into a buggy with Ed McGlade, a brother of Peter and drove to the brokers' where he cashed the orders and that they then went to Matt O'Donnell's saloon, where the money was paid over to Peter McGlade. The defendant gave the witness $1 on one occasion and $1 50 on another. This testimony was in harmony with his affidavit and his statements made to the District Attorney and before the Grand Jury.

After having had a night's run with the City Hall gang and particularly with one Fitzpatrick, Rodomsky walked into court yesterday morning and reversed his testimony, saying that it was Ed and not Peter McGlade who gave him the fraudulent order of October 14 1898, which is the basis of the indictment on which McGlade is now being tried. Rodomsky admitted having been with Fitzpatrick until midnight, but denied that the latter had influenced his testimony.

Yesterday afternoon, under cross-examination by Lawyer Lennon, Rodomsky testified that no one had requested him to change his testimony after he left the witness stand.

"Which of your statements is true—the one you made a few days ago, or the one you made this morning?" asked Lennon.

"Both were true, only I got Ed McGlade mixed with Pete McGlade," explained the shifty witness.

Rodomsky was shown the two fraudulent orders and was then asked:

"Could you swear positively that you ever had either one of these orders in your possession?"

"I had orders that looked just like these, but I could not swear they are the same. They may have been imitations," contributed the accommodating Rodomsky.

On redirect examination by District Attorney Byington and Assistant District Attorney Deuprey the witness admitted that in their presence and that of Detective Gibson he had made a statement that Peter McGlade gave him the bogus orders. He subsequently qualified his admission by saying: "I might have, and I might not. I am not positive."

Under pressure the acrobatic witness said that McGlade had urged him to go out of town, and that he had never before suggested that Ed McGlade gave him the orders.

Rodomsky was asked as to his testimony before the Grand Jury, but was excused until this morning to permit him to read the transcript.

Joseph Bier, the broker, and Charles Trull, his bookkeeper, described the paying of the money to Rodomsky on McGlade's order and gave other details of the transaction.

After consultation with Judge Burnett last evening District Attorney Byington decided to withdraw the warrant against Rodomsky, not deeming it advisable to have him arrested while he was giving his testimony.

The City Hall ring is jubilant over the caving down of Rodomsky. He is the principal witness for the prosecution, and upon him District Attorney Byington depended, in a great measure, to make out his case. He is also the principal witness in the untried counts of the indictment. The City Hall ring boasts that with the capture of Rodomsky they have at last thwarted justice and assured the permanent release of McGlade, the wholesale forger and obtainer of money under false pretenses.

CITY HALL GANG AT BAY

Testimony That Should Convict Forger McGlade.

RODOMSKY AMENDS HIS MUDDLED STATEMENTS.

KYTKA SAYS BOTH THE ORDERS WERE WRITTEN BY THE PRISONER.

The Defendant Had Warned One of His Tools to Say Nothing About His Obtaining the Money.

The McGlade trial presents the anomalous condition of one branch of the city government prosecuting the defendant and others lined up and actively engaged in his defense. City employes drawing salaries, presumably for working in the interest of the municipality, are engaged in an endeavor to thwart justice and prevent one of their former associates from being punished under the law for looting the city treasury.

The reason for this active solicitude on the part of the City Hall ring for one of their number is that they argue that if one of them be sent to prison to pay the penalty for his crimes, their prestige will have departed. The success of their corrupt manipulations, raids upon the city treasury and debauching of jurors, has depended largely upon their ability to protect their tools. Should one of their own circle become an inmate of San Quentin prison their guaranty of immunity to their dupes would no longer be accepted. The gang is now engaged in a fight for self-preservation and the making possible of the continuance of their nefarious practices.

But notwithstanding the false swearing of the gang and their pernicious proximity to witnesses and members of the jury, the net of evidence has been closely woven about the defendant, and that he will pay the penalty for at least one of his many crimes seems inevitable.

Jake Rodomsky, who reversed a portion of his testimony on Wednesday after a night's bout with the City Hall ring, woke up yesterday morning with the cobwebs somewhat cleared from his brain. He had been ordered into custody by Judge Burnett with a view to protecting him from himself and spent the night in the County Jail. Rodomsky visited District Attorney Byington's office yesterday forenoon and amended his previous statements somewhat. He still insisted that Ed McGlade, a brother of Peter, gave him the fraudulent money order of October 16, 1898. After Rodomsky had cashed this order at the broker's he and Ed McGlade took the money to Matt O'Donnell's saloon on Grant avenue. There they met Pete McGlade, and the latter and his brother went down stairs into the basement. From the head of the stairs the witness said that he heard money chink. Then Pete McGlade came up stairs and had a conversation with the witness and gave him $1 50 with which to buy drinks.

When Rodomsky was recalled to the witness chair in the afternoon he still proved a reluctant witness for the prosecution.

"Do you remember the conversation that took place in Matt O'Donnell's saloon in October, 1898, after Peter McGlade came up stairs?" was asked.

"He said 'Now keep that to yourself and don't say anything about what you have done.'"

The testimony was drawn from the witness under vigorous protest from the defense. On cross-examination Lennon asked:

"Are you as sure of what you say to-day as of what you said the other day?"

"I am not sure of what I said the other day."

On redirect examination Rodomsky told that after McGlade's return from Mexico he promised to make good the $200 which Rodomsky's friend had to pay the broker to reimburse the latter and avoid prosecution. Later McGlade said he could not pay the money as the woman he expected to get it from had died.

The petty tricks and subterfuges to which the defense is resorting resulted yesterday morning in an exposé that will do the defendant no good. On Wednesday Joseph Bier, who had testified that he knew McGlade's signature, was shown the defendant's registration certificate by Lennon, the lawyer for the defense, and asked:

"Is that McGlade's signature?"

"It is not," came the quick response, to the confusion of the District Attorney's office and the apparent surprise of the jurors in the box.

An investigation showed that Lennon had so folded the registration certificate as to leave exposed the name "P. W. McGlade," as written in the body of it by the registration clerk. Bier correctly replied that it was not McGlade's signature, and by this little trick the defense left the impression that Bier had failed to identify the signature of McGlade to the certificate.

Continued

Yesterday morning Broker Bier was recalled and the trick exposed, the witness identifying McGlade's signature at the bottom of the certificate.

The identification of the two orders on the brokers, given by Rodomsky, to McGlade as official papers was made by J. H. McIntyre, the printer and bookbinder. McIntyre testified that the requisition for the blanks was made by the Street Department on the Board of Supervisors, and the latter body gave him the order. The blanks were printed and delivered to the Street Department. The witness produced a book of the blanks the same as those delivered.

These are the blanks that ex-Superintendent of Streets Ambrose, of accommodating memory, refused to identify as the official papers of his office. He said that there were no such papers used in his office. His veracity was shaken once more by the production of a requisition on the Board of Supervisors for the blanks signed by Ambrose himself.

The partisanship of the members of the City Hall gang for their old companion in municipal arms was given practical illustration at the noon recess of the Court. Official Shorthand Reporter Stevens accused Detective Tom Gibson and Handwriting Expert Kytka of having talked in front of the jury with the intention of influencing that body.

Gibson hotly denied the charge and told Stevens that if he would devote more attention to his shorthand notes and less to listening to conversations by the prosecution his reports might be more correct. Gibson said the only conversation between Kytka and himself was when he asked the expert for a photograph of the exhibits, and the latter passed it to him. Stevens was a volunteer affidavit maker for McGlade in the last trial.

Broker Regensberger identified McGlade's orders for money which he paid, and told of his agreement with McGlade to pay demands on the latter's order and signature. He did not discover that the demands were bogus until after McGlade's disappearance from the city.

Theodore Kytka, the handwriting expert, testified that the two fraudulent money orders were in the handwriting of McGlade. On cross-examination Lennon asked Kytka to give an example of Spencerian handwriting. Kytka proceeded to write, and the following conversation took place.

"You are very slow about it," suggested Lennon.

"Perhaps McGlade might do it quicker," retorted Kytka.

Lennon protested, and Assistant District Attorney Deuprey suggested that the answer was but a fair expression of opinion.

Judge Burnett ordered the answers stricken out and placed the proceedings back on an even keel.

Policeman John J. Cody and Detective Thomas Gibson testified to McGlade being brought back from Mexico under the name of Russell by Deputy Sheriff Phillips.

It is expected that the prosecution will close its case to-day.

HE WAS STRUCK BY AN ELECTRIC CAR.

Philip Bollinger Run Down at Fulton and Fillmore Streets and Severely Injured.

Philip Bollinger, an employe at the Fredericksburg Bottling Works, was run down by a Fillmore-street electric car last evening about 8:30 o'clock at Fillmore and Fulton streets and severely injured. It is feared that one of his legs is broken, besides which he was badly cut about the head.

Bollinger is a young man of about 30, who rooms at 675 Fulton street. He is a member of the Order of Hermann's Sons and took part in the procession with others of his order during the Native Sons celebration in this city. According to statements of people in the neighborhood of the accident, Bollinger attempted to cross in front of a north-bound Fillmore-street car, which at this point runs swiftly down a hill, and that the motorman was unable to stop the car in time to prevent the accident. Bollinger was removed to the German Hospital.

Ex. March 28 1901

ARREST AWAITS COOPER ON ANOTHER CHARGE.

Constable Mores, With a Warrant From Crockett, Attends "Sir" Harry's Habeas Corpus Proceedings.

Constable Theodore Mores of Crockett attended the hearing of "Sir" Harry Westwood Cooper's petition for a writ of habeas corpus before Judge Carroll Cook yesterday and in his pocket was a warrant issued by Justice of the Peace J. H. Pratt of Crockett and countersigned by Police Judge Cabaniss for the arrest of Dr. Ernest Moore Chadwick on a charge of obtaining money on false pretenses.

The complainant is Joseph [illegible] of Crockett, who charges "Sir" Harry with passing a bogus check for $150 drawn on the Donohoe-Kelly Bank here, in payment for a bill at his store. In the event of Cooper's release on the habeas corpus Mores will arrest him.

At the hearing Attorney Murphy argued that no testimony had been brought out that proved forgery had been committed. Judge Cook will render his decision to-morrow morning.

M'GLADE AGAIN FACES A JURY.

THIRD TRIAL IS NOW ON BEFORE JUDGE BURNETT.

CHANGED SURROUNDINGS CAUSE THE PRISONER SOME ANXIETY.

Familiar Faces Are Missing, but Former Street Superintendent Ambrose Still Forgets to Remember.

Peter W. McGlade, whose industrious pen brought him into disfavor with the law and the police, is again undergoing the ordeal of a trial by jury. His third attempt to save his big form from being attired in garments made by a prison tailor, was begun yesterday before Judge A. G. Burnett of Santa Rosa, who is sitting for Judge Carroll Cook in Department 12 of the Superior Court. It was McGlade's third trial, but somehow experience has not added to his self-assurance. He was facing a new Judge, many of the old familiar faces that had given him confidence at his other trials were missing, and the uncertainty of it all caused him to take an anxious interest in the proceedings.

The charge on which McGlade is now being tried is that of obtaining money by false pretenses. In all four indictments were the outcome of McGlade's misdeeds while bookkeeper for Superintendent of Streets Ambrose. His first trial for forgery resulted in an acquittal and the second in a conviction which Judge Carroll Cook nullified by granting a new trial. The other cases of forgery have never been tried. All along there has been much talk of a potent pull, and "Pete's" admirers have never despaired of his ultimate "vindication."

At the hearing yesterday the prosecution was represented by District Attorney Byington and Assistant District Attorney Deuprey, while McGlade's fight was made by Thomas J. Lennon. Five citizens summoned for jury duty were examined at the morning session of the court, the examination resulting in the selection of W. F. Dellmier, a piano manufacturer at 2257 Mission street, and H. M. Hageman, an upholsterer at 1330 Polk street. This completed the jury. The other members of the jury are: J. Tiedeman, 3574 Twentieth street; J. S. Merrill, 233 Market street; George A. Pule, 33 Second street, A. Voight, 34 First street; T. D. McCarthy, 764 Mission street, J. Stell, 658 Mission street; J. Kenne, 801 Post street, H. Mangels, corner Hayes and Franklin streets, H. J. McCinley, 508 Market street, and H. Bird, 208 Mission street.

Assistant District Attorney Deuprey, in his opening statement, set forth that the prosecution expected to prove that McGlade wrongfully obtained $97 from Bier & Regensburger, money brokers on October 14, 1898, through a written representation that J. Radomsky had worked twenty days for the city at $5 a day and had owing to him $100. It was stated that Radomsky sold the order, gave the money to McGlade, and received $1 "to get something to eat with." Further the prosecution expected to prove, Deuprey said, that Radomsky had not worked a day for the city, and that when an investigation was begun McGlade took flight and had to be brought back from Deming, N. M.

Former Superintendent of Streets Ambrose was the first witness. As at former trials, Ambrose proved himself a friend of the prisoner. He was even less generous than McGlade's attorney, and refused to acknowledge a signature that the defense admitted. This occurred when the oath of office taken by McGlade was presented. Judge Burnett, turning to Ambrose, asked pointedly, "Don't you know your own signature?"

In reply Ambrose tried to explain that it would be impossible for him to recognize his own signature after a lapse of a few years. Then the defense came to his rescue with an admission that the document offered was McGlade's oath of office.

Ambrose could not even identify the books containing the pay rolls of his office. Attorney Lennon aided him with multiple objections to the questions asked by the prosecution, but Judge Burnett, ruling quickly and decisively, swept away all obstacles, and as much was accomplished in an hour yesterday as was brought out in the first two days of the second trial.

With reluctance Ambrose told of his search for McGlade after the big bookkeeper had taken flight, but did not neglect to make frequent use of the stereotyped answer, "I don't remember." He did not know Rudomsky, and had never employed him. After this admission Ambrose was temporarily turned over to his friends, the defense. One unimportant question was asked and then he was excused with the understanding that the prosecution, if it saw fit, might recall him to the stand.

The prosecution asked for a continuance, and Lennon objected. For some reason he wanted Rudomsky put on the stand at once. This request was denied, and then Lennon wanted to be assured of the presence of Rudomsky in court. Rodomsky was called in, and at the request of the defense instructed to be in court at 10 o'clock this morning. Then Judge Burnett ordered an adjournment, and McGlade, attended by a deputy sheriff, went back to his quarters in the County Jail.

NO STRIPES FOR M'GLADE.

Peter the Penman Once More "Beats the Case."

ACQUITTAL THE RESULT OF HIS THIRD TRIAL.

JURYMEN SAY IT WAS NOT PROVED THAT HE RECEIVED THE MONEY.

Verdict Reached in a Little More Than an Hour—Corks Popped and Glasses Clinked Among the Gang.

Peter W. McGlade, after three trials, at last goes unwhipped of justice. The jury in his case returned a verdict of not guilty at 5:45 o'clock yesterday afternoon, having deliberated a little longer than an hour. McGlade has been restored to the bosom of the City Hall push, which schemed, coerced and intimidated to bring about the rescue of their pal, for whom the gates of the penitentiary were ajar. News of his release spread swiftly among the members of the gang, and soon corks were popping and glasses clinking to celebrate the victory won by the exploiters of the city treasury.

Members of the jury were reticent in telling how the unexpected verdict was brought about. Many refused to discuss the matter, while others wanted first to consult their associates before revealing the secrets of the jury-room. It is understood, however, that the reason for the verdict was purely technical. While the majority were satisfied that a crime had been committed and that McGlade was the guilty person, it was not shown by the evidence, they thought, that he had profited by his fraud. Under the assumption that the money which was raised upon the fraudulent orders went to some one other than McGlade, the jury felt satisfied in bringing in a verdict of acquittal.

"There was nothing else for us to do," said one of the jurors last night in discussing the verdict. "Under the instructions of the Court a crime was not proved, unless we were satisfied that McGlade received the money. There were grave doubts in the minds of all of us upon that point, and when we came to a ballot the vote was unanimous for acquittal. Of course, we looked over the fraudulent orders with a view to examining the signatures, but the real point upon which the verdict was returned was that which I have stated. If the evidence had been more positive upon that point a different conclusion might have been reached."

When the trial was renewed yesterday before Judge Burnett and a jury, J. H. Colby, sergeant of police, testified as to the telegraphic correspondence with the authorities in New Mexico relative to the return of the fugitive McGlade, and as to the arrival of the defendant in the custody of Deputy Sheriff Phillips of Deming. Former Chief of Police I. W. Lees told about McGlade's return under the name of Russell and about his being turned over to the custody of the witness by the deputy sheriff from New Mexico. Here the prosecution rested.

Attorney Lennon, on behalf of the defendant, moved to strike out the testimony of Police Officers Cody, Gibson, Lees and Colby on the ground that it was immaterial, incompetent and failed to show that the defendant had ever attempted flight or completed flight from this State. Judge Burnett denied the motion.

Lennon next moved to strike out all the testimony of Rodomsky relative to his going to the brokers and his transaction in Matt O'Donnell's saloon, on the ground that he had not been connected directly with the defendant. This motion was also denied.

McGlade, the defendant, was called to the witness stand and shown the fraudulent order for $100, drawn in favor of Rodomsky, and dated October 14, 1898.

"Whose signature is that?" asked Lennon.

"It looks very much like mine," was the answer.

"Is that your handwriting?"

"I think it is."

This admission of the signature to the fraudulent document came as a surprise to the prosecution. But the defendant stopped there with his admissions and proceeded to repudiate the rest of the paper.

"Did you write the name 'J. Rodomsky' on that paper?"

"No, sir."

"Did you write anything on that paper except the signature 'P. W. McGlade?'"

"No, sir."

"Did you ever deliver that paper in any shape to J. R. Rodomsky?"

"I did not."

"Did you ever receive any money from Rodomsky or Ed McGlade purporting to have been received on that paper?"

"No, sir."

"Did you ever have any conversation with Rodomsky relative to that paper?"

"I did not."

When it appeared that there was nothing left for the defendant to deny he was turned over to District Attorney Byington for cross-examination. Under the rule, the questions were confined to the one paper that McGlade had admitted, and nothing more was obtained from him.

The defense announced that it wished to prove by Derham, Cathcart and Lyons, employes of the Street Department, that McGlade was in the habit of signing orders on the broker in blank and leaving them on his desk. None of these witnesses responded and McGlade was recalled to do the trick himself. He was again shown the bogus money order.

"Was that signed in blank by you?"

"Yes, sir."

McGlade explained that it was his habit to sign the orders in blank and leave them on his desk.

Assistant District Attorney Deuprey in his opening argument reviewed the history of the case, showing how McGlade, while bookkeeper for the Street Department and under the shadow of the City Hall concocted the fraud to obtain money under false pretenses. In the corridor near the City Treasurer's office he gave the bogus money order to Radomsky, who had it cashed at the brokers. He handed the money to Ed McGlade, a brother of the defendant, and they rode in a wagon to Matt O'Donnell's saloon, where the two brothers went down stairs. From the head of the stairs Radomsky heard the chink of coin and when Peter McGlade came up he gave him $1, and asked him to say nothing of what he had done for him.

Attorney Lennon, for the defense, made a technical argument with a view to confusing the jury. He claimed that the fraudulent order was false on its face and that the brokers had no right to cash it. He claimed also that the paper was not a demand upon any one nor was it signed by McGlade as Deputy Superintendent of Streets. That the order was fraudulent was apparent from the fact that while it was presented on October 14th, it called for payment for twenty days' work which was a physical impossibility. When the broker's clerk cashed the order he knew that it was a physical impossibility.

In his closing argument Deuprey dwelt upon the connection of Radomsky with the case. He said he was a mere messenger, taking a fraudulent order, drawn on a blank furnished by the Supervisors for the Street Department, paid for by the city and signed by McGlade and cashed it for the latter at the brokers. The handwriting in both the orders before the Court—one introduced to show intent and the second the object of obtaining money under false pretenses—was that of Peter W. McGlade beyond peradventure of a doubt. The assistant district attorney denied that Radomsky was an accomplice of McGlade. He had not participated in the loot. All the unfortunate man had done was to act as a messenger for the defendant, for which service he was paid $1. In the matter of the cashing of the orders by the brokers there was nothing unusual, the latter proceeding under an agreement between McGlade and themselves and the orders bearing the defendant's signature.

Judge Burnett charged the jury as to the law of the case, defining what constituted the felony called "obtaining money under false pretenses." The Judge also defined "reasonable doubt." His charge was regarded by both sides as fair and explicit.

At 4:30 P. M. the case was given to the jury. A few minutes after that body called for all the exhibits in the case, and they were sent into the jury-room.

The jurors who tried the case were:

J. Tiedeman, 2514 Twentieth street; J. S. Merrill, 23 Mabel street; George A. Pole, 73 Second street; A. Voght, 34 First street; T. D. McCarthy, 161 Mission street; J. Seidl, 625 Mission street; J. Keene, 101 Post street; H. Mangels, Hayes and Franklin streets; G. J. McCraley, 508 Market street; H. Bird, 236 Mission street; W. F. Dellemeier, 1257 Mission street; H. M. Hageman, 133 Polk street.

RADOMSKY GIVEN HIS LIBERTY

Judge and Prosecution Hold He Did Not Seek to Aid McGlade.

J. R. Radomsky, whose arrest on the supposed charge of false swearing caused a mild sensation in the Peter McGlade trial, was released from custody yesterday by order of Judge Burnett. District Attorney Byington and Judge Burnett both reached the conclusion that Radomsky did not deliberately change his statement with the object in view of aiding the defense, but that his second statement was intended to correct the first, which was made when he was unduly excited.

Radomsky was placed upon the stand again yesterday afternoon. He adhered to his second statement, testifying that the order of October 14 was given to him by Edward McGlade, a brother of the accused. He said, however, that he knew Peter McGlade received the money for the same, as he told him that he would get the money from a woman and pay it back. Subsequently the witness said the defendant told him that the woman was dead. He carried the money received on the order of October 14, he said, to Edward McGlade, who was waiting at Matt O'Donnell's saloon. He believed Peter McGlade received the money, because he saw him go downstairs with Edward. Radomsky admitted that he was fresh from an interview with the District Attorney, to whose office the Sheriff took him.

Joseph Beler of the firm of Beli & Regensberger was the first witness of the day. He testified that he was in his office when Radomsky was paid the money on the orders he alleged McGlade gave him. He knew nothing further about the case.

J. D. McIntyre, who bound the books from which the slips were taken and filled out as orders, identified his handiwork and stated that such slips went to the office of the Superintendent of Streets.

M. M. Regensberger was called to the stand to testify as to the modus operandi which preceded the payment of money by his firm on warrants. Charles Trull identified one of McGlade's signatures which was being used as an exemplar for purposes of comparison. Theodore Kytka testified that in his opinion the signatures on the orders on which the money was paid to Radomsky were those of the defendant.

Detectives Cody and Gibson testified as to having received McGlade at the ferry after his arrest. Former Chief of Police Lees will testify this morning. The prosecution will close to-day and the defense open.

Woman Who Terrorized A Whole Town

YDA ADDIS STORKE is in the courts again.

This most extraordinary woman and one-time brilliant writer, who was but a few months ago released from jail in Santa Barbara upon the conclusion of her year's imprisonment for the sending of indecent and slanderous anonymous letters, is now appealing against the decision which granted the decree to her husband five years ago in his suit for divorce from her. The case has been kept alive all this time by her long, hard, bitter fight, and has been marked by the most sensational episodes. C. A. Storke, who is now Mayor of Santa Barbara, having first obtained a decree of divorce, wants to stay divorced. Yda Addis Storke is as unwilling to be wife as he is to be husband, but she wants to have the divorce granted to her—and alimony; and this in spite of the fact that she openly declared last year that she had entered into a contract marriage with her attorney in the case, Grant Jackson of Santa Barbara, on whose life she made a melodramatic attempt just before she was sentenced to jail. The case is now awaiting the action of the Supreme Court.

It is but another page in the strange, stormy life of this strange, brilliant woman—a life that reads not like one, but like a dozen romances.

YDA ADDIS STORKE is Santa Barbara's bogie.

In all California there is not another being so brilliant and at the same time so weird as Yda Addis Storke; and perhaps not another so feared and hated—and unhappy.

Fancy one woman's matrimonial complications destroying the serenity of an entire community.

Fancy one little woman turning a whole city topsy-turvey—and terrorizing its Mayor; one little, ninety-pound woman, poor, friendless, hungry, almost ragged.

This is what Yda Addis Storke has done to Santa Barbara and the Mayor of Santa Barbara—poor, wretched, unhappy, brilliant, erratic, vindictive little Yda Addis Storke.

Poor little Ishmael in petticoats.

Nothing can daunt or tame or soften her, or tire her relentless hatred.

She cherishes a grievance against C. A. Storke, her one-time husband, and she means with all her bitterness of heart to get even with him.

She set peaceful Santa Barbara by the ears. She turned its delightful, sleepy peace and placid faith into turmoil and distrust. All Santa Barbara believes that her busy mischief set husband against wife, wife against husband, man against maiden, and all Santa Barbara hates and fears her.

All Santa Barbara says with one breath that Yda Addis Storke is the most dangerous, malignant and pestiferous little woman that ever breathed the salubrious air of that paradise by the sea.

A little more than a year ago Santa Barbara was so incensed against her that men gathered on the street corners and hinted things to each other about tar and feathers, that indignant groups gathered in twilight parlors and agreed in whispers that lynching is a good thing in some cases.

It was because Santa Barbara had been flooded with the most startling and obnoxious anonymous letters, assailing the reputations of several men and women of good standing in their professional and social life and of many young girls of gentle breeding, tender years and modest conduct.

Yda Addis Storke was suspected of writing these letters and left the State, but returning, was arrested, tried, convicted and sentenced to one year's imprisonment in the Santa Barbara jail.

Santa Barbara's pleasant peace had been troubled for five years by Yda Addis Storke, and when it had her locked away in jail there was heaved a unanimous sigh of relief and Santa Barbara said, "Well, she's safe for a year, anyhow."

Yda Addis Storke is a proud, fragile, desperate little woman, and people who knew her prophesied that either the shame of her punishment would drive her to suicide in jail or that the confinement and grief would kill her.

But she is a philosopher, albeit a bitter one, so she disappointed Santa Barbara by making herself as comfortable as she could in jail by adjusting herself to the new conditions, serving her term, and as soon as it was finished, going to fighting again—as the revival of the old, well-fought divorce case shows.

This episode of the anonymous letters and the term in jail are but incidents in her turbulent career. She is a middle-aged woman now, with wasted form, faded beauty, silver-threaded hair and shattered hopes, and from the time she was a fresh young girl, piquant and fascinating, she has been startling California.

She cropped up on California's horizon first at Los Angeles, a trim little figure of a woman, dark-haired, dark-eyed, charming in manner, dainty in dress, young, accomplished, subtle, impetuous, with the added witchery of coquetry. She taught school there for six years and held an enviable position in the somewhat provincial society of the time. She spoke Spanish, French, Italian and was familiar with several Indian dialects. She knew the life of Central America, Mexico and the southern Territories, and, with this practically unexplored field her own, she had positive literary talent. She wrote for "Harper's Magazine," for the "Argonaut," the "Overland"; she was the correspondent of the Philadelphia "Press," the Chicago "Times," the St. Louis "Post-Dispatch" and at different times of the local dailies. Her work was original, daring, strong, polished. It won the favorable criticism of the most fastidious critics of the East. She faced a future as promising as ever shone before a woman writer of the West; and she interrupted it with an episode as wild as it was indecorous—that involving ex-Governor Downey of Los Angeles.

Under the most tragic conditions in the Tehachapi disaster Governor Downey lost his wife, and to soften the memory of his bereavement his friends induced him to make a trip to Mexico. Yda Addis in some way fell in with the party, and soon after their return publicly announced her engagement to Governor Downey. She claimed that his sister, Mrs. Peter Donahue, was restraining him of his liberty in order to break off the match, and threatened to bring suit for breach of promise. On account of the prominence and wealth of her alleged fiance the matter was given publicity throughout the West, and to make her claims apparently good she swore out a writ of habeas corpus, which brought Governor Downey forward with a flat and emphatic denial, in which he declared he never proposed marriage to and never desired marriage with Yda Addis—and Yda Addis made another trip to New Mexico and fell into another hornets' nest.

This time she figured as corespondent in a scandalous divorce suit with a Chicago newspaper man named Theodore Gestefeldt, whom she met in the City of Mexico. This she explained. It was all due to the dreadful naughtiness of her own father. He had indulged in an amour—there was an illegitimate daughter—a very wicked daughter, named Maud Addis or Maud Wallace, who acted on the wicked vaudeville stage—and who was so strikingly like the good Miss Addis, Miss Yda Addis, that no one could tell them apart except themselves. This wicked Miss Addis was the Miss Addis who was the corespondent in the Gestefeldt divorce suit. And there you are!

This is the story she told when she went to quiet, sleepy, heavenly Santa Barbara, where she met C. A. Storke and married him—and embarked on her sea of divorce troubles. The divorce cloud drifted across the face of the honeymoon before its last quarter waned, and after a few brief, stormy months of matrimony the literary lady and the legal gentleman decided to live apart—and the exciting times for Santa Barbara began.

One day Yda Addis Storke would attempt suicide by morphine.

Another day it would be attempted suicide by setting fire to her clothes.

Still another day and she would have Storke's son arrested for opening her letters.

Then a great murder mystery fell upon Santa Barbara. The Richardsons, mother and daughter, were terribly, brutally murdered one Sunday night. The mother was found lying dying in her own blood in her room. The daughter, with one single little garment on her young body, was found lying dead with her throat cut in a stubble-field outside. Blood was everywhere—over the chamber floor, in the hall, dripping from there to the floor below, in a hand print on the panel of one door, in a hand print on the screen of another door, in footprints on stairs and walk, clotted on the barbs of a wire fence. It was a crime so shocking, with victims so defenseless that all the country around sickened with horror. A man's curious walking stick was found. It belonged to a vagabondish fellow named Barnard. A deputy went to arrest him at dusk of the day on which the crime was discovered, and shot him standing in the doorway of his cabin. Everything indicated that two men were concerned in the murders, but search was relaxed and the mystery of the Richardson murders has never been satisfactorily solved.

Yda Addis Storke was one of the first persons on the gruesome scene—and from that moment the obvious purpose of her life has been the unraveling of the mystery. What the effect of that awful sight on the high-strung, imaginative, sensation, mystery and intrigue-loving little woman was cannot be guessed—whether it disturbed the delicate balance of a much-tried mind, whether it abnormally excited her sympathies, whether it suggested a subtle, fearful revenge on her opponent in the hard-fought divorce case, who can tell!

At any rate the Richardson murder mystery has been her hobby since that first morning when she saw the blood still dripping from the victim's wounds. She has woven a theory in which fact and fancy are blended with the most marvelous ingenuity, and which involves some of the best known names in Santa Barbara. In this fantastic theory, which would put Wil-kie Collins and Anna Katherine Green to the blush as mere tyros in the concocting of criminal plots, she stoutly, with wonderful persistence and relentlessness, points the finger of suspicion toward her one-time husband, P. A. Storke, and tries to indicate that his is the master hand that directed the doing of the deed.

Her plot, as she has woven it, is one of many ramifications and much deep-dyed villainy, and Santa Barbara says that whoever any one has offended her or excited her ill-will she has forthwith drawn that one under the cloud of suspicion in the murder mystery.

However absurd and improbable such suspicions are, they are not pleasant, and Santa Barbara has resented them. This tended to strain the relations between Yda Addis Storke and Santa Barbara.

When the episode of the anonymous letters came up, one of which was proved to be written by her, at least to the satisfaction of Santa Barbara—the entire city was glad of a chance to get rid of her.

Her questionable relations with the attorney in her divorce case had been subject for comment, and she announced that she had entered into a marriage contract with him, and that he had collected for her, after entering into this contract, the alimony P. A. Storke had to pay to her.

When excitement ran highest about her connection with the letters that had so upset Santa Barbara, she added to it still further by crawling through a window in Grant Jackson's house, with pistol, poison, chloroform and long strips of bunting. He awoke to find her beside his bed on her knees, holding chloroform to his nose with one hand and a pistol under it with the other, and with the strips of bunting ready to bind him hand and foot as soon as she had chloroformed him. She insisted that she made this curious midnight call merely to talk matters over with him.

After this Santa Barbara was ready to believe her capable of any crime, from robbing a hen-roost to having committed the Richardson murders herself.

It believed she had been the brains and leader of a "gang" of miscreants doing mischief in Santa Barbara and the country around.

It told stories of how she went about disguised as a boy, as a Chinaman, as a Mexican, and what not, spying upon wedded Lotharios, frivolous wives, indiscreet maids, gallant youths and upon perfectly innocent citizens whom she suspected of being any of these things.

Our kindly, timid professor of Spanish declined to go out after dark because he believed he had excited her enmity and that she had instigated some of her "gang" to attack him; and others were not above casting a backward look to see that no one was skulking after with a knife up his sleeve to do her bidding.

And so Santa Barbara heaved a great sigh of relief when she was safely locked in jail, and she—imperious, relentless, scornful, vindictive little woman—sat on her prison cot, in a shabby gray dressing gown, with the gray prison blanket wrapped round her legs, and sneered at all Santa Barbara as a pack of fools and cowards. Even in the old gray dressing gown with the gray prison blanket around her she had the air of a lady—a wicked, malicious little lady perhaps, but still a lady—and the humbler women prisoners locked in with her recognized her as such and were glad to serve her.

Sitting there behind the bars, she was arrogant and defiant and bitterly contemptuous, even in her defeat, and infinitely pathetic, the pitifullest woman figure one could have the pain to see, a wretched little woman who had passionately pulled down the temple of hope around her ears because she had been denied the gifts she craved.

"I have wanted love—genuine love," she said. "That man Storke is incapable of love—I found that out. When a divorce was granted to him I entered into a contract marriage with Grant Jackson because I was sick, lonely, friendless. He was tenderly considerate of me and I craved care. I suggested the contract marriage because I am older than he is, and I thought it might never become public; that later he might care for some younger woman, and I did not wish to bring a shadow on his life. I loved him. I am exacting, jealous. His fidelity was all I ever demanded of him. When I was deprived of that I was hopeless, and being accused of writing the anonymous letters circulated here, I decided to kill myself. I planned to take chloroform and a pistol out on the ocean beach, to go so far away that my body would not be found for several days—so far away that if I did not succeed in killing myself I could not reach help and would die anyhow. But since I have been sent to jail, I will not kill myself. I will live and fight to the end—whatever that end may be."

Remonstrated with for giving rein to her vindictiveness, she said: "If I could eliminate every other characteristic of my nature and cultivate but that vice, I would gladly do it."

And now Yda Addis Storke is out of jail and fighting what she is pleased to call her enemies with all her might—pitting her small woman's hand against the world as fiercely as ever.

Poor little Ishmael in petticoats!

JAMES A. DELAHAY AND HIS CHECKS.

JAMES DELAHAY.

JAMES A. DELAHAY, whose face as a hotel clerk is familiar to the traveling public, is lodged in the City Prison on a charge of forgery, and all because his intended bride accused him of presenting her with checks whose signatures were denied.

Delahay was employed as a clerk at the Hotel Del Monte for a time, and then drifted to this city, where he obtained a similar position at the Occidental. Next he went to the Palace Hotel, where he served for three years as night clerk. For many years he was connected with the Olympic Club and was well known as an amateur boxer. His standing was sunk in professionalism, however, when he toured the East with Pompadour Jim Corbett, and afterward when he acted as a rubber-down for Kid McCoy at Highland Springs.

Recently he secured the consent of Miss Lena Monnelan to join her fortunes with his, and as an engagement present handed her, so she states, two checks—one for $20, purporting to be drawn by Gavin McNab, the other signed by Delahay and bearing the indorsement of Amos, receiving teller of the Hibernia Bank. Miss Monnelan handed both the checks to Mrs. G. W. Schriner, her employer, who conducts a lodging-house on Eddy street.

The one indorsed by the Hibernia teller was cashed at a corner grocery store but McNab's paper was sent to a bank for collection and was returned with the notation, "No funds." A closer examination showed Mrs. Shriner that it was drawn on the Tallant Bank to him as a wedding present, but used the wrong paper by mistake. As they walked down the street together he proposed rectifying McNab's oversight, and stepped into the Occidental, leaving her outside. In a few minutes he returned, saying it was all right, that McNab had destroyed the check, but would send her the money.

When she returned to Mrs. Shriner's word had preceded her that the paper was bogus and the police were put on Delahay's trail. Delahay denies knowledge of any checks and defies the police to prove anything against him. He claims also to be at a loss to explain Miss Monnelan's attitude in the affair.

the Tallant Bank, an institution which consolidated with the Crocker-Woolworth Bank over a year ago, and she called Miss Monnelan's attention to this discrepancy.

The bride-elect says she then asked Delahay for an explanation, and was told that "Gavin" gave it to him as a wedding present, but used the wrong paper by mistake. As they walked down the street together he proposed rectifying McNab's oversight, and stepped into the Occidental, leaving her outside. In a few minutes he returned, saying it was all right, that McNab had destroyed the check, but would send her the money.

PRESIDING JUDGE MAKES A CHANGE

Affects Assignments of Cases of the Public Administrator.

LAWYERS GOSSIP AT THE CITY HALL ABOUT IT.

THE REASON ADVANCED IS THAT THERE HAS BEEN GENERAL DISSATISFACTION.

New Departure Does Not Apply to Other Matters Which Will Go to the Old Probate Departments of the Court.

Much talk was occasioned at the City Hall yesterday by the assignment of probate matters by Presiding Judge Dunne to the departments of Superior Judges Murasky and Sloss. The matters thus assigned were petitions for letters of administration which had been filed by Public Administrator Boland. It was thought that Judge Dunne intended to make a general change in the distribution of the probate court business, but he stated that only the matters in which the Public Administrator was concerned would be sent to Judges Murasky and Sloss, and the other probate matters would be assigned, as usual, to Judges Coffey and Troutt. For many years all the probate business went to Judge Coffey's department. For a long time it has been divided between his department, No. 9, and Judge Troutt's, No. 10. Judge Coffey has frequently made remarks from the bench that indicated that he did not consider the division satisfactory, and that he thought that the Public Administrator preferred to keep cases out of his department when possible.

Judge Dunne said: "There has been so much dissatisfaction over the Public Administrator's cases that I have concluded to lift them wholly out of the two departments in which they have been going, and to give them to two Judges, who will deal with them satisfactorily. I could not make an invidious distinction between Judge Coffey and Judge Troutt, and therefore could not take them from one and continue to assign them to the other. The Public Administrator's business is not like other probate matters, where private individuals have attorneys to watch their interests. In the Administrator's cases the Court must do a good deal of the watching, and must depend on the attorney for absent heirs whom the Judge appoints. Therefore a thoroughly reliable attorney should in every case be appointed. There have been numerous scandals in Public Administrator's cases, and I felt that the easiest remedy was to let new Judges try new methods."

As to the grumbling by Public Administrators and their attorneys, past and present, about their treatment by Judge Coffey, Judge Dunne, when questioned, said: "I understand that Judge Coffey on the bench makes unpleasant remarks which sometimes may not exactly accord with the facts, and this peculiarity of his has been mentioned as one cause for dissatisfaction. I also understand that he cuts down the compensation in Public Administrator's cases, but, while I believe that a laborer is worthy of his hire, and that a lawyer should be properly compensated like any other person, I would not presume to criticise Judge Coffey's allowances, as he exercises discretion in making them. No one particular reason, however, but a general dissatisfaction has prompted me to make the change."

COOPER IS SPEEDING EASTWARD WITH HIS DECEIVED GIRL-WIFE

Ex-Convict and All-Round Crook Plays a Scurvy Trick on an Innocent and Confiding Young Country Woman of the Town of Crockett.

Further Particulars of the Scheming of "Chadwick."

Police Expect to Get Track of the Fugitive Before Many Hours.

Telegraph lines to the east, north and south are carrying the name and a description of "Sir" Harry Westwood Cooper, all-round rogue, beguiler of innocent maidens and ex-convict, with a request that he be apprehended wherever found, and held until he can be brought back here. It is believed that he is somewhere on the other side of the Sierras, as that was the direction he was going when last seen, with his latest victim, pretty eighteen-year-old Norine Schneider of the town of Crockett in Contra Costa county. Besides her parents, nearly a score of citizens of Crockett and Port Costa, whom he swindled, are very anxious to see him again.

Cooper was released from the State's prison at San Quentin on January 15 last upon the completion of a three-years' term for swindling. He came to this city, visited Captain of Detectives Seymour, told him that he intended to reform, and wanted to be given a chance, and after that was heard of no more until today. It appears now that he went to Crockett—Seymour recalls having heard him mention the fact that some religious society had procured a position for him there—and assumed the aristocratic name of Ernest Moore Chadwick. "Sir" Harry had his plans all laid, and went to work as a waiter in the Star Hotel, then he blossomed out as a physician on the strength of a New Zealand diploma that set forth that one Ernest M. Chadwick was entitled to practice the profession of medicine; next he was heir to an immense estate in England—the same old story—and now he is a fugitive from justice, with an unfortunate girl for a companion, whom he will turn on the world, according to his past, at the very first opportunity.

All the time that he was telling his fairy stories of the wealth that awaited him in the old country he was pouring his old tale of love into Norine Schneider's ear—that same tale that, so far as the authorities have record of, has made three unfortunate young women as mis-

(Continued on Page Seven.)

Ernest Moore Chadwick.

Nora Schneider.

COOPER IS SPEEDING EASTWARD

(Continued from First Page.)

erable in life as it will make her. Incidently, Cooper looked after the financial part of things in his neighborhood, and how much he got out of those into whose confidence he wormed himself is not yet known. Bogus checks were the means he used.

Mrs. Schneider says she mistrusted Cooper, or Chadwick, as she calls him, from the start. She did not like his looks, and that was all there was to it. But "Sir" Harry has talked much sharper people than this mother will ever be into believing his way, and gradually she grew to think that possibly she might be wronging him. When Cooper sprung the story of the estate in England and asked Norine's hand in marriage the mother's suspicions were again aroused. He wanted to settle $20,000 on his fiancee, and talked of it as if it were to him nothing more than a bagatelle. Mrs. Schneider considered the transfer of such a lot of money a very important matter, and she straightway came to San Francisco and consulted her attorney, C. F. Humphrey, in the Call building. She incidentally mentioned her distrust of Cooper, and it was decided to cable London and find out if his claim to an estate was true. This was on Thursday last. On Friday an answer came back that there was no record there such as Cooper offered, and then he was called upon to visit Humphrey. He ran a monumental bluff, got Mr. and Mrs. Schneider to come here with him, under a pretext separated himself from their company, returned to Vallejo Junction, where their home is, and eloped with Norine. That was on Saturday evening. They went to Benicia and on the following day to Sacramento. There they took an Eastern train and no trace of them has been obtained since. On the train between Benicia and the Capital City Cooper talked about going to Salt Lake.

Theodore Kytka, the well-known handwriting expert, happened to be going to [illegible] day and sat behind Cooper [illegible] n interested with the po- lice [illegible] of Cooper's prosecution he knew the fellow at a glance, and knowing "Sir" Harry's predilection for pretty girls, the appearance of his companion at once suggested to him that it was another victim. However, Kytka was helpless to act.

Cooper had served as a waiter but a few days in the Star Hotel when he sprung his medical diploma. He apologized for accepting such a position, but gave as a reason that shortly after landing from New Zealand he had been stricken with typhoid fever and all his money was exhausted while in hospital. He was strapped when he started out to face the world again, and, having no friends to whom he could apply for aid, he took the first thing that offered in the way of employment. This romantic tale did not take long to get over Crockett, and finally it reached the ears of Dr. J. S. Riley, a pioneer practitioner of Contra Costa county, who has offices in both Crockett and Port Costa. He was in need of an assistant, and a few days later "Sir" Harry was installed in the position. The latter, before his arrest here in 1897, studied medicine for a short time, and the smattering of knowledge that he got then, together with his wonderful nerve, helped him sustain his bluff as to his professional standing. The extent of his nerve may be imagined from the fact that during the time he was Riley's assistant he performed three operations for appendicitis most successfully and did various other critical surgical work.

One afternoon about three weeks ago Cooper came here and that evening there was received at the Crockett telegraph station a cablegram directed to "Dr. Chadwick," purporting to come from a firm of London solicitors. It conveyed the information that an aunt of the young surgeon living in London, by name Mrs. Eliza Adelaide Chadwick, had died, leaving him an estate worth £31,000.

The whole town knew of this by the next morning when Cooper returned, and half of its inhabitants were at the railroad depot to congratulate the doctor on his good fortune. After that it was all easy sailing for the rascal. A Captain Colville, who had been a guest at the Star Hotel when Cooper worked there as a waiter, came forward and stood sponsor for him with Donohoe-Kelly Banking Company of this city. On his indorsement the bank accepted a draft on a London bank drawn by Cooper for £150 and put to his credit $750. A few days after this Cooper introduced C. B. Ashford, former Attorney General of Hawaii, to the people of Crockett and gave out the impression that he was acting for him in connection with the estate left by the London aunt. This increased his standing in the community, but it now develops that Ashford went there simply to attend to the legal part of the purchase of the practice of a Dr. W. C. Yates which Cooper contemplated making.

One day last week he accompanied Mrs. Schneider and her two daughters to this city and purchased for Norine a diamond ring at Colonel Andrews' for which he paid $250 by check drawn against his account in the Donohoe-Kelly Bank. Captain Colville will have to make this good.

Mrs. Schneider was in the city to-day and said that she had found out that before leaving Crockett her daughter and Cooper were married by the Rev. D. Q. Travis. This ceremony amounted to nothing, for in the eyes of the English law he is still the husband of the woman whom he deserted in Australia before coming here. The legal papers purporting to have come from the courts of England were such clever forgeries that the British Consul and two English attorneys who examined their seals and other appurtenances pronounced them genuine. It is understood by the police that the seals were made in a place on Montgomery street.

Cooper is about 33 years of age, and one of the worst rogues that has ever been in the West. He is as slippery as a wet parchment under a new pair of shoes. The fellow had been here but a short time when on August 30, 1895, he was arrested by Captain of Detectives Seymour for swindling the proprietor of the Langham Hotel. He was a guest at the hostelry and posed as a wealthy English baronet. He gave the management a draft for $5,000 as security for his account and a loan of $50. The draft was discovered to be spurious and then came Cooper's record from all over the world. He came here from Australia, where he served eighteen months for obtaining money under false pretenses. He deserted a wife there after robbing her, and upon his release from prison made his way to Canada, where he induced an innocent young girl named Maud Campaign to elope with him from her home near Ontario. She accompanied him to this city and after her husband's conviction was in such straitened circumstances that the police subscribed enough to send her back to her home.

POLICE TRYING TO CATCH COOPER

Swindler Seen on an Eastbound Train With His Latest Dupe.

Nora Schneider's Mother Learns for the First Time That Her "Son-in-Law" Is an ex-Convict.

Nora Schneider of Crockett was seen Sunday afternoon by Theodore Kytka, the handwriting expert, on a train going to Sacramento. She was accompanied by Harry Westwood Cooper, alias Ernest Moore Chadwick. Kytka knew Cooper very well by sight. Yesterday he notified the police of this city and a request was immediately sent out by Captain Seymour to all the police at all Eastern points to arrest Cooper on sight. A warrant for Cooper's arrest on a charge of obtaining money by false pretenses had been sworn out at Port Costa. Kytka did not know that there was any reason for saying anything about Cooper until the exploits at Crockett of Cooper, alias Chadwick, were published in this paper yesterday.

Mrs. Schneider, mother of Nora, visited police headquarters yesterday and added some statements to those she had previously made concerning the actions of Cooper, alias Chadwick. She said that Cooper, after he presented the evidence, manufactured for the occasion, of the large inheritance he was to receive from the estate of an alleged aunt in England, actually went through the motions of having a corporation formed in this city for the purpose of managing the estate. She was much surprised when Captain Seymour told her that Cooper had previously married four girls as he had her daughter—one in England, two in Australia and one in Canada. He was also on the point of eloping with another from the Hotel Langham in this city the night Seymour arrested him on the charge that resulted in sending him to San Quentin, from which he emerged only about a month ago.

The seal on the bogus notification of the English estate of Eliza Adelaide Chadwick was exactly like one that Cooper used in a similar exploit several years ago, which is in Captain Seymour's possession. On the former occasion Cooper claimed to be heir to the estate of Sir Harry W. Cooper and he borrowed $300 at that time from Mrs. McDonald, his wife's mother, to go to England to receive that estate.

Mrs. Schneider claimed to have discovered that the seal on the document used to deceive her daughter into dreams of wealth and luxury was manufactured on Montgomery street in this city.

Everything that Cooper exhibited in Crockett as evidence of his standing was fraudulent, including his diploma as a physician. The name of Chadwick was not new to him. In 1893, in Sydney, N. S. W., he was held on two charges of procuring money by false pretenses under the name of Charles Ernest Chadwick. He has merely readopted an old name.

"When he came out of San Quentin," said Captain Seymour, yesterday, "he told me that he was going to Crockett to do something. I told him then that he would do somebody. He called on me first on the day he left San Quentin. Later on he called on me twice. He said that he had a job at Crockett and was connected with Dr. Riley. There is no doubt that Cooper and Chadwick are one and the same man."

Mrs. Schneider, on learning that Cooper has a wife living, was somewhat comforted, for that would render the ceremony that hurriedly took place at Crockett last Saturday night null and void. At the same time it furnishes ground for a bigamy charge upon which Cooper can be prosecuted.

Every Police Department east of this city has been supplied by Captain Seymour with descriptions of Cooper and Nora Schneider. Mrs. Schneider is certain that Cooper had little money, the total not to exceed $35, last Saturday, but he may have raised money on the $250 diamond engagement ring that was bought with a check in this city. As Captain E. M. Colville of Crockett indorsed that check he is a loser to that amount. As late as yesterday a check of the same size, drawn by Cooper, was presented at the Donohoe-Kelly Bank for payment. Previously the checks presented amounted to $500. Dr. Riley of Port Costa is reported to have accepted a check for $300.

A singular feature of the transaction connected with and leading up to the Crockett wedding is that Cooper did not receive any of the goods for which he passed out checks, with the exception of the diamond ring procured from A. Andrews, and the diamond dealer took pains to delay the delivery of the ring until he found out that the check was good. It is reported that one Crockett man took Cooper's note for $400 in money. All of this goes to show that Cooper may have the means to get some distance away.

Cooper's record is long, although he is still young. Young women who fell victims to him were Bertha E. Young of Brisbane, Helen Scott of Sydney, N. S. W., and Ida M. Campaigne of Shirbourne, Ontario. He has done time at hard labor in the Antipodes, and has been before courts in various places repeatedly on criminal charges.

Constable Theodore Molles of Crockett was in the city yesterday. He says that Cooper got two diamond rings from Joseph Broder of Crockett. It is on Broder's complaint that the warrant has been issued for Cooper's arrest for procuring money by false pretenses. Mrs. Groom of the Star Hotel at Crockett was directed by Cooper to prepare a wedding supper for twenty guests at $5 per plate for last Monday night. She ordered champagne to the amount of $150. Constable Molles warned her not to get the dinner until she saw the money for it and she was wise enough to take his advice. Molles says that Cooper and Nora Schneider left Port Costa at 3:15 Sunday morning on the train for Sacramento. The seal on Cooper's bogus papers was made at 28 Montgomery street.

SAN RAFAEL, Feb. 27.—While at San Quentin Cooper was regarded as one of the most dangerous men in the institution. The latter portion of his imprisonment was spent in an incorrigible cell. In the spring of 1898 Cooper, together with eight or nine other prisoners, concocted a scheme to escape. Cooper at that time was employed in the kitchen of the night guard. According to the plans of the schemers, Cooper was to poison the coffee of the guards, and then he and his associates were to effect their escape. Captain Edgar discovered the plot in time, and the men were placed in the dungeon. Cooper was the first one to break down. He told the whole story, throwing the blame on the others. It afterward developed that he was the ringleader. From that time on he occupied an incorrigible cell.

CLEVER ROGUE FROM PRISON ON BRIDAL TOUR

Raises Money on Fraudulent Documents Saying He Was Heir to Vast Estates in England.

WESTWOOD COOPER

Works off Worthless Checks and Displays Doctored Bank Book to His Financial Advantage.

Harry Westwood Cooper, Just From San Quentin, Runs Away With a Crockett Girl.

ONCE more Harry Westwood Cooper, personator of baronets and doctors, and beguiler of trusting maidens, has emerged into the lime light after three years of prison obscurity. While at present he is on his third honeymoon trip a score of citizens of Port Costa and Crockett whom he had swindled are hoping they will see him soon.

Cooper, the polite and aristocratically inclined rogue, whose smooth work in this city sent him to San Quentin for three years, was only released from San Quentin about six weeks ago. For a few days he remained around San Francisco, and then disappeared. He was next heard of in Crockett, Contra Costa county—town of lumber and fish—and his career there, though short, was fully up to his standard performance. He was a waiter at the Star Hotel for about a week, then he became a physician, then heir to a large estate in England. As such heir and with splendid prospects he made impetuous love to an innocent young girl. He told her wonderful fairy tales and she believed them. Though ... tired of ... the impostor he succeeded in running away with the maid while her parents were investigating the stories that came from his gifted imagination.

Starts With a Brand New Name.

Ernest Moore Chadwick was the name Cooper bore when he reached Crockett. He went there in answer to an advertisement for a waiter at the Star Hotel. He had not been employed long when he became on speaking terms with a number of the boarders. Among those at the hotel was Captain Colville. He is a prominent business man of the town and a high-degree Mason. Cooper had been a Mason—the rest came easy.

After a few days' service in the dining-room Cooper produced a diploma purporting to have been conferred by a medical college of New Zealand, authorizing one Ernest M. Chadwick to practice medicine. Before Cooper was arrested three years ago he had studied some medicine here, and the bluff he next made was one that he had the evident ability to sustain.

He apologized for accepting the position of waiter, saying he was a stranger, having recently arrived from New Zealand, and being without friends or money he was unable to build up a practice as a physician.

News of this diploma-waiter soon reached the ears of Dr. J. S. Riley, the pioneer practitioner of Contra Costa county, who has offices at Port Costa and Crockett. Mr. Cooper, under the name of Dr. Chadwick, was installed a few days later as an assistant to the veteran physician and hardly a week passed after the transition from waiter to doctor when he was in a fair way to build up a good paying practice.

A Full-grown Fortune.

About three weeks ago Dr. Chadwick left his office in Crockett and went to San Francisco. He took an afternoon train, carrying a surgeon's valise and wearing the best of clothes. That evening, just before the telegraph office closed, a cable was received by the operator at Crockett, directed to Dr. Chadwick, and purporting to come from a firm of barristers in London. It informed the retired waiter and natty young surgeon that an aunt in London, Mrs. Eliza Adelaide Chadwick, had died, leaving to him a fortune of £31,000.

Chadwick-Cooper returned to Crockett the next morning, but during the night the contents of that telegram had spread through the little town, and when the dispatch was handed him there were a score of the men of the place standing around waiting to congratulate him on his good fortune.

After that things came his way. For three weeks Dr. Chadwick went along on a great wave of prosperity. Captain Colville proved his friend and sponsor. He introduced him at the Donohoe-Kelly Bank in this city and the young doctor wrote out a sight draft on a London bank for £200. It was endorsed by Colville and the bank opened an account with the physician ... that his services were sought in preparing the transfer of the practice of Dr. W. C. Yates that Chadwick-Cooper was arranging to purchase.

During this time Chadwick, whose social and professional standing had been heralded over the country side by the supposed legacy left him, was called to the bedside of a patient who was a boarder in Daniel Schneider's hotel at Vallejo Junction. Now Schneider is the father of two pretty and charming daughters. The eldest, Nora, who is about twenty years of age, became particularly attractive to the young doctor, and after he had made a few calls on the sick man, he asked Mrs. Schneider if there were any objections to his calling at the house to spend an occasional evening. There was none and it was not long before the patient was of secondary importance.

The Mother's Suspicions.

"I was suspicious of the man from the first," said Mrs. Schneider yesterday. "He told wonderful tales of himself and of his wealth and it he said did not agree with his being obliged to work in a hotel as a waiter to make a living.

"I called his attention to a few discrepancies in his stories, and as a proof of his financial standing he showed me a bankbook, where was figured a deposit in the Donohoe-Kelly Bank of $27,970. I examined the figures closely, and noticed that two different hands had written the amount of the entry. The '27' was written by some person who had not made the figures 970. I spoke of it at the time to him. He did not give me any answer that suited me, and my suspicions became stronger. I cautioned my daughter to beware of him, and she, too, was much afraid of him, but being young, she was to some extent infatuated with him and his romantic yarns.

"A few days after that he showed me a paper that had seals and signatures on it, giving it a very legal look, stating that he was an heir to an estate in England. It all looked very fine, but I was not satisfied and told him so. He was agreeable to a plan that it be investigated, and last Thursday he and my daughter and I went to San Francisco and the document was given to my attorney, Charles Humphrey, with instructions that he ascertain as to its genuineness.

Buying His Sweetheart Diamonds.

"On that day we went to Colonel Andrews' Diamond Palace, and Dr. Chadwick bought a diamond ring, for which he gave a check for $250 in payment, and agreed to buy $2,000 worth more of diamonds.

"On Friday I heard from Mr. Humphrey. He had cabled to London and had received a reply that no estate to which Chadwick was heir was known in the courts there. On learning that all Chadwick's presents were returned that day and he was sent about his business.

"On Saturday I went to San Francisco, leaving my daughter at home alone. Early in the afternoon I called at Mr. Humphrey's office and was surprised to see Chadwick there. Mr. Humphrey told him his papers did not appear to be correct, but he did not seem the least worried. He replied he had other documents in his office in Crockett which would be convincing. He tried to telephone to friends to bring them, but he could not reach those he desired and he decided to go himself. He said he would take a train that left the city at 4 o'clock, and be back early in the evening with the papers. He asked Mr. Humphrey and myself to meet him on his return.

"He did not come back. I waited until the last train arrived from Crockett for him, then there were no trains for me to go home by, and I remained in the city overnight. The next morning I was in Crockett, but my daughter Nora was gone. She had been married the night before to Chadwick by the Rev. D. Q. Travis of Crockett.

"Before he left the city he had sent a went to Benicia, and there all trace of them is lost.

"I am afraid now that he will take the life of my daughter. He threatened once that unless she would marry him he would kill her."

Fixed up Gold Lace Documents.

Great care had been taken by Chadwick-Cooper in preparing the documents which purported to establish his identity as the heir to a large estate. The one on which he relied was supposed to be a citation issued by the High Court of Chancery, summoning him to appear before it on March 1st and receive the sum of £31,000 in good and lawful coin of Great Britain. The document bore a great gilt seal and it was an exact reproduction of the seal of the English Chancery Court. So carefully had the document been prepared that the British Consul and several attorneys who had practiced law in England pronounced it genuine.

Before Cooper disappeared from Crockett with the trusting girl who still believes she is lawfully married, he swindled many of the merchants of the town. He gave an order for about $1,000 worth of furniture to fit up an office and received change on a fraudulent check he gave in payment. On several such deals he cleaned up considerable money, but it was not thought he had over $100 in his pockets when he left, though he still had the bank book which represented to the unsuspecting that he has $27,970 on deposit, and it might be used to help him should he become stranded before the police catch him.

The cashier of the Donohoe-Kelly Bank said Chadwick was not trusted from the first, but the money that was advanced to him was well secured. He was not allowed to reach the end of his account before a stop was put to it.

The Colonel and the Ring.

Colonel Andrews remembers selling the ring. "When a check was given in payment," said he, "I sent to the bank and had the account of the man verified before the purchase was delivered to him."

Cooper's Bad Record.

Cooper had been but a short time in this city when on August 30, 1897, he was arrested for swindling J. P. Gallagher, the proprietor of the Langham Hotel. Cooper had posed as a wealthy English baronet and gave Gallagher a draft for $55,000 as security for his hotel bill and a loan of $30.

Investigation showed that the draft was spurious and Cooper was taken into custody. Soon after this the police received information from various parts of the world, telling his history.

He was charged with having swindled Mary Murphy in Chicago to the extent of $900. Before coming to this city he had eloped with Miss Campaign of Stanton near Toronto, but police reports stated that Cooper was a bigamist and had another wife in Australia, whose maiden name was Bertha Young.

After he was arrested, Cooper's effects were searched and a quantity of blanks, seals, stamps and bogus documents were found.

Records of Cooper's extensive operations were received from several Eastern police offices, which said bank swindling was his specialty.

In January, 1898, he was convicted and sent to San Quentin for three years.

A Troublesome Prisoner.

Cooper as a convict was a troublesome prisoner. He was continually conniving and required the constant attention of the prison officials. In March, 1899, he and four other planned an escape. Cooper worked in the outside dining-room and it was arranged for him to drug the guards' coffee and render them helpless. Then with some skeleton keys Cooper proposed to liberate his pals and escape.

But the prison officials chanced to find several hatchets and other weapons secreted in the plotter's cells and when he was questioned, Cooper "peached" the whole plot, although he carefully refrained from implicating himself.

His associates were made "red shirt" men and when his connection with the affair became known he was put in the dungeon.

Captain of Detectives Seymour has seen Cooper several times since his liberation. About two weeks ago one of the detectives rounded him up on the street and took him to police headquarters. Cooper then said he was living in Crockett and was engaged as an assistant to Dr. Riley.

CONVICT COOPER CAUGHT IN OGDEN.

Kept His Bride in Complete Ignorance of His True Character.

OGDEN (Utah), February 23.—Harry Westwood Cooper, alias Ernest Moore Chadwick, alias MacDonald, alias Humphries, was arrested here just after midnight by the police on a telegraphic request from Captain Seymour of the San Francisco police. When arrested the ex-convict said his name was Chadwick, but admitted traveling as Humphries, and denied the charges of bigamy and forgery. He further said that he was never in a California prison. His bride, Norine Schneider, is anxious to return home to Crockett, California. She refused to kiss him good-by when he was locked up, which much affected him.

The couple arrived here Wednesday and registered at the leading hotel, but changed to a lodging-house, until were hard to locate. The arrest was made by Chief of Police Conlisk and Detective Quinlon.

The girl says she and Cooper were regularly married by a Congregational minister. She believed in him at first. After leaving Crockett they went to San Francisco. Coming East he insisted on using assumed names, but would give no explanation. She was becoming desperate and suspicious and was glad when the officers arrived.

When the officers came to the door he tried to make her keep quiet, but she insisted on letting them in. She was quite devoted to him till the officers told of his duplicity. He had treated her quite well and told her that the San Francisco attorney, Humphries, advised the use of his name as an alias.

The couple stopped over night at Elko, Nev., and as they were running short of money Cooper got back the diamond ring which he said he pawned for $10. When they reported at the police station the man gave her all the money left, $14 35. She did not know his real character before the arrest and does not even now realize her position.

Cooper has been taken to a hotel by the officers. He says he will resist extradition to the end and says he cannot be taken back.

Documents Saying He Was Heir to Vast Estates in England.

WESTWOOD COOPER

Check; and Displays Doctored Bank Book to His Financial Advantage.

Harry Westwood Cooper, Just From San Quentin, Runs Away With a Crockett Girl.

ONCE more Harry Westwood Cooper, personator of baronets and doctors, and beguiler of trusting maidens, has emerged into the limelight after three years of prison obscurity. While at present he is on his third honeymoon trip a score of citizens of Port Costa and Crockett whom he had swindled are hoping they will see him soon.

Cooper, the polite and aristocratically inclined rogue, whose smooth work in this city sent him to San Quentin for three years, was only released from San Quentin about six weeks ago. For a few days he remained around San Francisco, and then disappeared. He was next heard of in Crockett, Contra Costa county—town of lumber and fish—and his career there, though short, was fully up to his standard performance. He was a waiter at the Star Hotel for about a week, then he became a physician, then heir to a large estate in England. As such heir and with spectroscopic prospects he made impetuous love to an innocent young girl. He told her wonderful fairy tales and she believed them. Though [illegible] of being an impostor he succeeded in running away with the maid while her parents were investigating the stories that came from his gifted imagination.

Starts With a Brand New Name.

Ernest Moore Chadwick was the name Cooper bore when he reached Crockett. He went there in answer to an advertisement for a waiter at the Star Hotel. He had not been employed long when he became on speaking terms with a number of the boarders. Among these at the hotel was Captain Colville. He is a prominent business man of the town and a high-degree Mason. Cooper had been a Mason—the rest came easy.

After a few days' service in the dining-room Cooper produced a diploma purporting to have been conferred by a medical college of New Zealand, authorizing one Ernest M. Chadwick to practice medicine. Before Cooper was arrested three years ago he had studied some medicine here, and the bluff he next made was one that he had the evident ability to sustain.

He apologized for accepting the position of waiter, saying he was a stranger, having recently arrived from New Zealand, and being without friends or money he was unable to build up a practice as a physician.

News of this diploma matter soon reached the ears of Dr. J. S. Riley, the pioneer practitioner of Contra Costa county, who has offices at Port Costa and Crockett. Mr. Cooper, under the name of Dr. Chadwick, was installed a few days later as an assistant to the veteran physician and hardly a week passed after the transition from waiter to doctor when he was in a fair way to build up a good paying practice.

A Cablegram of Fortune.

About three weeks ago Dr. Chadwick left his office in Crockett and went to San Francisco. He took an afternoon train, carrying a surgeon's valise and wearing the best of clothes. That evening, just before the telegraph office closed, a cable was received by the operator at Crockett, directed to Dr. Chadwick, and purporting to come from a firm of barristers in London. It informed the retired waiter and natty young surgeon that an aunt in London, Mrs. Eliza Adelaide Chadwick, had died, leaving to him a fortune of £31,000.

Chadwick-Cooper returned to Crockett the next morning, but during the night the contents of that telegram had spread through the little town, and when the dispatch was handed him there were a score of the men of the place standing around waiting to congratulate him on his good fortune.

After that things came his way. For three weeks Dr. Chadwick went along on a great wave of prosperity. Captain Colville stood his friend and sponsor. He introduced him at the Donohoe-Kelly Bank in this city and the young doctor wrote out a sight draft on a London bank for £200. It was endorsed by Colville and the bank opened an account with the physician, placing $970 to his credit.

A few days later C. B. Ashford, former Attorney-General of Hawaii, who has offices in the [illegible] building, appeared in Crockett as the [illegible] of the doctor. Ashford was [illegible] around the town with a great [illegible] by the [illegible] and Chadwick's standing was greatly increased.

The residents of the little town were given the impression that the attorney was engaged to represent the young doctor in the legal proceedings necessary to secure the English fortune.

Attorney Ashford explained yesterday that his services were sought in preparing the transfer of the practice of Dr. W. C. Yates that Chadwick-Cooper was arranging to purchase.

During this time Chadwick, whose social and professional standing had been heralded over the country side by the supposed legacy left him, was called to the bedside of a patient who was a boarder in Daniel Schneider's hotel at Vallejo Junction. Now Schneider is the father of two pretty and charming daughters. The eldest, Nora, who is about twenty years of age, became particularly attractive to the young doctor, and after he had made a few calls on the sick man, he asked Mrs. Schneider if there were any objections to his calling at the house to spend an occasional evening. There was none and it was not long before the patient was of secondary importance.

The Mother's Suspicions.

"I was suspicious of the man from the first," said Mrs. Schneider yesterday. "He told wonderful tales of himself and of his wealth, and it [illegible] did not agree with his being obliged to work in a hotel as a waiter to make a living.

"I called his attention to a few discrepancies in his stories, and as a proof of his financial standing he showed me a bank-book, where was figured a deposit in the Donahue-Kelly Bank of $27,970. I examined the figures closely, and noticed that two different hands had written the amount of the entry. The '27' was written by some person who had not made the figures 970. I spoke of it at the time to him. He did not give me any answer that suited me, and my suspicions became stronger. I cautioned my daughter to beware of him, and she, too, was much afraid of him, but being young, she was to some extent infatuated with him and his romantic yarns.

"A few days after that he showed me a paper that had seals and signatures on it, giving it a very legal look, stating that he was an heir to an estate in England. It all looked very fine, but I was not satisfied and told him so. He was agreeable to a plan that it be investigated, and last Thursday he and my daughter and I went to San Francisco and the document was given to my attorney, Charles Humphrey, with instructions that he ascertain as to its genuineness.

Buying His Sweetheart Diamonds.

"On that day we went to Colonel Andrews' Diamond Palace, and Dr. Chadwick bought a diamond ring, for which he gave a check for $260 in payment, and agreed to buy $2,000 worth more of diamonds.

"On Friday I heard from Mr. Humphrey. He had cabled to London and had received a reply that no estate to which Chadwick was heir was known in the courts there. On learning that all Chadwick's presents were returned that day and he was sent about his business.

"On Saturday I went to San Francisco, leaving my daughter at home alone. Early in the afternoon I called at Mr. Humphrey's office and was surprised to see Chadwick there. Mr. Humphrey told him his papers did not appear to be correct, but he did not seem the least worried. He replied he had other documents in his office in Crockett which would be convincing. He tried to telephone to friends to bring them, but he could not reach those he desired and he decided to go himself. He said he would take a train that left the city at 4 o'clock, and be back early in the evening with the papers. He asked Mr. Humphrey and myself to meet him on his return.

"He did not come back. I waited until the last train arrived from Crockett for him, then there were no trains for me to go home by and I remained in the city over night. The next morning I was in Crockett, but my daughter Nora was gone. She had been married the night before to Chadwick by the Rev. D. Q. Travis of Crockett.

"Before he left the city he had sent a telegram to my daughter, telling her that 'Chadwick' was as he represented and that she could marry him. That telegram was signed with my name.

"Some friends at the house told me that he jumped from the train at Vallejo Junction and rushing into the house, called her and told her to hurry. The girl was out of the house within twenty minutes with a small valise filled with clothing, and away they went. They walked to Crockett, where they were married. On Sunday morning they were at Port Costa. From there they

(Continued on Page Two.)

Consul and several attorneys who had practiced law in England pronounced it genuine.

Before Cooper disappeared from Crockett with the trusting girl who still believes she is lawfully married, he swindled many of the merchants of the town. He gave an order for about $1,000 worth of furniture to fit up an office and received change on a fraudulent check he gave in payment. On several such deals he cleaned up considerable money, but it was not thought he had over $100 in his pockets when he left, though he still had the bank book which represented to the unsuspecting that he has $27,970 on deposit, and it might be used to help him should he become stranded before the police catch him.

The cashier of the Donohoe-Kelly Bank said Chadwick was not trusted from the first, but the money that was advanced to him was well secured. He was not allowed to reach the end of his account before a stop was put to it.

The Colonel and the Ring.

Colonel Andrews remembers selling the ring. "When a check was given in payment," said he, "I sent to the bank and had the account of the man verified before the purchase was delivered to him."

Cooper's Bad Record.

Cooper had been but a short time in this city when on August 30, 1897, he was arrested for swindling J. P. Gallagher, the proprietor of the Langham Hotel. Cooper had posed as a wealthy English baronet and gave Gallagher a draft for $55,000 as security for his hotel bill and a loan of $30.

Investigation showed that the draft was spurious and Cooper was taken into custody. Soon after this the police received information from various parts of the world, telling his history.

He was charged with having swindled Mary Murphy in Chicago to the extent of $400. Before coming to this city he had eloped with Miss Campaign of Stanton near Toronto, but police reports stated that Cooper was a bigamist and had another wife in Australia, whose maiden name was Bertha Young.

After he was arrested, Cooper's effects were searched and a quantity of blanks, seals, stamps and bogus documents were found.

Records of Cooper's extensive operations were received from several Eastern police offices, which said bank swindling was his specialty.

In January, 1898, he was convicted and sent to San Quentin for three years.

A Troublesome Prisoner.

Cooper as a convict was a troublesome prisoner. He was continually conniving and required the constant attention of the prison officials. In March, 1899, he and four other planned an escape. Cooper worked in the outside dining-room and it was arranged for him to drug the guards' coffee and render them helpless. Then with some skeleton keys Cooper proposed to liberate his pals and escape.

But the prison officials chanced to find several knives and other weapons secreted in the plotter's cells and when he was questioned, Cooper "peached" the whole plot, although he carefully refrained from implicating himself.

His associates were made "red shirt" men and when his connection with the affair became known he was put in the dungeon.

Captain of Detectives Seymour has seen Cooper several times since his liberation. About two weeks ago one of the detectives rounded him up on the street and took him to police headquarters. Cooper then said he was living in Crockett and was engaged as an assistant to Dr. Riley.

[illegible] (Utah), February 23.—Harry Westwood Cooper, alias Ernest Moore Chadwick, alias MacDonald, alias Humphries, was arrested here just after midnight by the police on a telegraphic request from Captain Seymour of the San Francisco police. When arrested the ex-convict said his name was Chadwick, but admitted traveling as Humphries, and denied the charges of bigamy and forgery. He further said that he was never in a California prison. His bride, Norine Schneider, is anxious to return home to Crockett, California. She refused to kiss him good-by when he was locked up, which much affected him.

The couple arrived here Wednesday and registered at the leading hotel, but changed to a lodging-house, and were hard to locate. The arrest was made by Chief of Police Conlick and Detective Quinlan.

The girl says she and Cooper were regularly married by a Congregational minister. She believed in him at first. After leaving Crockett they went to San Francisco. Coming East he insisted on using assumed names, but would give no explanation. She was becoming desperate and suspicious and was glad when the officers arrived.

When the officers came to the door he tried to make her keep quiet, but she insisted on letting them in. She was quite devoted to him till the officers told of his duplicity. He had treated her quite well and told her that the San Francisco attorney, Humphries, advised the use of his name as an alias.

The couple stopped over night at Elko, Nev., and as they were running short of money Cooper got back the diamond ring which he said he pawned for $40. When they reported at the police station the man gave her all the money left, $14 35. She did not know his real character before the arrest and does not even now realize her position.

Cooper has been taken to a hotel by the officers. He says he will resist extradition to the end and says he cannot be taken back.

EX-CONVICT COOPER'S LATEST TELLS OF HIS WICKED WAYS.

Deceived Girl Returns From Bridal Tour.

NORINE SCHNEIDER, the latest victim of the ex-convict, "Sir" Harry Westwood Cooper, alias Dr. Ernest M. Chadwick and so on, arrived yesterday from Ogden, where her criminal husband was arrested. She reported immediately to Captain of Detectives Seymour and gave him all the particulars of the cyclonic matrimonial experience which whirled her over the mountains and back again to the paternal roof, all in nine days. Unlike the wife of 1897, who remained for days after Cooper's first arrest in this city proclaiming her belief in his innocence, the little belle of Crockett, while nervous to the point of hysteria, interpolates in what she has to say of her experiences exclamations of how glad she is to get home again. She has not a thought or a word for the "doctor" but condemnation. All sentiment has gone, but the wife of five days adds that her husband was exceedingly kind and attentive.

When the cruelly deceived girl came to the Hall of Justice she was accompanied by her mother and handsome sister of "sweet sixteen," two years her junior. Together they looked like three sisters, and well favored ones at that. "Mrs. Cooper" is a well developed and somewhat mature young person. Her distinguishing features are a clear, creamy skin, frank, brown eyes, and a wealth of brown hair of the kind that is wavy enough to stay where it is put. She chooses to arrange it low and in long, becoming lines. She is just old and unsophisticated enough to be pliable material in this scheming criminal's hands.

But for all her love and the alluring pictures of the future, Mrs. Cooper was not far from home when she [illegible] herself back again. At Elko, Nev., they stopped off, Cooper saying [illegible] he was short of money and would have to go to the bank and get some. [illegible] after they registered at the Reed [illegible] Mr. and Mrs. Humphrey the [illegible] of a series of remarkable messages was delivered. It read:

[illegible] Mountain Bell Telephone Company [illegible] Reed Hotel. Call at telephone office [illegible] important message from [illegible] DAVIS
Marie Schneider. Santa Fe Flyer.
[illegible] Conductor, Santa Fe Flyer.

As a result of this he brought the [illegible] bewildered girl, dictating to the [illegible]

[illegible] Mountain Bell Telephone Company [illegible] Humphreys [illegible] I have gone East [illegible] Ask Ernest and [illegible] children with me. I will go right [illegible] Humphreys for [illegible] Make [illegible]

Ernest happy, he is your best friend; be true to him always. Will write you in a day or two. We will all meet soon.
MARIE SCHNEIDER

Confusion was becoming confounded, but telephone and telegraph messages could not be gainsaid. At this point "Dr. Chadwick," with a view to providing a cooling station when Chicago should be reached, sent the following to a relative of Mr. Schneider in that city:

John Brinkhorst: I was married to Norine Schneider on Saturday last. Her mother and family have gone East and have taken a considerable amount of my money, some valuable papers and diamonds and all my wife's clothing without our authority. If they come to you please detain them and telegraph me at once of their arrival. I will pay for message. Please give me the fullest particulars.
ERNEST CHADWICK.

The "Doctor" sent the next message to himself. It came "rush" and read:

To Dr. Chadwick, on Train: Dan has gone to Reno and taken your money and papers with him. For God's sake, follow him. Take Nora, she can influence him to do right. I will follow next train. Am heartbroken. MARIE SCHNEIDER

Filed with these forged and false documents is the following effusion sent by the "Doctor" to his bride at Winnemucca, Nev., just because he was absent from her a few hours:

My Own Darling Wife: I pen you these few lines to reiterate what I have declared a thousand times. I love you, yes, dearest, I adore you. My queen, I bow down to you. You are my sleeping and my waking thought. You are my very existence. Without you my life would be a blank. Oh, my priceless pearl, may God grant that we may be long spared to enjoy our connubial felicity. I always will try to anticipate your every want. I live but with one object in life, namely, to make you perfectly happy, and all I ask in return is your full and undivided love. Please darling give me this, and our happiness will be sublime. Please, love, answer this. Tell me your every thought of me, and in conclusion, accept the assurance of my sincere and faithful love and adoration and believe me always your fond and loving husband. ERNEST

"When I first expressed the fear that something was wrong," said Mrs. Cooper, "Ernest took the pistol he had and made an attempt to kill himself. I pleaded with him and he gave me the weapon, which I returned when we got to Ogden. It was on the bureau when the officers knocked at the door of the Ogden hotel. He was terribly frightened when the end came and was not going to open the door, but I insisted. To the very last he said he had never been married and never in prison, and even went so far as to refer me to Captain Seymour for proof of what he said."

One new feature of the case is that on the very day that Dr. Chadwick telephoned to the girl that her mother said that all was well and to go ahead and be married, he wrote the following note to Humphreys with a view to drawing attention from himself that particular day when he induced the girl to go to Crockett to be married and start away with him:

C. F. Humphreys, Esq.—Dear Sir and Brother: I regret to inform you that my engagement to Miss Norine Schneider has been broken off through the unmerited insults offered to myself by her mother. Mrs. S. has given me to understand very plainly that my actions were questionable and feeling that I have done all that a man could do to satisfy her, I could not in justice to myself stand this, hence the rupture. You will take this as final and revoke all that has been done in the matter and it is needless to say that I am almost heartbroken and believe Nora is the same, but I feel that as the girl's best friend has no confidence in my integrity it is better ended. Accept my kindest regards. Send me your bill of costs and do not attempt a reconciliation. Yours faithfully and fraternally,
ERNEST M. CHADWICK, M. D.

Captain Seymour has added to his archives in this case three cablegrams from England, all of which deny the convict's claims of wealth and distinctions. These, with records of convictions on two continents and five marriages, are some of the things that startle Miss Schneider.

Owing to the fact that Governor Gage and his two secretaries were in this city, the officer who was dispatched last Saturday night with the requisition for Cooper did not leave for Ogden until last night.

The Schneiders have moved to this city and are living at 821 Eddy street. As soon as the family can get around to it, the marriage will be annulled. Meanwhile the bride is not signing her name "Chadwick."

AWAY WITH HIS BRIDE AND HANDY CHECK BOOK WHILE POLICE FOLLOW

HARRY WESTWOOD COOPER, BIGAMIST AND FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE, AND MRS. NORAINE SCHNEIDER COOPER, WHO ACCOMPANIES HIM ON HER WEDDING TOUR UNCONSCIOUS OF HIS CHARACTER. MRS. J. D. SCHNEIDER IS THE MOTHER OF THE UNFORTUNATE YOUNG WOMAN.

No Trace Yet of Harry Westwood Cooper, Who Posed as a Doctor and Ran Away With Deluded Young Girl.

Crockett Merchants All Astonished by "The Examiner's" Identification of the Man Who Swindled Them.

THE police have no tidings yet of Harry Westwood Cooper, otherwise Dr. Ernest Moore Chadwick, M. D., M. S., who has taken on her honeymoon an unsuspecting Crockett bride.

According to police records, Cooper is one of the most unique of criminals. He is an expert swindler and ardent lover. He is set in his manner of swindling, but with his love making any girl whom he can infatuate with his fairy tales of his wealth and social position suits him. The greatest peculiarity of his criminal work is that he cannot be a swindler without making love and he cannot make love without swindling.

Will Be Brought Back.

Cooper will be brought to San Francisco for trial and if the police plans do not miscarry he will get a good long term, possibly life, in State's prison. Under the law a prior conviction permits the court to make what are practically life sentences and the police hope to place Cooper where he will do no more swindling. Yesterday afternoon Mrs. Schneider of Crockett swore to two complaints charging Cooper with forgery. The charges are based on the fictitious telegram bearing Mrs. Schneider's name which Cooper sent from this city to Crockett. The second charge is for forging a court seal of another country, which is a penal offense. Cooper manufactured seals purporting to be the official stamp of the English court of chancery. This seal was affixed to the bogus will of his aunt by which he represented he would inherit a vast fortune. Detective Edward Byram will go to Ogden to bring Cooper back. Extradition warrants were prepared yesterday and the Governor will be asked to sign them to-day and Byram will proceed by the evening train to Utah. Cooper is a desperate criminal and no chances will be taken with him. Captain Seymour has instructed Byram to put an Oregon boot on Cooper and keep him manacled, hand and foot, during the trip.

It was not until "The Examiner" reached Crockett yesterday that the identity of the man who had swindled many of the business men of the town was known. Then many stories of his doings were told. He had acquainted nearly all who would listen to him of his coming wedding with Miss Noraine Schneider, and a week ago he proposed a farewell banquet to his bachelordom.

Chadwick arranged for the spread, and it was to have been an elaborate affair. It was to have taken place last Monday night, but by that time the "doctor" was hiding from the police. Invitations to the affair were printed, but they were never sent out. To all whom he had spoken about it he said that Mr. Donohoe, cashier of the Donohoe-Kelly Bank, would be there.

"Mr. Donohoe, you know," he would say, "is a particularly warm personal friend of mine."

Stationery, on which was written a letter to "Dr. Chadwick," purporting to be from a firm of barristers in London, was prepared in a Crockett printing office. W. B. Hawes, the printer, said Chadwick came to him in a hurry and wanted the work done.

"He said," said Mr. Hawes, "that the letters were to be copies of an original he had which must be on file the next day in the office of the County Clerk. The printing he wanted consisted of letter heads and I set the type. The copy reads as follows:

"'Edward P. Hayden, L. L. B., Arthur Simpson, M. A., L. L. D.; Hayden & Simpson, barristers, chambers 1 to 14, Gale Building, Strand, London.' Then a London date line was added."

Among the effects left behind by Dr. Chadwick was a letter addressed to himself, written on one of these letter heads. It notified him of the fortune that had been left him by an aunt and was signed by Edward P. Hayden.

The day after the letter heads were printed and delivered to Chadwick the printer noticed that the doctor wore a wide band of crepe around his silk hat, and he was showing a letter and announcing his good fortune.

Victimized Furniture Dealer.

F. J. Jordan, a furniture dealer of Crockett, was one of the heaviest sufferers through Chadwick's swindling scheme. Chadwick had arranged to buy the practice of Dr. Yates of Crockett, and it became necessary for him to furnish an office for himself. Jordan accompanied him to San Francisco and assisted him in selecting the furniture at the ware-rooms of the Indianapolis Furniture Company. A purchase amounting to about $1,500 was made, and Chadwick gave a check to the firm in payment. The Indianapolis Furniture Company allowed Jordan about $250 in cash as his commission on the sale. Jordan was liberal in entertaining what he thought was such a good customer and spent a good part of the commission money. The check was given last Saturday. On Monday Jordan was notified that the

BACHELOR DINNER PLANNED BY COOPER

All Arrangements Were Made, With Charming Audacity, to Entertain His Friends and Admirers.

But on the Date Set for the Feast the Generous Host-to-Be Was Hiding From Avenging Justice.

How He Gave the Masons Pass Words and Made a Printer Stamp Stationery to Write Letters to Himself showing that an account had been opened with him with $970 to his credit. That entry was promptly raised in the book by the new customer to $27,970. Flashing that and an ever-ready check book, he was in a good position to borrow money or get checks cashed after banking hours.

All this time he was ardently wooing Miss Noraine Schneider, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Schneider of Vallejo Junction. Chadwick's reputation as a physician spread and he was building up a splendid practice. Attorneys were dancing attendance upon him, clearing the legal road of all snags so their client would without delay secure his wondrous inheritance.

Clinched the Engagement.

A week of lovemaking and Chadwick had several hundred cards printed at the local printing office and reading as follows:

Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Schneider announce the engagement of their daughter, Noraine Pearl, to Ernest Moore Chadwick, M. D., M. S., L. M.

The cards were never sent out and the printer still has them on his hands. Neither Mr. Schneider nor Mrs. Schneider authorized the publication of the announcement and knew nothing of an engagement at the time the press was set going.

It was about ten days before he fled that he began paying attention to Miss Schneider. He was not slow in telling his story of his inheritance. Four days after he began courting the young girl he declared to her parents that if she should marry him he would settle on her $20,000 of the money he said he was about to receive and Attorney Ashford was commissioned to have prepared in triplicate a handsomely engrossed agreement to that effect. The agreement was prepared. The copies were tastefully bound in green ribbon, but they were never signed by the intended contracting parties.

For about ten days the affairs of the "doctor" went along swimmingly, but early last week his troubles commenced. Doubts began to be expressed about the genuineness of the physician and the stories he told about himself. Mrs. Schneider commenced asking questions about her prospective son-in-law. She secured possession of a document that Dr. Chadwick said had been issued by the High Court of Chancery of London citing him to appear before it on March 1st and claim his fortune.

Mrs. Schneider gave it to Attorney Humphreys to ascertain its genuineness. Cables were sent to London and it was declared a fraud. Then explanations were asked for thick and fast. The bank was asked about the checks that had been given out with such a lavish hand, and amid of it all Chadwick disappeared after inducing the girl at the last moment to marry him. His flight was her bridal tour, and perhaps to this moment she is not aware that she is united by marriage to a criminal, a former convict, a bigamist and a fugitive from justice.

Arranged a Bachelor Banquet.

It was not until "The Examiner" reached Crockett yesterday that the identity of the man who had swindled many of the business men of the town was known. Then many stories of his doings were told. He had acquainted nearly all who would listen to him of his coming wedding with Miss Noraine Schneider, and a week ago he proposed a farewell banquet to his bachelordom.

Chadwick arranged for the spread, and it was to have been an elaborate affair. It was to have taken place last Monday night, but by that time the "doctor" was hiding from the police. Invitations to the affair were printed, but they were never sent out. To all whom he had spoken about it he said that Mr. Donohoe, cashier of the Donohoe-Kelly Bank, would be there.

"Mr. Donohoe, you know," he would say, "is a particularly warm personal friend of mine."

Stationery, on which was written a letter to "Dr. Chadwick," purporting to be from a firm of barristers in London, was prepared in a Crockett printing office. W. G. Hawes, the printer, said Chadwick came to him in a hurry and wanted the work done.

"He said," said Mr. Hawes, "that the letters were to be copies of an original he had which must be on file the next day in the office of the County Clerk. The printing he wanted consisted of letter heads and I set the type. The copy reads as follows:

"'Edward P. Hayden, L. L. D.; Arthur Simpson, M. A., L. L. B.; Hayden & Simpson, barristers, chambers 1 to 14, Gale Building, Strand, London.' Then a London date line was added."

Among the effects left behind by Dr. Chadwick was a letter addressed to himself, written on one of these letter heads. It notified him of the fortune that had been left him by an aunt and was signed by Edward P. Hayden.

The day after the letter heads were printed and delivered to Chadwick the printer noticed that the doctor wore a wide band of crepe around his silk hat, and he was showing a letter and announcing his good fortune.

Victimized Furniture Dealer.

F. J. Jordan, a furniture dealer of Crockett, was one of the heaviest sufferers through Chadwick's swindling scheme. Chadwick had arranged to buy the practice of Dr. Yale of Crockett, and it became necessary for him to furnish an office for himself. Jordan accompanied him to San Francisco and assisted him in selecting the furniture at the ware-rooms of the Indianapolis Furniture Company. A purchase amounting to about $1,300 was made, and Chadwick gave a check to the firm in payment. The Indianapolis Furniture Company allowed Jordan about $250 in cash as his commission on the sale. Jordan was liberal in entertaining what he thought was such a good customer and spent a good part of the commission money. The check was given last Saturday. On Monday Jordan was notified that the check was no good, and he was asked to return the commission money.

A. A. Paul, a druggist of Crockett, is out $25, and he has a worthless check for that amount. Chadwick purchased many presents at the drugstore in the way of toilet novelties that he presented to the girl he was courting.

Quinn & Broder, proprietors of a dry-goods store, have a check for $150 that they took in payment for two suits of clothes and a diamond ring.

The Rev. D. Q. Travis, pastor of the Congregational Church of Crockett, who performed the marriage ceremony, is much worried because of the part he took in the affair.

"I was fooled by the fellow," he said. "I knew nearly all the business men of the town said he was as he represented and though I had a presentiment at the time all was not right, I could find no reason for my feelings and the ceremony was performed. He had a license, regularly issued by the County Clerk."

In a box left by "Chadwick" were found a number of seals and stamps which he used in giving the credentials he presented a genuine appearance.

Mrs. Schneider, the mother of the unfortunate wife, is in this city. She has interested the Police Department in an effort to find her daughter and have her returned. Cooper, alias Chadwick, when last seen, was on the way toward Sacramento on Sunday morning.

COOPER CONFESSES HIS MANY CRIMES

Young Wife of the Forger Refuses to Forgive the Deception He Practiced in Order to Win Her.

She Is Glad to Get the Opportunity to Return to Her Home in Crockett From Which He Took Her.

While in Jail at Ogden He Wrote Her a Long and Pleading Letter, Begging Her Forgiveness and $2.

[Special Dispatch to "The Examiner."]

OGDEN (Utah), March 1.—Harry Westwood Cooper, alias C. T. Humphreys, alias Dr. Chadwick, to-day confessed that he deceived Noraine Schneider, the girl he married at Crockett; that he had served a term in San Quentin prison, and that he had perpetrated other forgeries.

Last night Chadwick was defiant and said he would fight extradition, but this morning he promised the chief, in the presence of his wife, that he would go with the officers, but the chief decided it would be unsafe and will await the requisition. Later he admitted to Detective Pender that he had been in San Quentin prison and told the detective that in a valise at the depot were forged papers, checks, some jewelry and seals.

"I cannot love a man who has deceived me. I did love Dr. Chadwick or whatever his real name may be, but I do not love him now, nor can I ever love him again. I want to go home to my mother, and never see him again," declared the deceived wife to-night. "Dr. Chadwick, or Harry Westwood Cooper, to whom I am married," said the young wife in telling her story, "came to Crockett, my home, about six weeks ago. He began making love to me as soon as he made my acquaintance. He was very good to me and I liked him very much. My mother did not like him. He told us that he was in financial trouble, but that he was heir to a large English estate, and showed papers to prove it.

"Of course, you know the rest of the story, for the newspapers have printed it all, and what they say I guess is about right. He showed me a telegram which he said was sent by my mother, but which I now know was a fake."

Mrs. Chadwick-Cooper then showed this letter, which she had received from her husband:

My dearest Nora: I cannot resist the temptation to send you these few lines hoping you are not suffering. I am. Dear girlie, for your love I staked all and lost all—you were my prize. I did love you, and do love you, and will ever love you until death. Remember, darling, you are once more believing everything bad of me without having full proof of my guilt. I have never been what these people say, and when you find this out you will regret your actions. Darling Nora, ask yourself one question: If I was the bad man which these people claim I am, is it likely I would have been so good and kind to you? And further, you must remember you had no money and your parents certainly gave me none, hence I must have married you for love, and surely if I was so very bad I would not marry for love, but would try to get money.

Now, my darling wife, if you will come and see me I will give you a full and truthful explanation of everything and when you hear all your good sense will come to your rescue and it will probably save your dear mother a great deal of trouble. Then if you do not want to come again you need not.

Sweetheart, I would be very thankful if you would let me have say $2 of the money which I gave you last night, as I need one or two things this morning, and when you come I will tell you where to get more for yourself. And now, love, let me give you one word of advice. Say nothing to newspaper men, for every word you say will give you much more public notoriety. Now, darling, you can believe me when I say that this matter will yet come out right. You at present do not understand it and have only their side of the story, so in fairness come and hear what I have to say, then if not satisfactory never come again. This is only fair. Please come, my darling. The chief says you can see me and have a talk. And in conclusion believe me innocent until they have proven me guilty and believe that for your love I would do all things. Your loving husband, ERNEST.

P. S. I also want to tell you where to get your big ring.

She called on him at the jail in response to the letter, but was unforgiving. During this interview he expressed a willingness to go back to California without requisition papers, but the officers will hold him until the papers come. After the interview Mrs. Chadwick went with Chief Conlick to the baggage-room of the Union depot and got the valise belonging to Chadwick containing a number of forged papers and a seal which purports to be that of the "High Court of Chancery, London E. C., probate."

Miss Schneider, or Mrs. Cooper, will leave Ogden on the 6 o'clock train to-morrow morning for California, and expresses herself as delighted to return to her former home.

A telegram was received at noon from San Francisco officers saying that requisition papers were being issued and that an officer would soon be on his way to Ogden for Chadwick.

CHADWICK-COOPER COMES BACK WITH AN OREGON BOOT

SIR HARRY WESTWOOD COOPER, ALIAS ERNEST MOORE CHADWICK, BEING BOOKED FOR FORGERY AT THE CITY PRISON, AFTER BEING BROUGHT BACK FROM OGDEN WITH AN OREGON BOOT ON HIS LEG.

Their Lives.

[Special Dispatch to "The Examiner."]

LA JUNTA (Col.), February 27.—If they could not live together they could die together, and with his arm about her and her hand clasped in his two young lovers calmly faced death together.

Their bodies still clasped in the last embrace were found this morning in a little cabin about a mile south of town.

Louis Burch and Adrian Taylor, aged about eighteen, had been sweethearts for a year or more. The families of both objected to their marriage, and they took the parental opposition greatly to heart.

Monday night at 11 o'clock they left the Confident That No Jury Will Find Him Guilty.

His Defense Will Be That He Loves Norine Schneider.

SHREWD, calculating and cunning, Harry Westwood Cooper sat in the City Prison last night after a two days' trip from Ogden, undismayed by the array of charges against him and with a ready explanation for all his crooked work. Little Norine Schneider, the girl whom he victimized by false telegrams and fairy tales of wealth, is to have the burden of his wrongdoing thrust upon her shoulders. While he admits that his acts might have been questionable in some respects, he offers as justification his desire to win her love. With that as his defense he confidently asserts the belief that no jury can find him guilty.

Cooper reached here at 7 o'clock last night on the Ogden overland in charge of Detective Byram. The trip was uneventful. Weighted down with a seventeen-pound Oregon boot, the wily criminal would have found himself at a disadvantage if he attempted to escape. Only once did he show any trepidation, and that was when the train pulled into Port Costa. Visions of a wrathful parent with a six-shooter sprang into the prisoner's mind, and when the train cleared the outskirts of the little village he was visibly relieved. At the Ferry depot Cooper was the last to leave the boat. Detective Tom Gibson went over to Sixteenth-street Station to meet Byram, and between the two detectives Cooper walked slowly up the steps. Captain of Detectives Seymour had a patrol wagon waiting, and before the crowd could get a glimpse of the noted criminal he was placed inside and driven rapidly to the City Prison.

On the way a carriage mysteriously followed the patrol wagon. Cooper peered nervously out from the curtains from time to time. Some one suggested that it might be his mother-in-law following him. "Oh, no! I am not afraid of her," replied the prisoner. "She knows me well enough to understand the predicament in which I have been placed. She is all right."

When Cooper reached the Hall of Justice he was taken immediately to Captain Seymour's office. After the Oregon boot had been removed Seymour questioned him concerning his eventful existence in Ukiah. At first he was haughty and refused to admit anything, but after a while he confessed enough to insure his conviction upon the two charges that have been placed against him. While before Seymour a letter from another one of his sweethearts was handed him. This was a letter from a Vallejo girl. Cooper denied that he knew the girl.

"Do you expect me to read this through now?" inquired Cooper, after glancing at the letter.

"Yes," responded Seymour, "and tell me what you know of this girl to whom you gave a ring and a photograph."

"I don't know anything about this. It is an anonymous proposition—I don't understand it. I never knew a girl in Vallejo and I have never had my picture taken since I have been in San Francisco."

"I suppose you will deny that this is yours," inquired Seymour, as he picked up the seal of the "High Court of Chancery," which Cooper had made by a Montgomery-street engraver.

"I most certainly do, Captain. It might have been found in my possessions at Ogden, but I don't know anything about it." Subsequently Cooper modified this statement by admitting that he knew about it, but did not have it made.

The letter shown Cooper was received by Captain Seymour on March 7th. No name is signed, but it is evidently from some woman who met the swindler. It is dated at Vallejo, March 6th, and reads as follows:

Lovers once, but strangers now. No doubt you can imagine my humiliation and despair after reading of your cowardly conduct and situation of Norine Schneider. Ernest, I can hardly believe it is so after all that has passed between us, how only a few weeks since you made the same avowals of love and honor to me, but, thank God, I have escaped such a cowardly villain before you ruined my honor and reputation as you did that poor unfortunate * * Oh, how could you, you unnatural monster? Did you ever once think of me or the pain and humiliation you were inflicting, Ernest, if I was to tell my folks of the villain who has blasted all my hopes, they would follow you to the world's end and have vengeance for what I have suffered. But no, I will be brave and bear it all for my dear folks' sake. But remember, you cur, it is not that you do not deserve it, or that it is my love for you, for remember, I hate you now as I loved you once. But always remember that my curses will follow you through life. Your pictures and the tokens of love you bestowed on me I have burned to forget you. The emerald ring you gave me I will throw into the bay, so I will have no remembrances of the past. As mine is only one of the hearts you have broken, it will be no task on my part to forget the past. From one who will try to forget, but never forgive. Lora knows all.

In the City Prison after he had been booked and searched Cooper related the incidents preceding his flight. "I loved Norine Schneider," said the prisoner, "and was bound to win her. When I asked her father he offered no objection, but her mother insisted that she should have position and money. The girl did not want money. She was ready to marry me under any conditions, but her mother interfered. I wanted to satisfy the mother that I had money and thus it was that I got myself into trouble. I raised the amount of my deposit at the Donohoe-Kelly Bank $27,000 for that purpose. But I did not send the telegram that Norine received from her mother on the day we left. That is a mistake. The telegram is not in my handwriting, and they cannot prove that I sent it.

"I have nothing in the world to conceal, and I want to be perfectly frank with you. In the first place I want to correct statements which have been published that my name is not Chadwick. Ernest Moore Chadwick is my right name, and it is proper that I should use it. I changed it to Cooper when I got into trouble some years ago. Of course, I shall fight this prosecution, and I feel with the testimony of Mrs. Schneider and Mrs. Chadwick that I will be able to prove my innocence. My wife will stand by me. Just before she left Ogden she came to the prison and told me that if I could prove that I had never been married before she could forgive all. I am not a bigamist and she understands the rest."

In Cooper's effects there was a queer collection of documents. The stubs of his check book on the Donohoe-Kelly Bank show that he has drawn $28,084. Only a part of the checks, however, have been put into circulation. The source from which he gets his knowledge of Masonry is also disclosed by a small book entitled "Standard Monitor: Or Free Masons' Vade Mecum."

The most interesting of all his documents, however, is the bogus decree of the "High Court of Chancery," purporting to order the payment to Cooper of £20,000. It is a queer mixture of legal verbiage, badly arranged and warranted to arouse the suspicions of the most credulous. It is poorly engrossed, misspelled and full of glaring errors.

CITATION ISSUED.

Judge Gaddis Makes an Order in Johns Estate

Upon Reading of Petition Filed by Burris Allen, by His Guardian, Chas. Allen.

The following petition has been filed in the Superior Court in the estate of G. W. Johns, deceased:

"Now comes Burris Allen, by Charles Allen, guardian of his person and estate, and asks said court to reopen and examine the item of the account of G. W. Gregory and Elizabeth J. Gregory, executors of the estate of G. W. Johns, deceased, heretofore allowed, whereby it was adjudged by the court that the promissory note hereinafter particularly set forth was valid and a subsisting obligation of said estate.

The above-named Burris Allen is an heir-at-law of said G. W. Johns, and under and by virtue of the provisions of the last will and testament of said deceased is entitled to share in a distribution of the estate of said deceased, and is entitled to receive upon final distribution thereof one-sixth of said estate.

This petitioner is informed and believes and therefore avers, that the said George W. Gregory and Elizabeth Gregory, as executors, have agreed to pay said spurious and forged note and claim hereinbefore set forth, and are about to pay the same, and unless restrained by the order of this court the said G. W. Gregory and Elizabeth J. Gregory will pay the amount of said promissory note to the said G. W. Gregory and the said sum so paid will be lost to said estate; that said G. W. Gregory is insolvent; that said George W. Gregory and Elizabeth J. Gregory are acting as executors without bonds; that if said claim is paid to the said George W. Gregory the amount thereof will be hidden and secreted, as this petitioner is informed and believes and therefore avers, and a recovery against the said George W. Gregory will be valueless, because of his insolvency and inability to respond financially to damages.

Wherefore this petitioner prays that the order of this court heretofore made allowing the said promissory note and said claim founded thereon as a claim against the estate, and declaring said note to be genuine, and directing its payment in due course of administration, be annulled, revoked and set aside; that said account be reopened and examined again and said note declared to be a forgery; that said George W. Gregory and Elizabeth J. Gregory be removed as executors of said estate; that pending the hearing of this petition the said G. W. Gregory and Elizabeth Gregory be by order of this court restrained from paying said promissory note and said claim, or any part thereof, and from in any manner using the funds of said estate, in liquidating the same, and that a citation issue out of this court directed to said George W. Gregory and Elizabeth Gregory, requiring them to appear in this court on the 3d of September, 1900, then and there to answer the averments of this petition and to show cause, if any they have, why the petition should not be granted; and that petitioner have all such other, further or different relief in the premises as to the court may seem proper.

Upon reading the above Judge Gaddis issued an order that a citation should issue.

SUPERIOR COURT.

Three Suits to Recover Money Alleged Due.

Stay of Execution in Johns Estate Contest—A Guardian's Petition Granted.

W. J. Parker has commenced an action against Harriet E. Parramore et al. to foreclose a mortgage for $800, with interest, on the residence on Court street, between Second and Third streets, known as the Parramore house. The mortgage was given to secure an indebtedness on two promissory notes.

B. Orengo & Bros. have brought suit against Joel Wood to recover the sum of $517.86, alleged to be due on book accounts, the same bearing interest at 7 per cent. per annum from July 30, 1898.

The California State Bank has commenced an action against John T. Carey, administrator of the estate of R. J. Carey, deceased, John T. Carey, Anna F. Carey, Carey Van Fleet, Mary A. Carey, Albert F. Boyne, V. J. Chamberlain, John C. Franks and the Bank of Ukiah to foreclose a mortgage for $13,400, with interest, on the premises known as the Carey ranch in Capay valley. The mortgage was given to secure an indebtedness on a promissory note dated March 12, 1895. The usual foreclosure proceedings are prayed for and the appointment of a commissioner to sell said mortgaged premises.

The contesting heirs of the estate of G. W. Johns, deceased, have, through their attorneys, J. C. Ball, A. L. De Ligne and Hiram Johnson, filed a notice of appeal from the judgment entered by Judge Gaddis in the matter of the estate of G. W. Johns, deceased, as a result of the recent contest over the validity of the $10,000 note, and the qualifications of Elizabeth and George Gregory as executors. The grounds stated are general and substantially the same as those used in such cases. Judge Gaddis has also, at the petition of contestants, granted a stay of execution in the same matter, which means, among other things, that the executors, Elizabeth and George Gregory, who were removed by an order of the court during the pending of the action, will not be reinstated for ten days more, and that J. D. Lawson, special administrator, will continue as such during that time.

Judge Gaddis has made an order granting the petition of Chas. Allen, as the guardian of Burris Allen, an incompetent, asking for the sum of $100, from the Johns estate with which to take said incompetent into the mountains for the benefit of his health.

THE JOHNS CASE.

Executor Gregory on the Stand Nearly All Day.

Witness Tells the Circumstances Under Which Disputed Note is Alleged to Have Been Executed.

When our Tuesday report of the proceedings in the Johns note contest closed Mrs. Elizabeth J. Gregory was under cross-examination, but it was concluded without eliciting anything further of material interest.

Tandy Allen was recalled for further cross-examination. The purpose was to fix a date. He had a conversation with George Gregory on the second day of the Friel compromise.

W. A. Porter, bookkeeper for the Bank of Yolo, was next called, and stated that he had frequently seen the deceased sign his name, and he believes the disputed signature to be genuine. He would honor a check with that signature if presented at the bank.

Once during the cross-examination of Mr. Porter Mr. Grove L. Johnson cited several authorities to show the competency of the question and Mr. Ball [illegible] others to show the incompetency. [illegible] Gaddis stated as he had ruled [illegible] he had probably ruled right. [illegible] Judge was recalled, but the question asked was ruled out, and [illegible] was ex used.

George W. Knox, a brother-in-law of George Gregory, was next called. He detailed the conversation he overheard between Frank Allen and George Gregory at the time of the Friel trial. He heard his brother-in-law tell Allen that Charlie had jumped him again and he must be taken care of. Allen said he would look after him and lock him up if necessary. Witness denied that Gregory told Allen he would right all wrongs if all the talk about the note was stopped.

Mr. Hiram Johnson tried to get witness to admit he was drunk at the time, but he would not. He said a man may take a few drinks without getting drunk.

Charles S. Allen was recalled for further cross-examination. Mr. Grove L. Johnson put this question: "Did you during harvest time in 1899, near the American Hotel, Arbuckle, say to Stephen C. Brown, 'I am going to send George to the State prison,' and did Mr. Brown say, 'I don't believe George would do a trick of that kind,' and did you say he would do a d—d sight littler, and did Brown say, 'Let the law settle this,' and did you reply, 'D—n the law; I'm going to send him across the bay anyway; and Lizzie is as deep in it as anybody'?" Witness could not remember any such conversation, but would not deny it.

J. H. Harpham, a bookkeeper by profession and a resident of College City for thirty years, testified that Frank Allen's reputation in that community is bad. Witness only knew him ten or twelve years ago. From hearsay he thought Allen's reputation was due to the fact that he is a gambler and sporting man.

Stephen C. Brown was the next witness. He came to Woodland with George Gregory July 7, 1898, arriving here about half-past 2 o'clock. They separated at the Fashion Stables. Saw Mr. Gregory a few minutes later and then saw him no more for a few hours. Witness and Gregory left Woodland together. Witness fixed the date by a check, an order and by the further fact that the day was his birthday anniversary. Witness came to Woodland looking [illegible] mule.

[illegible] examination witness first [illegible] of the note from an extract from [illegible] paper, published in a Colusa paper, in June, 1899. Witness [illegible] the mule at Yanktown.

George W. Gregory, one of the executors of the estate and half owner of the note, was the next witness. He testified that he was married in 1886 and has [illegible] children. Has lived on [illegible] father's ranch all his life and [illegible] has now occupied for thirteen years.

[illegible] was asked to state what services he had performed for G. W. Johns. [illegible] Hiram Johnson objected on the ground that parties in whose behalf an action or proceeding is prosecuted as heir an executor or personal representative of a deceased cannot become witness [illegible].

Mr. Grove Johnson occupied half an hour in reading a long line of decisions sustaining the right to testify.

The court said the point is an important one and he desired to look into the authorities. An adjournment was therefore ordered until 9 A. M. Wednesday.

TODAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

When court convened this morning, G. W. Gregory was temporarily withdrawn and W. J. Stewart was put on the stand. Witness knew Mr. Johns well for twenty-five or thirty years and believes the note signature to be genuine.

Witness also testified that G. W. Gregory collected notes, loaned money and transacted other business for his grandfather. This testimony was not shaken in cross-examination.

Chas. West was the next witness and testified as to the general reputation of Frank Allen, which he said is bad. The talk about him he believed to be due to the fact that he is a sporting man.

At this point Attorney Ball cited more authorities in support of Mr. Hiram Johnson's contention that G. W. Gregory should not be allowed to testify. The court overruled the objection and the examination of Gregory was resumed.

It was stipulated that without further formal notice the records shall show that all testimony given by witness concerning occurrences prior to the death of Mr. Johns is objected to by contestants.

Witness gave his age and birthday and declared that he performed services for his grandfather. The two were alone on the Johns farm for one year and witness did all the cooking and choring.

Witness also performed various services between the years 1883 and 1895. Took a check to the Bank of Colusa for $5000 and got a certificate of deposit. Also took a trip to Texas with his grandfather and was gone two or three months.

In 1885 witness took a check to the Bank of Colusa, got it cashed and loaned a part of the money to Mr. White, taking his note for it.

Mr. Johns went to Missouri in 1889 leaving witness to look after his business and $200 or $300 to pay expenses.

In 1891, at request of deceased, witness made a loan to James Johns, taking bond for a deed as security for the same.

In 1894 witness had power of attorney to transact business between Mr. Johns and Mr. Boyd. The power of attorney was introduced in evidence.

In 1896 witness killed hogs for his grandfather, smoked the meat and brought it to him in Woodland. Also cut wood and shipped it to him from Arbuckle.

A letter to Gregory from Mr. Johns was introduced. It stated that he had money coming from the road fund. Witness was instructed to draw it and to have a carload of wood cut and shipped to him. The letter also enquired what Henry Gregory was doing about the assessment in reclamation district No. 108.

Going back to 1880, witness said he loaned money to J. C. Keith for Mr. Johns and afterwards collected the same.

Witness corroborated S. C. Brown's testimony in regard to a trip to this city on July 7, 1898. After leaving Brown he first went to Mrs. Edmonds' place. Next went to his grandfather's at the latter's request. Witness' wife and children were there. Met his grandfather in the yard and told him he was in a hurry. Witness went in the house to get a drink of water. His grandfather followed him in and said he wanted to pay him for work done and asked how he could do it. Witness replied that he did not know unless he gave a note. Mr. Johns said he also wanted to leave something to Mary and asked witness to draw up a joint note for $10,000. Witness did so. Mr. Johns signed it and requested that nothing be said about it.

College City July [illegible] 1898

Two years after date I promised to pay
G W Gregory and Mary E Gregory or order
Ten Thousand Dollars ($10.000.) for Value recieved (for services rendered by them here to fore) with interest at eight per cent (8%) per annum interest payable every twelve months and if not so paid to become a part of the principle and bear a like [illegible] of inter[illegible], both interest and princip[illegible] payable only in United States
Gold Co[illegible]. In case of my death this note shall immediately become due and payable at the option of the holder there of.

G W Johns

Witness was present at reading of the will. Did not say anything about the debts of the estate. Did not say anything about it at Mr. Hall's office or on the sidewalk in front of Mr. Hall's office. Did not make any such remark when the will was probated.

The general expenses were paid December 3, 1898, and a check for the payment of the same was put in evidence. Witness did not say anything about the debts of the estate to Ike Bedell or Mr. Piatt.

Witness denied that he ever said to Frank Allen or anybody else that he would right the wrongs he had done. Witness was not in Woodland on the morning of February 19, 1900. Received a letter from Mr. Hawkins telling him not to come. Came down on the afternoon train. Arrived at 4 o'clock, but had no conversation with Allen or Myers on that day. Witness knows W. G. Boyd and is not on very friendly terms with him. Also knows Tandy Allen, but had no conversation with either Allen or Boyd.

On cross-examination witness stated that he did not see J. W. Hughes on February 19th. Saw Mr. DeLigne on the street and spoke to him.

Witness could not call to mind any services performed for his grandfather prior to 1881. Was about 15 years of age at the time his grandfather asked him to stay with him. Witness attended school while there.

Witness again went over the money-lending transactions and the trips to Texas and Missouri.

The court ordered the usual noon recess.

At the afternoon session of the court the cross-examination of G. W. Gregory was resumed. He denied that he was drunk on the night of the 18th in the Blue Goose. On July 7, 1898, when witness came to Woodland, he went to the Johns house to see his family and grandfather, without any idea of getting a note.

Mr. [illegible] Johnson made witness go over all the services alleged to have been performed by him for his grandfather.

Witness again repeated all the circumstances of his visit to his grandfather on July 7th and all the incidents leading up to the execution of the note. On this point the cross-examination was very searching, but there was nothing in the manner of the counsel on either side to indicate whether or not they were satisfied with the result.

The court requested witness to repeat the usual form of a commercial note, which he did with apparent satisfaction.

Witness detailed at great length where and how he kept the note while it was in his custody. Most of the time it was kept in a book or a pocketbook, which he kept in a chest and sometimes in a cupboard in the cellar.

Some time in June, 1899, witness brought the note to Woodland. Up to that time he had not mentioned the existence of the note to anybody.

Mr. Gregory was still on the witness stand when this report closed.

$10,000 NOTE IS DISPUTED

Forgery Alleged Against the Executor of an Estate.

COURT ASKED TO REMOVE HIM

Scandal Over the Administration of the Property of a Rich Yolo Farmer.

[Special Dispatch to "The Examiner."]

SACRAMENTO, March 19 — George W. Gregory, who, with his mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Gregory is executor of the will of George W. Johns, a rich farmer who died in Woodland December 26, 1898, has been accused by two of the heirs of the estate with having forged the name of Johns to a note for $10,000, made payable to him and his sister, Mary Gregory, and which note has been filed as a claim against the estate.

The accusation of forgery against George W. Gregory was made on February 19th by Mrs. Polly A. N. Friel and Tandy J. Allen by their attorneys—A. A. DeLigne of Sacramento and J. C. Ball of Woodland. On a petition to Judge Gaddis of the Superior Court of Yolo county that he remove the executors and appoint others in their stead, the Judge has appointed a special administrator of the estate pending the hearing of the petition, which was continued to-day until April 17th next.

Johns' signature to the note has been pronounced by Experts Theodore Kytka and Carl Eisenschimel of San Francisco to be a clumsy forgery and to be in the handwriting of George W. Gregory.

Gregory is about thirty-five years of age and occasionally worked on his father's farm near College City.

Previous to his five or six years' residence in Woodland, Johns was a farmer in Colusa county for more than forty-five years. He was respected and was well known throughout the Sacramento valley. He was very close in his business dealings and when he died he had accumulated $100,000 worth of property. He was never known to be in financial distress, or to have ever borrowed any money, and when Gregory presented the $10,000 note as a claim against the estate, Johns' many acquaintances declared their belief that he never made the note.

Johns, who was a widower, bequeathed his property share and share alike to his son, James W. Johns, and his three daughters, Mrs. Polly A. N. Friel of Colusa, Mrs. Elizabeth G. Gregory of College City and Mrs. Charles Allen. The latter and the son have since died. Tandy Allen is the son of Mrs. Allen and he will fall heir to the property she would have received had she lived. The will named George W. Gregory and his mother, Elizabeth Gregory, who was Johns' daughter, to be the executors without bonds. Mary Gregory, sister of George W. Gregory, was Johns' housekeeper in Woodland up to the time of his death. About two months after the date of the $10,000 note, Johns deeded to Mary Gregory two houses and lots in Woodland, the consideration being, as the deed reads, in payment for all services rendered him and thereafter to be rendered by her.

Gregory never mentioned the note until six months after he was appointed executor and then not until he was on the witness stand on the hearing of a petition for partial distribution of the estate. He swore that the first time Mary Gregory knew of the existence of the note was when he informed her of it the day previous. He also swore that he wrote the body of the note and that Johns signed it.

WOODLAND, CAL.,

PRONOUNCED A FORGERY

Experts of San Francisco So Decide the Signature of the Johns Note.

A Startling Development In the Contest Against the Executors.

The San Francisco papers have discovered that there is a contest in this county in the matter of the estate of G. W. Johns, deceased, wherein the executors, G. W. Gregory and Mrs. Elizabeth Gregory are accused of forging a note for $10,000, purported to have been signed by deceased in their favor. This is an old story in Woodland as the local papers published the proceedings from time to time, but the Examiner published something additional regarding the forgery which will probably be of interest. It reads as follows:

Johns' signature to the note has been pronounced by Experts Theodore Kytka and Carl Eisenschimel of San Francisco to be a clumsy forgery and to be in the handwriting of George W. Gregory.

Gregory is about thirty-five years of age and occasionally worked on his father's farm near College City.

Previous to his five or six years' residence in Woodland Johns was a farmer in Colusa county for more than forty-five years. He was respected and was well known throughout the Sacramento valley. He was very close in his business dealing and when he died he had accumulated $100,000 worth of property. He was never known to be in financial distress, or to have ever borrowed any money, and when Gregory presented the $10,000 note as a claim against the estate, Johns' many acquaintances declared their belief that he never made the note.

Johns, who was a widower," bequeathed his property share and share alike to his son, James W. Johns, and his three daughters, Mrs. Polly A. N. Friel of Colusa, Mrs. Elizabeth G. Gregory of College City, and Mrs. Charles Allen. The latter and the son have since died. Tandy Allen is the son of Mrs. Allen and he will fall heir to the property she would have received had she lived. The will named George W. Gregory and his mother, Elizabeth Gregory, who was Johns' daughter, to be the executors without bonds. Mary Gregory, sister of George W. Gregory, was Johns' housekeeper in Woodland up to the time of his death. About two months after the date of the $10,000 note Johns deeded to Mary Gregory two houses and lots in Woodland, the consideration being, as the deed reads, in payment for all services rendered him and thereafter to be rendered by her.

Gregory never mentioned the note until six months after he had been appointed executor and not then until he was on the witness stand on the hearing of a petition for partial distribution of the estate. He swore that the first time Mary Gregory knew of the existence of the note was when he informed her of it the day previous. He also swore that he wrote the body of the note and that Johns signed it.

Photographic copies have been taken of the now celebrated note in controversy. The following is the language of the note verbatim:

COLLEGE CITY, July 7, 1898.

Two years after date I promised to pay G. W. Gregory and Mary Gregory or order Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000) for value received (for services rendered by them heretofore) with interest at eight per cent (8 per cent) per annum interest payable every twelve months and if not so paid to become a part of the principle and bear a Like rate of interest both Interest and principle payable only in United States Gold coin. In case of my death this note shall immediately become due and payable at the option of the holder thereof.

G. W. JOHNS.

This case, which promises to be almost as famous as the celebrated Murdock note case, will come up in the Superior court on April 17th for trial. It was postponed on March 27th till that date because of the desire on the part of contestants to introduce expert witnesses to prove the invalidity of the note through its alleged forged signature.

The experts mentioned in the foregoing article will be subpoenaed as witnesses to prove the grounds of the contest. They will bring all necessary apparatus to demonstrate their theories to the court.

THE JOHNS NOTE.

Judge Gaddis Declares the Signature Genuine.

Court Reinstates Elizabeth J. Gregory and G. W. Gregory as Executors of Estate.

Judge Gaddis has filed a decision in the Johns estate. It is of so much importance that we give the full text:

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the county of Yolo, in the matter of the estate of G. W. Johns, deceased.

G. W. Johns died testate in the county of Yolo, State of California, on the 26th day of November, 1899. He left a large and valuable estate, consisting of real and personal property, most of which is situated in the county of Colusa. Early in life and up to within a few years preceding his death, he had been engaged in the occupation of farming, and had also loaned some money. In the year 1890 he came to Woodland to reside. He purchased a residence and brought with him from Colusa county his granddaughter, Mary Gregory, as his housekeeper and companion. His wife had died many years before. At the time of his death his next of kin entitled to share in the distribution of his estate consisted of one son, two daughters and two grandsons who are the issue of a deceased daughter. Since the commencement of the administration of his estate, his said son, James W. Johns, died without issue, and the share which would have vested in him now descends to the remaining heirs-at-law. Of the estate as now situated, Elizabeth J. Gregory, a daughter of deceased, would receive one-third, Polly Ann Nancy Friel, a daughter, would receive another third, and Tandy J. and Burris S. Allen, sons of Matilda A. Allen, deceased, a daughter of deceased, would receive the remaining third.

By the terms of the last will and testament of G. W. Johns, deceased, it is provided that Elizabeth J. Gregory and her son, George W. Gregory, shall act as executors without bonds.

While the estate was in course of administration in this court, Polly Ann Nancy Friel and the Allen brothers presented a petition asking for a partial distribution of the estate. The petition was resisted by each of the executors, Elizabeth J. Gregory and George W. Gregory, who set forth various reasons why a partial distribution should not be had. Among other things it was contended that the estate was indebted in a large sum, and as evidence thereof, a promissory note was produced, purporting to have been signed by the deceased, for the sum of $10,000.

The note is in the words and figures following, to-wit:

"COLLEGE CITY, July 7th, 1898.

Two years after date, I promise to pay G. W. Gregory and Mary Gregory, or order ten thousand dollars ($10,000) for value received, (for services rendered by them heretofore) with interest at eight per cent (8%) per annum, interest payable every twelve months and if not so paid to become a part of the principle and bear a like rate of interest. Both interest and principle payable only in United States gold coin. In case of my death, this note shall immediately become due and payable at the option of the holder thereof.

(Signed) G. W. JOHNS."

This was the first time this note seems ever to have been heard of by any person other than G. W. Johns and G. W. Gregory. The petition for partial distribution was refused and the note was then presented to Elizabeth J. Gregory, as executrix (G. W. Gregory being disqualified to approve it), and to the judge of this court, both of whom endorsed their approval of the claim, and it was then filed among the papers in the case.

Thereafter, on the 19th day of February, 1900, Polly Ann Nancy Friel and Tandy J. Allen presented to this court their duly verified petition, setting forth among other things that said note is forged and spurious, and that a fraud is about to be perpetrated upon the court in the presentation of the same, and they asked that the powers of Elizabeth J. Gregory and G. W. Gregory, as executors, be suspended pending the hearing of the petition. In accordance with this request the court made an order suspending their powers and appointing John D. Lawson special administrator. The petition came on for hearing on the 22d day of May, 1900, and consumed two weeks in the taking of testimony and arguments of counsel.

Practically the only question in the case is whether the signature appended to the note is the handwriting of G. W. Johns. It is admitted that the body of the note was written by Gregory.

There is a grave conflict of testimony, and whichever way the court might decide the case would leave arguments to be advanced against the decision which would seem almost unanswerable. I shall state a small part of the testimony in narrative form, for to go into it as it was given at the trial would require volumes.

It seems that for many years G. W. Johns had been on greater terms of confidence and affection with his grandson, G. W. Gregory, and his granddaughter, Mary Gregory, than with any other of his relatives.

To the former he had entrusted some of his business affairs, and as a final culmination had made him an executor of his will without the necessity of furnishing bonds, showing that he had much confidence in the honesty and business integrity of Gregory.

It is not disputed that Gregory stayed a year with his grandfather at the latter's residence in Colusa county in 1881-2, at which time he did chores and cooking. Between the years 1883 and 1885 he took a check for $5000 to the Bank of Colusa, had it cashed and took certificates of deposit in sums of $500 and $1000 and gave them to his grandfather. In 1885 he went to Texas with his grandfather as companion, and stayed two or three months. He also took a check to Colusa, drew money on it, and loaned the money to Alex. White for his grandfather. In 1888 he negotiated a loan to J. C. Keith for his grandfather. Again, in the same year G. W. Johns went to Missouri and left Gregory to manage his property while absent, and furnished him money to do so. In 1891 he negotiated a loan to Jas. W. Johns for his grandfather. In 1894 he had a power of attorney from his grandfather to transact business with a man named Boyd. He made several trips to the Boyd place, and consulted with attorneys at Colusa relative to the business. In 1896 he killed hogs for his grandfather and made them into bacon. During that year he also attended to his grandfather's wheat rents.

In 1897 he again killed hogs for his grandfather, and made them into bacon. He also had some wood cut, hauled it to Arbuckle and shipped it to his grandfather at Woodland. In the same year he collected money and sent more wood.

Mary Gregory came to live with her grandfather at Woodland at his request. She was housekeeper, companion and nurse for a period of eight years, during which time she received no compensation other than board and lodging and small sums of money, which must have been inadequate to her wants, however humble her position may have been. Her grandfather gave her a deed to the residence where they lived, which was valued at something like $1500 or $1800.

While it will not be contended that the services above enumerated, and especially those of G. W. Gregory, were worth the sum of $5000 each to George and Mary, they are nevertheless important in considering the relationship existing between the grandfather and his grandchildren, and to demonstrate what confidence and affection must of necessity have existed on his part towards them.

Johns was an old man. He undoubtedly knew that he could not long survive. He was inactive so far as business pursuits were concerned, and it was only natural that he should call to his aid at that period of his life those in whom he reposed the greatest confidence. Nor could he presume as a reasonable man that all these services were to be performed gratuitously. That he did not indulge in such presumptions is shown by the testimony of witnesses here, whose truthfulness probably cannot be assailed, that on numerous occasions prior to his death, he stated that if George and Mary should stay by him until his death, he would leave them provided for, or words to that effect.

The immediate circumstances surrounding the making of the note are neither anomalous nor peculiar. On the 7th day of July, 1898, the date on which the note is said to have been made, G. W. Gregory left his home at College City and came to Woodland in company with S. C. Brown in a private conveyance. They arrived about 2 P. M. Gregory immediately went to his grandfather's house, and, after greeting and talking a few moments with relatives who were in the front yard, he went in the house to get a drink. Gregory says Johns followed him in and began talking of how to arrange for paying him and Mary for their services; that finally Johns suggested the giving of a note, to which Gregory assented; that Gregory procured the necessary writing materials from an adjoining room and wrote out the body of the note, partly according to his own ideas of formulating such an instrument and partly at Johns' dictation; that Gregory read it over to Johns and that Johns signed his name to it and handed it to Gregory; that Johns requested Gregory to say nothing of the note, and that he never did mention it to any person until it was presented to the court; that Gregory took the note with him to College City and kept it until it was presented.

His testimony shows some facts which have been urged at the argument with much stress. He did not speak of the matter to his sister, Mary, or to his wife, and he kept the note in places which might seem inconsistent with the care one would presumably take of an instrument of so great value.

Again, according to many witnesses, Gregory made statements after the death of his grandfather which are at variance with the theory of the existence of the note. Gregory denies having made these statements. If he did make them, I would not undertake to reconcile them with other evidence in the case. It is said that he stated that the estate was not indebted, and that a speedy settlement would be had; that he expressed surprise on learning that he had been left nothing by the will, and that he said he would have to be content with the commissions he would receive as executor; that if the heirs would stop talking about the note he would "right the wrong" he had done, etc.

If these statements were made by him the conclusion would naturally be that in the one case they were absolutely false or in the other that the note is a forgery.

Having seen, as I think we have, that there was at least some reason why Johns would naturally have desired that his grandson and granddaughter should share in his bounty, the remaining discussion relates to the testimony on handwriting.

I have given this branch of the case unusual attention, because I believe that the signature itself affords the best evidence as to its genuineness. To aid the court in studying the signature, many witnesses were called, and among them were some of the most celebrated handwriting experts of America. They expressed their opinions and gave their reasons therefor; they made analyses and microscopic studies; they produced enlarged photographic copies and compared the disputed writing with signatures admittedly genuine. As a result of their investigation, each came to a conclusion, the correctness of which he was positive and certain, and yet these conclusions, when confronting one another, were in most instances diametrically opposed.

To my mind the clearest, fairest and most scientific of all the professional expert witnesses was Daniel T. Ames. But I would not decide the case upon the opinion of any expert, because they are interested and biased witnesses, whose testimony under the law is to be taken with caution.

However, they have in the course of years and through much experience in the courts gathered a fund of information which must be conceded to be of inestimable value to a just and proper determination of any cause in which their testimony is relevant.

The testimony of Mr. Ames, exclusive of his opinions, taken in connection with the facts of the case, the signature itself, the paper on which it was written, the spasmodic movements of the writer, the general characteristics of Johns' writing and all the other points mentioned in the testimony, demonstrates to my mind, beyond question of a doubt, that the signature to the note is genuine. I have not the slightest doubt upon this subject. Mr. Eisenschimel, for the petitioners, testified to some 35 or 37 points of difference between the disputed signature and those admitted to be genuine. I have followed these points carefully, and do not find one that appeals to me as worthy of serious consideration. Eisenschimel, Kytka and Pierce pronounce it a drawing, and not a writing. Eisenschimel said it was a tracing, and that there was evidence of erasing. Under the microscopes produced in court by the experts, there cannot be found any evidence of drawing. The only thing that points to a tracing is a depression in the paper which is plainly visible from the back. This was undoubtedly produced by pressure upon the pen at the time the signature was written. A tracing would be much more marked and more easily distinguishable.

As to erasure, there is no evidence of it whatever even under the microscope. On the contrary, the lines in the paper remaining perfectly intact at the point where the erasure is said to have been made is the strongest evidence in refutation of erasure.

The signature, when placed under a microscope, reveals the spasmodic movements which characterize all the writings of G. W. Johns, and which no forger can imitate. Johns was tremulous with age, and his writings bear earmarks which place upon them the indelible stamp of the writer. These spasmodic movements cannot be simulated when they are not apparent to the naked eye. The exemplars which were used at the trial show the same features which appear in the disputed writing in such a marked degree as to leave no doubt as to the genuineness of the signature to the note. I am not unmindful that many worthy gentlemen have testified that this signature was not written by the same person who wrote the exemplars. With all due respect for their opinions, I am positive they are wrong.

It is impossible to touch upon the evidence taken at the trial by reason of its great length. It must suffice for me to say in conclusion that I have given the case mature and careful consideration, and particularly on account of the large sum of money involved as well as the charge of forgery which has been made. After a deliberation which fully satisfies me of the correctness of this decision, I must say that I have not the slightest doubt that the signature to the note is in the handwriting of G. W. Johns.

For this reason the prayer of the petitioners is denied. Elizabeth J. Gregory and George W. Gregory will be reinstated as executrix and executor respectively of the estate of G. W. Johns. Let orders be entered accordingly.

E. E. Gaddis, Judge.

TESTIMONY IS IN

Argument Commenced For the Contestants.

The Celebrated Johns Note Case Will Be Concluded on Saturday About Noon.

After our Thursday report of the proceedings in the Johns note case closed, Dr. Stevenson and B. F. Ready were put on as character witnesses for Frank Allen. Their evidence was cumulative and brought out nothing new. Both arrived at the conclusion that his general reputation is good because they never heard it discussed, and counsel for contestants claimed that such evidence is the very best kind of evidence.

Mr. DeLigne was put on the stand and the first question indicated that the purpose was to contradict all the witnesses who testified that George Gregory was in College City on the morning of February 19, 1900.

Mr. Grove L. Johnson objected on the ground that such testimony is not competent in rebuttal. He made a lengthy argument in support of his position. The objection was overruled.

Mr. De Ligne stated that he was in Woodland on February 19th and left for Sacramento on the 4 o'clock afternoon train. Witness had a talk with George Gregory between noon and 1 o'clock. The court would not require the witness to name the amount of the contingent fee he has in the case.

A. C. Huston was the next witness. He was uncertain as to dates, but he remembered when the petition for the removal of the executors was first read. Witness was of the impression that George W. Gregory was present.

Mrs. Polly Ann Friel was recalled and testified that she came from Arbuckle to Woodland on Sunday, February 18th. She saw George Gregory at the depot and again on the platform of the car after the train began to move. He had a hand bag and an umbrella. Witness was under the impression that Gregory went into the rear car.

R. Friel was the next witness. He said he was in Woodland on the 19th and saw Gregory before court at the Julian and again in court. He also saw him at the depot and on the platform of the car at Arbuckle, but was not in a position to see what he had in his hands.

Miss Lillie Brown was the next witness. Miss Brown testified that she saw Mr. Gregory in Woodland on Sunday, February 18th. She saw him go into the rear entrance of Feeny's saloon.

Chas. Allen was next called. He testified that he saw George Gregory in Woodland on February 19th, both morning and evening.

Tandy Allen was next called. He identified a letter received by him from George Gregory, but the court refused to admit the letter in evidence. Witness was in Woodland February 19th. Was told in the morning by Frank Allen of a conversation he had just held with George Gregory.

Harrison Eakle, who lives one and one-half miles north of Woodland, was the next witness. He did not recollect that George Gregory ever came to see him about Brown's mule.

Upon the conclusion of Mr. Eakle's examination the court ordered an adjournment until Friday morning at 9 o'clock.

TODAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

When court convened this morning counsel for contestant offered in evidence the deposition of W. M. Holloway taken on March 7th. An objection by Mr. Grove L. Johnson was overruled.

The purpose of introducing this deposition was to show that George Gregory was in College City on July 7, 1898, the date of the note, and therefore could not have been in Woodland.

A great deal of irrelevant matter was stricken out of the deposition, but all that portion tending to fix the date when George Gregory was in Justice Holloway's office was admitted.

Expert Eisenschimel was next called to the stand. In a lengthy and elaborate statement he attempted to controvert the testimony of Expert Ames in regard to the similarity of the letters G, W, J and H in the disputed signature to the same letters in the exemplars.

The three new exemplars, introduced while Expert Ames was on the stand, were also examined, with the aid of an instrument for measuring the angles of writing, with a view of showing, as the witness stated, "a wide deviation from the facts in Mr. Ames' testimony."

An objection by Mr. Grove L. Johnson brought out a ruling of the court to the effect that any new testimony given by witness must be confined to the three new exemplars. All other testimony must be in rebuttal.

The court also sustained an objection to testimony in regard to tracing. Under this ruling the testimony of Mr. Eisenschimel was much briefer than was anticipated.

In cross-examination Mr. Eisenschimel said there is an agreement that he is to receive $50 for the examination of documents, $50 a day for attendance in court, and expenses.

Byron Ball testified that he was in court when the petition for the removal of executors was first read. He saw George Gregory in court. Witness could not remember the date.

N. A. Hawkins and W. H. Grant were called in sur-rebuttal. Mr. Hawkins testified that the petition was read on the 19th and 26th of February. Mr. Grant was not allowed to testify that George Gregory was not in the courtroom on the morning of the 19th of February. Witness was of the opinion that both the petition and answer were read in court on February 26th. George Gregory also testified that the petition was read on the 19th. Witness denied that he had ever told anybody that his grandfather had not left him anything and that he could only get even by charging fees.

Wesley Wilson was the next witness. He testified that at the request of Mr Grove L. Johnson he had taken measurements of the Blue Goose premises. The west wall is 59 feet in length. South of that the board fence south is 28 feet long. From the corner to the opening it is 7 feet. Mr. Hiram Johnson objected. Mr. Grove L. Johnson stated that he expected to prove that a person walking on the opposite side of the street and slightly to the rear could not see a person enter the opening in the rear fence. The objection was overruled.

Judge Grant offered in evidence so much of page 269 of the blotter used in the court on February 19th as referred to the estate of G. W. Johns. He also offered so much of minutes on page 282 as related to proceedings in the estate on February 26th.

This concluded the testimony and the court enquired if attorneys desired to argue the case. Mr. Grove L. Johnson replied that attorneys for executors were willing to submit the case without argument. Mr. Hiram Johnson replied that attorneys for contestant prefer to argue the case.

After notifying counsel that each side will be limited to three hours, the court ordered a recess until half past 1 o'clock.

At the afternoon session Mr. De Ligne made the opening argument for the contestants. He concluded about 3 o'clock.

At the hour of going to press Mr. Grove L. Johnson is addressing the court in behalf of the executors. Judge Grant will close for the executors and Mr. Hiram Johnson will close for the contestants Saturday morning.

THE JOHNS NOTE.

Trial of an Alleged Forgery Case Commenced.

Experts Kytka and Eisenschimel on the Witness Stand Most of the Time Today.

The contest over the John estate was commenced this morning. There was a formidable array of counsel, but there were few people in the courtroom, other than those interested in the case.

Miss Mary Gregory was the only one present interested on the side of the executors. Tandy Allen, of the contestants, was also present, but Mrs. Friel was not there. Young Allen's father and uncle were also interested spectators.

Neither of the executors was present. J. C. Ball, A. A. DeLigne and Hiram Johnson were present as counsel for the contestants. N. A. Hawkins, W. H. Grant and Grove L. Johnson represented the executors. There were also present in the courtroom, D. P. Ames, an expert in handwriting, for the executors, and Experts Theodore Kytka and Carl Eisenschimel, who will testify for the contestants.

In order to understand the proceedings in this case a brief history of it is necessary. G. W. Johns died in November, 1898. He left a will naming his daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth Gregory, and her son, Geo. W. Gregory, as executors without bonds. By the terms of his will, property of the probable value of $100,000 was to be distributed equally among his children. No provision was made for Miss Mary Gregory and her brother, George W., grandchildren of the deceased. In June of the following year a note purporting to be executed by deceased in favor of Mary and George W. Gregory was presented and allowed by Mrs. Gregory, one of the executors, and after hearing testimony, the court approved the allowance of the claim.

On February 9, 1900, Tandy Allen, a grandson of the deceased, and Polly Ann Nancy Friel began a contest, disputing the claim, alleging that its allowance was fraudulent and the signature to the note a forgery. They also presented a petition asking the removal of the executors. The court made an order suspending the powers of the executors until the question of the genuineness of the signature of the note is determined, and appointing J. D. Lawson special administrator.

That was the status of the case when court convened this morning.

Judge Grant stated that Geo. W. Gregory and wife are detained at home on account of a very sick child. Their testimony may be necessary and it may not be. It may be necessary later to ask for a continuance until their attendance can be secured, but no continuance is asked

...until time. Judge Gaddis stated that he had notified attorneys on both sides that the testimony must all be in by next Saturday night. If the taking of testimony is not concluded by that time the case will have to go over until September, or to suit his convenience.

On motion of Judge J. C. Ball Hiram Johnson was entered as counsel for the contestants. On motion of N. A. Hawkins W. H. Grant and Grove L. Johnson were entered as associate counsel for the executors of the estate.

Judge Grant, Hiram Johnson and Grove L. Johnson made an argument in regard to the method of procedure. The point at issue seemed to be the advantage of the opening and closing argument. Attorneys for the executors claimed the right to present the claim as allowed by the court. Upon the contestants would rest the burden of proving that the claim is not a just or legal one, but that does not give them the right to close. The executors occupy the affirmative because they must make a prima facie case, showing that the claim had been presented and allowed by the executors and the court.

The court held that it is incumbent that the petitioners should open and close the case. Attorneys for the executors noted an exception to the ruling.

Mr. De Ligne offered in evidence the note, which he desired marked exhibit "A." He announced that in all there were 52 exhibits, including checks, agreements, receipts, leases, mortgages, etc. These were read and numbered by the clerk.

The first witness called was Expert Kytka. Mr. De Ligne conducted the examination. After the preliminary questions were asked and answered Mr. Kytka was handed the original note, which he identified. He then presented negatives of photographs of the note and all the various signatures of the deceased which had been offered as exhibits. These negatives were numbered from 68 to 57 inclusive. The witness next produced all the prints made from the negatives. Mr. Johnson objected to their introduction on the ground that the executors have not been furnished with a copy. The objection was overruled and Mr. Johnson noted an exception.

Witness next introduced a screen showing the enlarged signatures of the deceased, one supposed to have been written June 30, 1898, one on July 7th and another July 26th of the same year. The signature of July 7th is the note signature. The same signatures were exhibited on glass or porcelain.

Counsel for the executor objected to the introduction of these exhibits on the ground that the originals are the best evidence. The court overruled the objection, and an exception was noted. Witness explained the process of reproducing these photographs on various scales and claimed that they are exact copies.

Counsel for contestants wanted to withdraw witness for the present, to be recalled again as an expert in handwriting. Counsel for contestants objected, but the objection was overruled and another exception was noted. There was no cross-examination.

Expert Eisenschimel was next called. He testified that he had examined all the various exhibits and concluded that the signature to the note is a broad, clumsy forgery. He came to that conclusion because the signature shows none of the natural habits of the handwriting of the deceased. It contains not less than thirty-five indisputable points going to prove it a forgery. He found evidences of tracing in the heavy down strokes. Witness illustrated some of his methods of making examinations by blackboard drawings. He used a glass photograph for making examinations. Witness explained that three special strokes of the pen, in a changed position, were made to give the first downward stroke in the letter W the desired length. He said Mr. Johns wrote his signature, while the forgerer or simulator drew the signature. No man can write his signature twice alike, but there are certain characteristics found in all signatures written by the same person. Witness then analysed the signature, claiming that from beginning to end it showed none of the permanent habits of the signatures written by the deceased. Witness claimed that certain portions of J and O had been erased with a rubber. Before the expert's testimony was concluded the court ordered a recess until 1:30 o'clock.

At the afternoon session Mr. Eisenschimel again occupied the witness stand. He resumed his statement by correcting some errors in his testimony given in the morning. He concluded that it was impossible for G. W. Johns to have signed the note on account of one permanent habit. In all the signatures that are admitted to be genuine there are evidences of labored effort due to palsy, and these evidences are more palpable as the signatures progress, on account of loss of control of the nerves.

The witness focused a microscope upon the base of the letter W to show the three distinct divisions in finishing the first down stroke. He caused a ripple of laughter by remarking that it was very plain—to those who wanted to see. He criticised Expert Ames' position in attempting to look through the microscope. He said he persisted in standing in his own light, as though he did not wish to see.

During the course of the examination Judge Grant remarked that these divisions were too fine for his eye. "Yes, they are fine," replied Mr. Eisenschimel, "but it is a part of the duty of the expert to find them. Those who do not want to see them can shut one eye and sometimes both."

Mr. Johnson conducted the cross-examination. He requested the witness to put the 8 in exhibit 44 under the microscope. Mr. Johnson requested witness to say whether there is any difference in the formation of the letter 8 in exhibits 44 and 39. Witness answered that there is no difference. "Where were you born?" asked Mr. Johnson. "In Germany; I am an Austrian by birth, but an American, true as steel," replied witness.

Witness next selected an 8 in an admitted genuine signature that nearest resembled the 8 in the note signature, and put both under the microscope for the purpose of showing the difference in the efforts of producing them.

Witness said it made no difference in the appearance of writing on account of the pen or ink used, but the character of the paper might make some difference. No matter what the difficulties are under which a writer signs his name the characteristics of the writer will always crop out.

Witness explained that the signature to the note was made by tracing. A paper containing a genuine signature was procured and over this the note was laid and the tracing made.

Mr. Johnson concluded his cross-examination by asking if the health of the writer, the age, his condition as to having taken recent violent exercise made any difference as to the appearance of the writing. The witness answered yes as a general proposition.

The court ordered a recess of fifteen minutes.

THE JOHNS NOTE.

Contestants Conclude Their Expert Testimony.

Son-in-Law of Deceased Testified Executor Gregory Said Estate Owed Nothing.

When the DEMOCRAT'S Tuesday report of the proceedings in the Johns estate closed the examination of Expert Eisenschimel had just closed and he had been excused.

After a brief recess Mr. Eisenschimel asked attorneys for contestants to recall him that he might make a portion of his testimony clear. He was recalled and Mr. DeLigne asked him if he had not testified that the note signature had been traced from some genuine signature. The answer was in the affirmative. Witness was next asked if he could explain why the note signature differed in some respects from the signature from which it was traced. Mr. Johnson objected, and the objection was argued at length. The question was withdrawn and asked in another form. Mr. De Ligne wanted to know why, if the signature of the note was traced from a genuine signature, does it not contain the characteristics of Mr. Johns' genuine signatures. Mr. Johnson objected and the objection was overruled and an exception noted. The witness answered that it would be impossible for anybody but an expert forger to make a tracing without there appearing some discrepancies.

Mr. Kytka was recalled and testified that he is an expert in handwriting. He had examined the note and all the exemplars and had come to the conclusion that the party who wrote the fifty-two exemplars did not write any part of the signature to the note.

Mr. Kytka said that by examining the exemplars together he discovered a striking similarity among them, and all contained strong characteristics peculiar. But by comparing the note signature with any one of them there is a "discord of harmony," which shows that it does not belong among them. Some of Mr. Kytka's illustrations were decidedly original. In pointing out the difference in the alleged forgery and the genuine signatures, he declared that it "is like a negro among a lot of white people."

The witness made an analysis of the signature on the note along the same lines as the analysis made by Mr. Eisenschimel, and as a rule he arrived at the same conclusions.

Mr. Kytka said that Mr. Johns was physically incapable of writing a signature so symmetrical and in which the ink is so equally distributed as it is in the note signature. He could not do it because all other signatures show that he could not control his pen. For this reason he frequently made breaks in a letter, but when he patched such breaks it was for the purpose of making it plain what letter he intended to write. Judge Gaddis took a hand in the examination and asked a great many questions about curves, slants, shades, breaks, patches and many other peculiarities about the note signature.

For fully half an hour no questions were asked by any of the attorneys, but the court was very busy making careful examinations with the aid of a glass.

Witness picked up receipt numbered 23 and pointed out the effects of an attempt to make a tracing. Somebody, he said, had been experimenting. When asked to explain, witness replied that Judge Ball would do that.

The witness concluded his direct testimony with the remark that "I might explain curves, slants, downward and upward strokes until your honor had the headache, but it is not necessary."

In cross-examination Mr. Kytka said he was born in Austria and is 37 years of age. He first testified in Chicago in the John Martin case. Mr. Kytka was led into a relation of the various incidents of his life.

While Mr. Johnson was trying to learn if the witness had ever taken any lessons in English letter writing or as to how to detect forgeries, some very amusing passages occurred between the witness and attorney. Mr. Johnson wanted witness to name the books he had read on the subject. Several were enumerated and witness raised a laugh when he said "I have your friend Ames' book, but I have not read it."

Mr. Kytka was asked to explain how the note was made. He said the body of the note was first written. Some time afterward the note was placed over a genuine signature, which was traced by some pointed instrument. Then the forger sat down and with pen and ink attempted to fill in the tracing. The tracing was not perfect.

A long discussion ensued as to whether there is a break in the letter G as it appears in exemplar No. 23, during which all the counsel in the case gathered around the court and expert. Witness said there is no evidence of retracing in the letters G and W. But there is evidence that a needle has been run over the entire signature.

Upon the conclusion of Mr. Kytka's examination the court ordered an adjournment until 9 o'clock Wednesday morning.

TODAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

When court convened this morning Professor George A. Pierce, principal of the Woodland Business College, was called to the stand. He testified that he has been a teacher of penmanship and has given considerable attention to a study of the methods of detecting forgeries.

Witness had examined the signature on the Johns note. He concluded that the signature to the note and the signatures to the exemplars in evidence were not written by the same person.

Mr. Pierce analysed many of the signatures, much after the same manner as previous experts, and at considerable length, and in nearly every instance arriving at the same conclusion. The witness was of the opinion that a great many of the strokes in the signature to the note that are ordinarily upward strokes were evidently made with a downward stroke, indicating that the lines were traced. The court enquired if there might not appear in photos of abnormal size features that are not to be found in the original. The witness thought such a thing possible.

Mr. Pierce expressed the opinion that the signature to the note should be characterized as a drawing rather than as a writing. As usual the witness was given free rein to make his explanations and about the only questions asked were those propounded by the court.

The witness referred to the evidences of palsy in all the signatures that are admittedly genuine. This characteristic does not appear in any letter in the note signature.

The cross-examination was conducted by Mr. Johnson. Witness expressed the opinion that Mr. Johns' habit was to complete a letter once commenced without taking the pen from the paper.

Witness was positive in the opinion that an upward stroke cannot be shaded to the right of the vertical. Mr. Johnson made a persistent effort to get a direct answer to the question, "Would the character of a pen used affect the appearance of the writing?" but was only partially successful. The same question was asked concerning the character of the ink and paper, but the answers were not altogether satisfactory to counsel. Considerable time was spent in getting an expression of opinion as to whether the initial stroke of the letter G is to the right or the left of the vertical. Witness thought that the whole of the note signature was traced. Upon the conclusion of the cross-examination of Mr. Pierce a recess of fifteen minutes was ordered.

After recess E. T. Huston was called to the stand. He testified that he knew G. W. Johns for thirty years. Had business relations with him. Paid him money and received receipts. Is familiar with his signature. Witness examined the note signature and declared that in his opinion it is not the signature of G. W. Johns.

Mr. Johnson asked but one question: "Had you ever seen the note before today?" "No, sir; I have not," was the reply.

A. White, a Colusa county farmer, who knew G. W. Johns intimately for twenty-two years, was the next witness. Mr. White was a lessee of the deceased for eighteen years. Had business with him in the year in which he died.

Mr. White examined the note signature. He asked to see the signatures to the exemplars. Mr. Johnson objected. The court overruled the objection. After the examination by Mr. White he stated that the signature on the note did not seem familiar to him, as he remembered the signature of G. W. Johns. Mr. White's cross-examination was brief. He had never seen the note or any of the exemplars before.

At ten minutes past 11 o'clock, on account of the absence of witnesses, the court ordered a recess until 1:30 o'clock.

At the afternoon session Professor McConnell, by consent, was called for the executors, out of order, because he wanted to go to San Francisco this afternoon.

He testified that he has been cashier of the Yolo County Savings Bank for nine years, was postmaster for five years and a school teacher for ten years.

Johns was a depositor in the bank until 1896. Witness compared signatures on the note and exemplars and expressed the opinion that the note signature is genuine.

On cross-examination Professor McConnell said he knew that Mr. Johns became feeble in health after 1896. He thought, however, that the note signature showed the general characteristics of Johns' handwriting.

Judge Grant objected to the examination of the witness on the enlarged signatures. He thought the examination ought to be on the originals. The objection was overruled.

Witness admitted that there is a dissimilarity in the three enlarged signatures shown on the screen.

George Hodge was the next witness. For some time he was a renter from G. W. Johns. Paid rent once a month and saw him write the receipts. Johns was in feeble health in 1898. When Johns signed his name his hand trembled. His eyesight was not good. After an examination of the note witness expressed the opinion that the signature is not genuine.

On cross-examination witness said he saw the original note for the first time today. He had seen a photograph of it before.

Chas. Allen, father of one of the contestants, and son-in-law of the deceased, was the next witness. He knew the deceased for thirty-five years. During the last years of his life he gradually grew feebler. Witness knows Geo. W. Gregory, one of the executors. Met him in Judge Ball's office in company with others interested in the estate. Gregory heard witness say the estate owed nothing. When will was opened witness had conversation with Gregory, who wanted to know if all were satisfied with the executors. Gregory said the estate owed nothing and could be settled up quickly. Mr. Johnson objected on the ground that any statements of Gregory are irrelevant because he is neither a witness nor a party to the suit. A long argument ensued. The court allowed the testimony as it went to the validity of the note.

At a later time Gregory told witness that if he had known his grandfather was not going to leave him anything he would have had a farm in Missouri. He supposed that nothing was left him for the reason that his grandfather expected him to make a good fee out of the administration of the estate.

Witness said he told Gregory, after the note had been presented, that it was fraudulent, and if he attempted to rob witness' children he would send him to the State prison.

Mr. Allen was under cross-examination when this report closed.

THE JOHNS NOTE.

The Contestants May Close This Afternoon.

Cumulative Testimony that George Gregory Repeatedly Stated that the Estate Owed Nothing.

When the DEMOCRAT's Wednesday account of the proceeding of the contest in the Johns estate closed, Chas. Allen had been turned over to Mr. Johnson for cross-examination.

Mr. Allen said he has no interest in the Johns estate. His wife is dead and his two children, Tandy and Borris, will inherit her interest.

Witness could not remember of having held a conversation with Stephen O. Brown in Arbuckle in February of this year. He denied having said he would send George Gregory across the bay. Witness denied having had a conversation with Mrs. Elizabeth Gregory on the morning the will was opened, at the Johns' residence, in which he expressed surprise that George Gregory did not have $10,000 interest in the estate. Witness also denied that he made the same statement to Mrs. Gregory on the day the will was probated, while the two were walking across the courtyard together.

Witness could not remember whether or not Mr. Hawkins or Judge Gaddis asked Gregory on the day the will was probated if the estate was in debt. He was positive, however, that Gregory stated that the funeral expenses were all the indebtedness of the estate.

Witness declared that he has not changed his determination expressed to Mr. Gregory when he told him he would send him to the penitentiary if he robbed the estate. The desire to do that is growing stronger on him every day. Witness said it was the understanding of all interested in the estate that Judge Ball was to be employed. He afterwards learned in Arbuckle that the executors had employed N. A. Hawkins.

Frank Allen, of Shasta, a brother of the preceding witness, was next called. He has known George W. Gregory for fifteen years. Last January witness had a conversation with Gregory in which the latter said that Charlie (meaning Charlie Allen) had jumped him again about the note; that he wanted no trouble with him, as he was drinking; that if Charlie would stop talking about the note he would right the wrong he had done, that the note would not appear again and the estate would soon be settled up. On the following day, going north on the train, Gregory again said the estate would soon be settled up, and that he thought the Corning land ought to be sold. Mr. Johnson moved that the testimony in regard to the conversation on the train be stricken out. The testimony was stricken out. Witness had another conversation with Gregory on the 19th of February in a backroom of the Hotel Julian, in which Gregory stated he was not chicken-hearted and did not have cold feet. He said he had put in the note, and if the heirs would allow it to go through he would give Mrs. Friel, Tandy and Burrill Allen each $2000.

In cross-examination witness said he is a land dealer and has resided in Redding three years, and was a sporting man before he went there. Had been a sporting man for twenty years, and had also been in the saloon business in Arbuckle for two years.

Witness related the circumstances under which he came to Woodland during the trial of the case of Jerry Friel against the estate. He was not a witness in the case, and only came at the request of his brother.

Mr. Johnson made the witness repeat the various places in which he has resided for the last twenty or thirty years, and his occupation in the meantime. It developed that witness had lived in Nevada, Washington, Oregon and in Stonyford, Arbuckle, Redding, Colusa, Sacramento, San Francisco, Santa Rosa, Antioch and other places in California.

Witness stated that he did not come to Woodland expressly to assist in the proceedings against Gregory, but since he has been here he assisted in preparing the case for the contestants.

During the cross-examination witness mentioned the name of Ben Meyers as one who heard the conversation between witness and Gregory. Mr. Johnson enquired if Meyers was in the courtroom. Upon receiving an affirmative answer he requested the court to exclude him from the courtroom. The request brought an objection from Mr. Hiram Johnson. The court tried to stop the discussion by asking Mr. Myers if he would just as leave go out of the courtroom. Mr. Grove L. Johnson insisted on reading from the codes to show that he was right. "Oh, we will concede that for once the counsel was right," said Mr. Hiram Johnson. "I call attention of the court to the remark of counsel," said Mr. Grove L. Johnson. Judge Gaddis directed both attorneys to stop wrangling and the incident closed.

"Have you any contract with the contestants as to compensation in the case?" asked Mr. Johnson. "Mr. Friel, Tandy Allen and Charles Allen told me they would do the right thing by me," was the answer.

Witness declared he is paying his own way and since he began to assist in the case he has spent about $300. Witness has been interested in the case since last February.

Ben Meyers was next called to the stand. He is a resident of Trinity county, but at present is stopping temporarily in Woodland.

Witness overheard the conversation between Geo. Gregory and Frank Allen, when Gregory offered to allow three of the heirs $2000 each if they would allow the note to go through.

Under cross-examination Mr. Meyers gave an account of his movements from the time of his birth in Solano county until the present time.

Witness said he came to Woodland last January on his way to Cape Nome. He stopped in Yolo county to visit relatives. In the meantime he had visited Winters, Elmira, Willows and Sulphur. Occasionally played cards for money, but did not consider it his business. In the meantime he had also sold two oil claims belonging to Mrs. Frank Allen to his people in Woodland.

The court at 6 o'clock, without the cross-examination of Mr. Meyers having been concluded, ordered an adjournment until Thursday at 9 o'clock.

TODAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

When court was called to order this morning Mr. Johnson made a request that the expert testimony of Judge Ruggles and Mr. Ames be heard at once in order to save expense. Mr. Johnson, for the contestants, objected and the court expressed the opinion that it would be better to proceed in the regular and usual manner.

The cross-examination of Witness Meyers was resumed. Mr. Johnson asked a great many questions the purpose of which was to show the relations of witness with Frank Allen and wife.

Witness was induced to repeat the conversation which he overheard between Gregory and Allen, in reference to the note. Witness first spoke to Allen about what he had overheard. He told Allen about it in Arbuckle in the latter part of March. Witness next told Judge Ball about the conversation.

Witness also repeated his testimony to Attorneys Johnson and Deligne, in the presence of the experts and others.

In redirect examination witness said he is a laborer by occupation and that he only plays cards for a pastime. He named the places where he has worked and men and corporations by whom he has been employed.

On recross-examination witness testified that Judge Ball has paid him $10 on account of witness fees.

Judge A. C. Ruggles was next called. He knew G. W. Johns for two years during his residence in Woodland. After an examination of the note witness declared that in his opinion the note signature is not the signature of G. W. Johns. Witness testified that in his capacity as notary he transacted considerable business for deceased. He drew the deed by which the deceased conveyed a house and lot in this city to his granddaughter, Miss Mary Gregory, also a bill of sale by which he gave her certain household property. Deceased told witness he wanted to give her something for her services. Mr. Johnson moved that the testimony in regard to this conversation be stricken out. The court so ordered. Witness identified the deed he drew at the request of the deceased. The deed was admitted in evidence.

Witness was asked if any money passed at the time the deed was executed. There was an objection, which was argued at length by the Johnsons. The objection was overruled, and witness replied that he saw no money change hands. The interlineations in the deed were made by witness at the request of the deceased. After the deed was executed the deceased retained possession of it.

When Mr. Johns signed the note his hand was tremulous. He was careful in his business habits. Mr. Johnson objected to a question as to his habits in regard to contracting debts. The objection was sustained.

Under cross-examination Judge Ruggles admitted that he was neither the agent, collector, manager nor the confidential adviser of the deceased. Witness also admitted that he had a conversation in his office with Judge Grant in which he told him he could not express an opinion as to the validity of the signature. Witness was shown a bond for a deed, executed by the deceased. The witness identified the body of the bond as in his writing and the signature as that of Mr. Johns. The instrument was executed at Mr. Johns' residence. Mr. Johns wrote his name while lying on a lounge and with the paper resting on a book.

Witness got his impression that the signature to the note was not genuine because it lacks the general characteristics of Mr. Johns' handwriting.

Witness presumed that he might have said to Mrs. Gregory, at the time he put his name to one of the instruments he had prepared for him: "It is wonderful how well he can write."

Witness was shown a letter which he said he wrote to G. W. Gregory at the request of the deceased. In answer to Mr. Hiram Johnson witness said he expressed no opinion as to the validity of the note to attorneys on both sides. On recross-examination he said he did not express a positive opinion to either Judge Grant or Mr. Hawkins, but he had told Mr. Hawkins that his testimony would not do his side of the case any good.

J. M. Bedell was the first witness called after recess. He testified that in January, 1899, he had a conversation with G. W. Gregory concerning the Johns estate.

A. H. Pratt was present and overheard the conversation at Gregory's ranch between witness and Gregory. The latter told witness that the Johns estate owed nothing except funeral expenses.

Witness told Charlie Allen about the conversation some time last winter. He has had no business relations with Allen, but is intimate with him. Witness volunteered the statement to Allen.

Mr. Bedell was asked a great many questions for the evident purpose of testing the reliability of his memory.

A. H. Pratt, of San Francisco, an insurance agent, was the next witness. He corroborated the previous witness in regard to the statement made to Mr. Bedell by Mr. Gregory, to the effect that the Johns estate was not in debt. The cross-examination brought out nothing new.

J. W. Friel was the next witness. He is the son of one of the contestants. Witness has known G. W. Gregory ever since he can recollect. Witness was present when the will was probated and heard Gregory say that the estate owed no debts except funeral expenses. The cross-examination was brief.

Tandy Allen, one of the contestants was called. He testified that he has sixth interest in the Johns estate. Witness has known George Gregory ever since he can remember. On the day the Jerry Friel case was compromised he heard Gregory say: "I am willing to right all the wrongs I have done and will settle up the estate as soon as I can. Your father has been giving me the devil and I won't stand it any longer. If he does it again I will have him arrested. I don't want him to talk to me when he is drinking."

Witness first learned of the note when a partial distribution was asked for.

The court ordered the usual noon recess.

The examination of Tandy Allen was resumed after the noon recess. The question, "Did Gregory inform you of the existence of the note?" provoked a long discussion. The motion to strike out was at first granted, but after further argument the court reversed the ruling.

Mr. Grove Johnson cross-examined the witness at great length, requiring him to repeat all his direct testimony with great particularity. Witness could not remember whom he first told about his conversation with Gregory. He said that his memory as to faces is good, but is very uncertain as to names and dates.

W. C. Boyd, a Colusa farmer, who has resided on the Johns home place in Colusa about fifteen years, was the next witness. Mr. Boyd said he was present and overheard the conversation between Tandy Allen and George Gregory, in which the latter said he was willing to right all wrongs and settle up the estate as quickly as possible, but he would not stand any more of Charles Allen's abuse. Witness and his father rented land from Mr. Johns in 1885 and ever afterwards until the time of his death. The business was transacted by Mr. Johns in person until the time of his death.

Under cross-examination witness said he and Gregory are on friendly terms. They never had any difficulty. So far as witness knew Gregory had nothing to do with the management of Mr. Johns' farms until after Mr. Johns' death.

Witness talked with Tandy Allen on Tuesday evening about the conversation between Allen and Gregory. He afterwards went up to Mr. DeLigne's room and told the attorneys all he knew about the matter.

Witness said his father first leased land from Mr. Johns in 1893. On re-direct examination Mr. Hiram Johnson explained to witness that in his direct examination he stated that he had first leased land from Mr. Johns fifteen years ago, and in cross-examination declared that he had been on the farm only seven years. The witness was much confused about dates and all the efforts of the court and attorneys could not extricate him.

Randolph Friel, husband of one of the contestants, was the next witness. He has lived in northwestern Yolo for seven years.

Witness was present when the will was opened. On the way from the courtroom across the courtyard Gregory said the estate is not in debt except for funeral expenses. Afterward Gregory said to witness, "Let's keep this out of court." Witness said if the estate is not in debt there will be no necessity for going into court.

On November 28th witness had another conversation with Gregory, at the Johns house, now owned by Miss Gregory, in which he stated that he would settle up the estate as quickly as possible. Witness saw Mr. Johns last about June 3d. He was quite feeble and nervous and his eyesight seemed to be bad.

Witness heard Gregory say: "I expected grandfather to leave me something, but as he did not, I suppose he expected me to make something out of the administration of the estate."

The examination of Friel had just been concluded when this report closed and Mrs. Friel had been called to the stand.

THE JOHNS NOTE.

Tranquillity Among the Lawyers Once More Restored.

Expert Daniel T. Ames on Stand All Day in Behalf of the Executors.

When the DEMOCRAT'S Thursday report of the proceedings in the Johns estate closed, Mrs. Polly Ann Friel had been called to the stand. She testified that her father was 84 years of age on the 13th of October and he died on the 26th of November, 1898.

She visited him on the 27th of August, 1898, and found him in very feeble health. She corroborated the testimony of her husband in regard to the conversation during which Gregory stated that the estate owed nothing.

Upon the conclusion of the direct examination of Mrs. Friel the court ordered a recess. When court again convened cross-examination of witness was waived.

W. A. Boyd, who resides near College City, was the next witness. He has farmed the land of the Johns estate since 1883. Witness said that Mr. Johns was his uncle. Witness was asked what were the habits of Mr. Johns as to contracting debts. Mr. Johnson objected, and the court said that unless some authority was shown he would sustain the objection. Attorneys for contestants noted an exception. Witness stated that there are about 1600 acres in the Johns farm and there are three renters. There was no cross-examination.

A. White was recalled. He has been farming on the Johns estate since 1876. While Mr. Johns was on the farm he collected his own rents. On one occasion Mr. Gregory acted as agent for deceased. He went to Colusa and had a check for $1500 cashed, paying $600 to witness. For thirteen years witness and partner have farmed about 1000 acres. The Boyds have farmed the balance.

Mr. Johns made a business of lending his surplus money. So far as witness knew, Mr. Gregory never transacted any of the business except in the instance mentioned above. The court would not permit the witness to repeat what deceased stated to him about the amount of money he had on hand in July, 1898. Deceased had between 4000 and 5000 sacks of wheat, worth about $10,000. There was no cross-examination.

Jerry Friel was recalled. He stated that he farmed the Johns Tehama ranch for the deceased for thirty-eight months prior to his death. Always transacted business with Mr. Johns while he was alive. Witness farmed part of the home place for fourteen years, prior to going to Tehama county.

L. M. Clark was the next witness. He lives near Dunnigan and knew deceased for twenty-five years. Had business relations with him. Lived on an adjoining farm. In all business transactions with witness Mr. Johns attended to his own business. The cross-examination was brief and developed nothing important.

Upon the conclusion of Mr. Clark's testimony the contestants rested.

In behalf of the executors, Judge Grant offered in evidence the claim of G. W. Gregory and Mary Gregory, presented to Elizabeth Gregory June 9th, and allowed by her at that time, also the endorsement of approval of the claim June 9th, and notice of filing of the claim on the same date. Mr. Hiram Johnson objected and the court over[illegible] objection.

[illegible] petition of Tandy J. Allen, B. F. [illegible] Polly Ann Friel for partial [illegible], dated May 18th, also the [illegible] the court fixing the time for [illegible] the petition were offered in evidence. Mr. Hiram Johnson objected. After [illegible] discussion the petition was withdrawn for the present.

[illegible] T. Ames, an expert examiner of [illegible] handwriting, was next [illegible] he has followed that profession for [illegible] years, and for twenty years was editor of the Penman's Journal. Witness has testified in Fair will contest, Davis will contest and a dozen or more big cases in this State. Was also a witness in the Molineux and three other cases in New York. Witness has also been employed by the government in many important cases, including the Morey letter. Witness has also published a work on disputed writing, has testified in 1200 cases in court and has been engaged in many more litigated. Witness considers himself an expert in ink, paper and the use of pens, and is thoroughly familiar with the use of a microscope.

Witness stated that he had examined the note and the exemplars for the purpose of determining whether or not the signature to the note is genuine. Witness examined the note with unusual care because his first impression was that the signature was not genuine.

After a more thorough examination witness became convinced that the same absurdities and peculiarities appear in the note signature as are found in the admittedly genuine signatures. Witness heard the testimony of Experts Eisenschimel and Kytka, and afterwards made a further examination, particularly of the photographs.

Mr. Johnson offered in evidence a power of attorney executed by Mr. Johns in favor of Henry Gregory. It was shown to witness, who stated that he had examined it. The witness expressed the positive opinion that G. W. Johns signed the note.

Witness proceeded to give the reasons that influenced his opinion. He stated that he found something abnormal in the signature and devoted much time to an effort to discover the cause. He found the paper soft and pulpy, as a result of which the lines have a ragged appearance.

Witness entered into an elaborate analysis of an admittedly genuine signature, showing the peculiarities of Mr. Johns' writing, pointing out all the absurdities, which he alleged were due to spasmodic motions which Mr. Johns could not control. It would be impossible for a man not in Mr. Johns' physical condition to produce these absurdities. He compared these absurdities with certain characteristics in the disputed signature, arriving at the conclusion that they were all written by the same hand and that any apparent difference in appearance is due to paper, ink and conditions under which they were written.

At this point Mr. Ames was interrupted to permit George Hodge, a previous witness, to examine and identify three receipts for rent, given to him by Mr. Johns. After looking at them he declared that he saw Mr. Johns write the signatures.

When an attempt was made to offer them in evidence there was trouble. Mr. Hiram Johnson wanted time to examine them. He asked Mr. Hodge a number of questions which indicated that he was suspicious about the receipts. Mr. Hodge said he gave a book of receipts to Judge Grant. There were some blanks in it. Mr. Johnson demanded that the book be produced. Judge Grant said he had the book, but would not produce it except on the order of the court. The court thought the contestants were entitled to see it and Judge Grant handed it over. Mr. Grove Johnson objected to remarks of counsel, as he thought them a reflection on Judge Grant. Mr. Hiram Johnson disclaimed anything of the kind. Judge Grant remarked that he did not see how the remarks could be construed in any other manner than as a reflection upon him. Mr. Hiram Johnson again made a disclaimer and Mr. Grove Johnson arose to make some reply, but Judge Gaddis refused to hear any more and ordered all attorneys to sit down. After Mr. Hodge had testified that he wrote the body of the three receipts he was permitted to retire.

Judge Grant took the stand and testified that with the exception of the time the receipt book was in the possession of Expert Ames, it had been in his exclusive charge since he obtained it from Mr. Hodge. None of the receipts had been altered and he tore the three in question from the book for the purpose of disputing an allegation made by an expert for the contestants.

Expert Ames testified that the book was in his possession about three weeks. He returned it to Judge Grant in person on Monday. While the book was in his possession he did not make a mark on any of the receipts with any instruments. Mr. Ames said he designated to Judge Grant some of the receipts in the book that would overthrow the allegation of the expert on the other side.

Mr. Grove Johnson then offered the receipts in evidence, but Mr. Hiram Johnson objected and asked to be allowed until Friday morning to examine them. The court thought the request reasonable and allowed it.

An adjournment was then taken until Friday at 9 A. M.

TODAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

When court convened this morning there were no traces of the trouble between counsel and experts which was the sensational feature which closed Thursday's session. The attorneys were all apparently in a good humor, and no allusion was made to the unpleasant episode that followed the offer of three additional receipts not heretofore numbered among the exemplars. No time was lost in getting down to business. Expert Ames at once took the witness stand and resumed his comparison of the note signature with signatures that are admitted to be genuine. According to the expert's theory every abnormal form, every absurdity, the result of spasmodic effort, and every characteristic due to inability to control his nerves found in genuine signatures are found in the note signature.

The court enquired if the expert could find in the genuine signatures any of the so-called spasmodic angles in any of the downward strokes. Expert Ames took exemplars 44 and 46 and pointed out a great many instances in which he contended that the spasmodic angles occurred in the downward stroke. He declared that a great many of these peculiarities cannot be observed except enlarged, as in this instance, nearly 1000 times.

Mr. Ames contended that the photographs are unfair because the note signature was written on soft, pulpy paper, while the other two signatures with which the note signature is compared written on a much better quality of paper and upon which the ink did not spread so much.

Many strokes in the note signature which Experts Kytka and Eisenschimel declared had been retouched, Mr. Ames said furnished the strongest evidence of having been made by Johns because these absurdities are the result of spasmodic motions which Johns could not control. He never duplicated. Absurdities were pointed out in No. 46 which Mr. Ames said could not be found in any other signature.

Expert Ames said that allegations of tracing had been made, and yet every effort of experts for contestants has been to show that the note signature does not conform with any signature admitted to be genuine.

Exemplars 44 and 46 were selected by expert to show that there is no other signature in all the collection that either of them would cover.

Witness declared that there are no indications of retracing or retouching in the note signature. The ink on good paper will dry on the surface. On poor paper it will sink and loosen and swell the fiber.

The court asked if there is not a greater degree of symmetry in the letters G and W in the disputed signature than is found in any of the exemplars. Witness answered in the affirmative, but attributed the fact to the quality of the pen, ink and paper. The witness analyzed nearly all the signatures photographed together on a big card.

Mr. Ames used a microscope which multiplies 400 times for the court's examination of the note signature as regards the first downward stroke of the W at its base, and the first downward stroke of the J. He contended that there are no evidences of retracing in the first or of an erasure in the second.

Mr. Grove Johnson called attention to a number of Gs in the exemplars and in each instance the witness declared the letters were as symmetrical, and in some instances more so, than the same letter in the disputed signature.

At 11 o'clock the court ordered a recess of fifteen minutes.

After recess Mr. Grove Johnson asks the court to examine the letter J in exhibit 16, to see the effects of a paroxysm at the base of the letter.

"In the dissimilarity of all Johns' signatures," said the witness, "there are characteristics which make his writing decidedly personal and give it an individuality against the world."

Witness called attention to the connection from the staff of the h to the second stroke, which experts had alleged never occurred in any of Johns' genuine signatures. He went over a great many of the exemplars to show that similar connections occur numerous times.

Witness explained the usual methods of retracing and the methods used to detect tracing. He declared that the quality of the paper, ink and pen would certainly make a difference in the appearance of writing.

The witness concluded his direct testimony with the positive opinion that the note signature bears no evidence of having been traced, and there is no evidence that an eraser has ever been used on the paper.

At the afternoon session Mr. Grove L. Johnson again offered in evidence the three receipts given by Mr. Johns to George Hodge, and which came so near precipitating a row Thursday evening. Attorneys for contestants made no objection and the receipts were admitted.

Mr. Hiram Johnson conducted the cross-examination. In reply to his questions Mr. Ames said he had two contracts, both verbal and made with Judge Grant. The first one covered an examination and a report on the note and the exemplars. The second was to give testimony at $60 per diem. Witness had no contingent interest in the note or the result of the trial.

Mr. Johnson tried to get witness to admit that at first he declared the disputed signature a forgery, but Mr. Ames insisted that he had only stated that his first impression was not favorable, but as soon as he began to study it his impressions changed.

Mr. Johnson led witness through many of the cases in which he had testified in this State and tried to get him to admit that he had frequently changed his mind. Witness said he had never changed his opinion but twice.

Mr. Grove Johnson objected to audible remarks made by Expert Eisenschimel. The court called the expert to order and warned him not to repeat the offense.

The passages between Mr. Johnson and the witness were at times very peppery. Both were on their mettle. Questions were fired at the witness with great rapidity, and he answered with equal vigor.

The cross-examination was going on when this report closed.

THE JOHNS NOTE.

The Expert Testimony Has All Been Heard.

Court Adjourns at Three O'clock and the Case Goes Over Until Tuesday, May 29th.

The cross-examination of Expert Ames was going on when the DEMOCRAT's Friday report of the proceedings in the Johns estate closed.

Mr. Johnson had witness analyze the disputed signature and point out all the evidences of spasmodic motion.

Witness said he observed no evidences of Mr. Johns' tremulousness in the letters G and W in the disputed signature, because the spread of the ink, owing to the poor quality of the paper, destroyed such evidence.

Mr. Johnson enquired if there was no equal amount of evidence of spasmodic effort in the disputed signature and exemplars Nos. 44 and 46. "No," replied the witness, "and I do not believe the signatures were selected so that there should be."

This brought Mr. Johnson to his feet, and he insisted with some vehemence that the witness had no right to intimate that the signatures were selected with the idea that they bear more evidence of dissimilarity with the disputed signature than do any of the other exemplars.

At 3 o'clock a recess of fifteen minutes was ordered.

Witness resumed by again pointing out the spasmodic movements in the disputed signature.

All the exemplars on the big card were pointed out and analyzed and the witness was requested to designate particular letters in them which were similar to the same letters in the disputed signature.

Witness next pointed out how in exemplar 50 the ink had run into the hair lines. This was due to the quality of the paper and, though the paper of the exemplar was somewhat better than that of the disputed signature, it illustrated the same phenomenon, that is, showed the same ink-running irregularities.

At this point court ordered a recess until tomorrow.

At the close Mr. G. L. Johnson made the request that as it would be impossible to finish the case tomorrow, the case should continue only up to 3 o'clock, so as to give those from Sacramento a chance to catch the afternoon train. The court so ordered. He also requested that the case be taken up again next week. This the court refused unless the consent of counsel in the cases on the calendar for next week be obtained. Mr. Johnson stated that the defense had at least three more experts to testify and also several other witnesses, including Mr. George Gregory, and that the case would consequently take considerable more time.

TODAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

This morning when court opened Judge Gaddis stated that at 3 o'clock this afternoon the case would go over until next Tuesday at 9 A. M. Counsel stipulated that the case would go on Wednesday, that being a holiday.

The cross-examination of Expert Ames was resumed. He began by saying that he saw no indication of the use of a blotter on the note. Said he had never before formed or expressed an opinion as to the probability of the use of a blotter on the note. He examined the Becker-Creegan draft. Used photographs made by Mr. Kutka. These photographs did not bring out anything not shown in the originals.

It is not possible for an unskilled person to trace and reproduce a signature exactly. Witness again went over and explained the absurdities in the disputed signature. The note was soiled and bore evidence of much handling when first handed to witness. Witness was not allowed to repeat the conversation between himself and Judge Grant.

G. W. Bush, cashier of the Bank of Yolo, was the next witness. He examined the note and expressed the opinion that it is genuine. He pointed out four features that he believed to be characteristic of Mr. Johns' writing. Witness testified that Mr. Johns did business with the Bank of Yolo and he was familiar with his signature.

Chas. Richmond, assistant cashier of the Bank of Yolo, was the next witness. His testimony was substantially the same as that of Mr. Bush. The cross-examination of this witness was unimportant.

N. A. Hawkins was next called to the witness stand. The most important point in his testimony was the declaration that he was present when the will of Mr. Johns was probated; that he asked questions of George W. Gregory and did not hear him say anything about the debts of the estate.

Mr. Hawkins went over the history of the proceedings in the administration of the estate, so far as they had come under his observation as attorney for the executors. Witness was not allowed to testify that he wrote G. W. Gregory he need not come to Woodland on the 19th of February and received a reply that he would not be here.

Witness identified the first annual account of the executors in the Johns estate and fixed the date set for hearing.

Mrs. Ella Graham, nee Kellogg, of Cloverdale, testified that she knew deceased in Colusa county. When he moved to Woodland overheard him ask Mary Gregory to come and live with and keep house for him. He visited San Jose and other places and finally decided on Woodland. Mr. Johns told Mary Gregory if she would live with him he would surprise somebody one of these days.

Mr. Johns asked witness to come to Woodland and live with him and Mary Gregory. Witness accepted the invitation and lived with them for some time. Heard Mr. Johns say Mary was good to him and he would do right by her if she lived with him until he died. Witness knew that George W. Gregory transacted business for his grandfather.

Mrs. Rose Torrey, of Grass Valley, testified along the same lines, corroborating much of Mrs. Graham's testimony.

Henry Gregory, father of George Gregory, was on the stand when the noon recess was ordered, at which time we were compelled to close our report for today.

THE JOHNS NOTE.

The Attorneys for the Executors Rest Their Case.

Many Witnesses Testify That Frank Allen's Reputation for Truth and Honesty is Good.

When our Wednesday's report of the proceedings in the Johns note case closed G. W. Gregory was still under cross-examination. He stated that he showed the note to his sister and Mr. Hawkins on the 3d or 4th of June and that his mother first saw it on the day of the petition for a partial distribution of the estate. He does not recollect that he ever received a letter from Teddy Allen requesting him to petition for a partial distribution. Could not recall that any of the heirs ever said to him that they were hard up and would like to have some money on account. He denied ever having told Mr. Mitchell that the old man had left him nothing by the will and that all he would get out of it were his fees as executors.

On redirect examination witness testified that he never asked his grandfather for pay for his services, as he had confidence that he would do the right thing when he got ready. Referring to his testimony on cross-examination that he gave his wife money on July 7, 1898, he said he received a letter from her asking for money. He explained that he had not told anybody of the existence of the note prior to the dates named because his grandfather had requested him not to do so. On re-cross examination witness admitted that he could give no reason why he did not tell of the existence of the note as soon as his grandfather died.

Mrs. Geo W. Gregory was the next witness. In the early part of July, 1898, she was at home. She came to Woodland on the 3d instant. Her children came with her. Found her grandfather, Miss Mary Gregory and her niece.

On the 7th of July, middle of the afternoon, husband of witness arrived from College City. Her husband and his grandfather went into the house together. Later the witness followed. She found Mr. Johns in the dining-room and some writing material on a small stand. She asked who had been writing and Mr. Johns replied, "George."

Mr. Johns frequently told her to tell her husband to do certain things. She knew that he had made several trips for him, procured his meat and wood and done other things. Mr. Johns told witness her husband would be well paid for all that he did for him.

On the 19th of February, 1900, witness accompanied Mrs. Henry Gregory to Arbuckle in response to a telephone summons. Her husband left for Woodland on the afternoon train. Witness said she wrote a letter to her husband on the 6th of July, requesting him to send her some money. The cross-examination brought out nothing new.

Henry Gregory was recalled for examination. He was at home on the 20th of February, 1900. Saw George on the 18th and 19th, at College City. Was certain as to dates because he had looked up the dates on which he had transacted certain business. The cross-examination was brief and without results.

Miss Mary Gregory was recalled and testified that her brother was in College City on Sunday, February 19th.

"You have those dates down so that you cannot be mistaken?" queried Mr. Hiram Johnson. "I think I have," was the reply.

E. L. Knox was the next witness. He was employed by Mr. Gregory in February, 1899, when Ike Bedell and Mr. Pratt called there and had a conversation with Mr. Gregory. Heard all that Mr. Bedell said and there was nothing said about the Johns estate.

Mr. Grove L. Johnson said Mrs. Elizabeth Gregory is not feeling well. He wanted to prove by her that George was in College City on the 19th of February. Counsel for contestants consented that she might testify out of order.

Counsel for executors offered in evidence the petition of Tandy Allen et al., filed May 18, 1899, for partial distribution; the answer of executors, filed June 1st; the transcript, in long hand, of the testimony of George W. Gregory, taken June 5th; the order of the court found on page 266, volume 2, in probate orders, in which petition was denied; the decision of the court, filed June 9, 1899, and the endorsement on the claim, filed the same day; the notice of motion of J. C. Ball to vacate and set aside the order approving the act of the executors and the affidavit of Tandy Allen; the order of the court on June 12th denying the motion. An objection was made by Mr. Hiram Johnson. The court overruled the objection.

Judge Grant was put on the stand and testified that no notice of appeal or motion to set aside this last order, allowing the claim, had been served upon him.

The court was asked to testify in regard to the circumstances which led up to and attended the making of the various orders cited above. This Judge Gaddis did, to the apparent satisfaction of the attorneys for both sides.

The court ordered an adjournment until 9 o'clock Thursday.

TODAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

There was some delay in calling the court to order this morning. Judge Gaddis announced that Court Reporter Miss Hallie Williams is sick and unable to appear. Attorneys agreed that the court should telephone to Warren Dean and request him to send a competent shorthand reporter on the first train. It was nearly half-past 9 o'clock when court finally convened.

Counsel for contestants asked to be allowed to introduce a witness out of order, as to the character of Frank Allen. By stipulation it was agreed that Mr. Hiram Johnson should take the testimony of this one witness.

Sheriff Griffin was put on the stand and testified that so far as he knows Allen's reputation is good. He never heard it discussed.

After the offer in evidence of the legal documents mentioned about the close of Wednesday's proceedings, it was understood that their admission raised the question of res adjudicata. After Mr. Griffin left the stand this morning the court remarked that while waiting for the arrival of a shorthand reporter from Sacramento, counsel might as well argue this question.

The argument consumed the remainder of the morning session and was participated in by Mr. Delliger and Mr. Hiram Johnson for contestants, and Mr. Grove L. Johnson for the executors. The court in effect decided that the order of the court refusing to vacate the order by which the allowance of the note as a claim against the estate was made, and the failure of contestants to appeal from such order, did not constitute this a case res adjudicata.

At the afternoon session Frank De Witt, a Sacramento shorthand reporter, was present and took Miss Williams' place at the reporter's desk.

Mr. Grove L. Johnson asked that the testimony of Sheriff Griffin be stricken out, but the motion was denied.

Mrs. Elizabeth Gregory was recalled, and testified that she saw George Gregory at home, morning and evening, on February 19th, in College City.

Attorneys for contestant recalled George Gregory for further cross-examination. He testified that three or four months after the note was given he put the revenue stamps on the back of the note and canceled the same. Counsel for executors announced that they rested.

I. Charurak, of Sacramento, testified that he has known Frank Allen several years and regards his general reputation as good. A. Morris, of Woodland, testified substantially to the same thing.

J. D. Smith, of Romsey, formerly an Arbuckle constable, also testified that Allen's general reputation is good. He insisted on putting a literal construction on questions, and when Mr. Grove L. Johnson asked if he based his opinion of Allen on the manner in which he had treated him, witness declared that Allen never "treated" him in his life.

Henry Kraft, who resided in Arbuckle for several years, never heard Mr. Allen's reputation discussed, and believes that it is good.

Frank Rehm was the next witness. He testified that he does not know the general reputation of Frank Allen.

Nightwatchman Read was the next witness, but as he was in the same frame of mind as Mr. Rehm, he was directed to stand aside.

Earll Dinsler testified that he knew Allen between the '80s and '90s and his reputation was good.

Oscar Parker was testifying along the same lines when this report closed.

THE JOHNS NOTE.

Trial Resumed After a Vacation of Two Days.

Many Witnesses Introduced to Asperse the Reputation of Witness Frank Allen.

When the Johns note case was resumed this morning, Mr. Grove L. Johnson stated that there were several witnesses present whose testimony would be brief and they were anxious to return to their homes on the morning train. He asked that the cross-examination of Miss Gregory be postponed temporarily and that they be put on the stand. No objection was made and B. W. Kline, an Arbuckle harnessmaker, was the first witness. He testified that when Frank Allen was a permanent resident of Arbuckle his reputation was not good.

Mr. Hiram Johnson cross-examined the witness, but brought out nothing of particular interest.

W. H. Evans, an Arbuckle bookkeeper, was next called. Witness had known Frank Allen for ten years or more, and his reputation for truth, veracity and integrity is bad.

Witness never had any difficulty with Allen and had nothing against him. He had nothing particularly against him except his sporting propensities. Witness is friendly to Allen and believes the friendship is reciprocated.

F. M. Allen, an Arbuckle fruit-dealer, also testified that Frank Allen's reputation while in Arbuckle was not good.

Witness has never been a close friend of Allen, but has no feeling against him. His reputation was probably discussed at the time he was interested in a divorce case more than any other time.

S. P. Worley, a Colusa county farmer who resides five miles east of Arbuckle, was the next witness to testify that Frank Allen's reputation in Arbuckle is not good. His reputation was probably more discussed at the time of the difficulty with his wife than any other time.

J. R. Houseworth, a business man of Arbuckle, corroborated the testimony of the preceding witness. Knew nothing against him except from hearsay.

P. D. Cain, of College City, next testified that Mr. Allen's reputation is not good in Arbuckle and College City. Personally witness is friendly with Allen and knows nothing against him except what he has learned from public sentiment.

E. E. Brown, of College City, testified practically along the same lines as the previous witness.

W. E. Blakely, a College City contractor, also testified that Mr. Allen's reputation is bad. Witness admitted that he sometimes gambles, but does not do so for a living. First heard Allen's reputation discussed during the county division fight.

L. O. Johnson, a hardware merchant of Arbuckle, was the last witness called to testify as to the character of Frank Allen. He thought that the general opinion around Arbuckle is that his reputation is bad. Mr. Johnson said that he had nothing against Mr. Allen, but they do not speak, because he does not consider him congenial company.

Miss Mary Gregory next took the stand and her cross-examination was resumed. She testified that during her residence with her grandfather in Woodland he treated her as a father would treat a daughter, and she endeavored to reciprocate, but her clothing was paid for by her own people.

Once when witness asked her grandfather for screens to the house he said to her: "The house is yours and you can do as you like with it when I am dead and gone; and I have further provided for you and your brother."

Witness had heard her grandfather say that George was transacting some business for him, but she never inquired the nature of the business. She never heard of the note until two or three days before the petition for partial distribution. Her brother, George, showed it to her. She was not surprised. Mr. Hiram Johnson made witness go over again the scene she witnessed in the diningroom, between her brother and grandfather on July 7, 1898, the date of the note.

Mr. Hiram Johnson hinted and apologized for asking witness her age when she came to live with her grandfather. Witness answered without any hesitation: "I was born in 1862."

Mr. Bush gave the deed to the house and lot and the bill of sale to the household goods to witness after the death of her grandfather.

Mr. Hiram Johnson led witness through a maze of questions with an apparent view of testing her memory as to dates and places of purchasing writing material. But nothing special came of it.

On redirect examination witness said that she had a conversation with her brother and Mrs. Friel, shortly after her grandfather's death, in relation to having a claim against the estate. She also stated that she was not surprised when her brother showed her the note, on account of a previous conversation she had with him. Witness testified that both she and her brother were at their father's house on the 19th day of February. If George left it was on the 3 o'clock afternoon train.

On recross examination witness said that her brother told her she need not put in any claim for her services, but the note was not mentioned. She did not weep when the will was read because it made no provision for her.

Mrs. Elizabeth J. Gregory, one of the executors, was the next witness. She testified that she has no doubt that the note signature is genuine. Her father told her he would like to have Mary keep house for him in Woodland and he would see that she was well provided for. Mary did come and she frequently visited there. She sometimes remained with her father while Mary took her vacation. Witness and her husband gave Mary money to buy clothing. Witness was with her father for about six weeks prior to his death. She had frequent conversations with him in which he stated that he had made provision to pay both George and Mary for services they had rendered him.

Attorneys for contestants objected to this line of testimony, but the court allowed it.

The court ordered the usual noon recess until half-past 1 o'clock.

The examination of Mrs. Gregory was resumed at the afternoon session. She stated that the winter after her father came to Woodland he told her he wanted her and George to manage his affairs after his death. He also told her that he might buy the Patterson place for George. Another time he wanted George to go to Texas and take care of him.

Witness walked with Mr. and Mrs. Friel, Mr. Allen and George across the courtyard after the will was read. She never heard George say that the estate owed nothing but funeral expenses. Mrs. Gregory further testified that she was at home on the 19th of February and her son was there also. He left on the 3 o'clock train for Woodland.

On cross-examination witness said that the note was presented to her as a claim on the 5th of June in the office of Attorney Hawkins. She first knew of the existence of the note on the night previous. She approved of the claim at the time. This answer was objected to by both Mr. Hawkins and Mr. Grove L. Johnson, but it was allowed to stand.

Witness said her father told her during his last sickness that Mrs. Chas. Allen had told him Mary intended to put in a $4-a-day claim. Witness told it was not true. Mr. Johns said he said Mrs. Allen he would give Mary and George what he pleased.

Mrs. Gregory was still under cross-examination when this report closed.

THE JOHNS ESTATE.

Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law Filed.

The findings of fact and conclusions of law and judgment in the matter of the petition for settlement of account of George W. Gregory and Elizabeth Gregory, executors of the estate of G. W. Johns, have been filed. The findings recite in regard to the validity of the note that the decedent executed the note and the claim presented for the same was duly itemized and verified according to law and approved and allowed by Mrs. Elizabeth Gregory, as executrix; that thereafter the claim was presented in open court and its allowance opposed by Polly Ann Friel and Tandy Allen, but the court being fully advised endorsed its approval of the note on June 9, 1899.

The court further finds that on July 7, 1898, the deceased was indebted to G. W. Gregory and Mary Gregory for services theretofore rendered, for a sum undetermined, but which was, at said date and immediately before the execution of said note, determined by G. W. Johns to be $10,000, and for which sum he executed the same.

Upon the petition of T. J. Allen and Polly Ann Friel, for removal of executors and answer of the latter the court finds: That said executors have not wasted or mismanaged the property of the estate and have not committed a fraud upon said estate or are about to commit a fraud, nor are they incompetent to act as executors or have ever for a long time neglected to perform their duties; that said note presented by executors in their account is not forged or fraudulent, or spurious, but is true and genuine and not allowed for the purpose of defrauding the heirs of the estate; that neither executor filed any exhibit or report in said matter until February 9, 1900, but such failure was not due to the purpose of said executors to keep any knowledge of said note from any persons interested in the estate; that Mrs. Elizabeth Gregory, as executor, did not allow the note without inquiry as to its genuineness and validity but did not inquire of other persons entitled to a share of estate.

In conclusion the court orders judgment as follows: The order previously made suspending the duties of the executors be set aside and that they be reinstated as such executors and that J. D. Lawson, special administrator, turn over to said executors all the property of the estate in his possession within ten days after notice is served on him. The executors recover their costs from Tandy Allen and Polly Ann Friel.

JUDGMENT IS SET ASIDE.

Crookedness Alleged in a Superior Court Suit.

SUSPICION CONCERNING T. D. M'KAY'S NOTE.

[illegible]

Denial That Any Summons Was Served on the Defendant Before the Entry of His Default.

A judgment against Thomas D. McKay for [illegible] was set aside by Judge Hebbard yesterday on account of alleged fraud. McKay, who has been a railroad and steamship agent in the Orient for several years, was well known about town when he represented a railroad company here, and his diamonds and tall silk hat were noticeable on the streets and in hotel lobbies. The suit against him was on a promissory note, of which the following is a copy:

SAN FRANCISCO, August 25, 1896. [illegible] [illegible]

T. McKAY.

The complaint was filed on August [illegible] [illegible] the plaintiff. On the following day [illegible] made an affidavit that he served the summons on Thomas McKay personally. Neither McKay nor any person representing him appeared in the case, and on August [illegible] a default judgment for the plaintiff was entered. The court was informed that McKay had given the note to Mrs. [illegible], the keeper of a resort, with whom he was friendly [illegible] which he had received from her. On November 25, 1899, [illegible] assigned to Mrs. [illegible] the judgment which was for $[illegible] and for costs amounting to $[illegible] [illegible]

[illegible]

Kay was paid in Japan.

"I think that proper notice of this motion has been given," Judge Hebbard said. "It looks to me as if Mrs. Jacobsen knew that something was wrong, and did not care to proceed further."

He then granted the motion.

A few minutes later Bamberger appeared in court with McKnight, and exhibited signs of distress at the Judge's order. It had been thought that the assignment to Mrs. Jacobsen was merely to complicate the judgment so that McKay could not avoid payment eventually, but Bamberger said that she paid $1400 for it, though he did not say to whom this sum was given.

MUST PROVE PAPERS WERE NOT PUBLISHED.

Bold Line of Defense of Young Hay, Accused of Mulcting Dunsmuir's Sons Co.

J. H. Hay, who is accused of having collected [illegible] from the [illegible] Sons Company by pretending to publish certain advertising, has undertaken a line of defense which the attorney for the prosecution admit will put them to some disadvantage in proving the charges. While there is evidence to show that Hay collected a bill of [illegible] from bookkeeper Walter A. [illegible] May [illegible] for advertising in the "[illegible] Gazette," there is no evidence to show that the advertising and the paper were not published.

[illegible]

The case was continued to Tuesday, when the defense will present its [illegible]

CURTIN IS IDENTIFIED.

The Detective Must Now Answer for His Crime

MRS. LE BLANCHE SAYS HE IS AN ACCESSORY.

[illegible]

[illegible]

Present to the Bohemian Club.

Theodore Kytka, the [illegible], has made a handsome present to the Bohemian Club, an enlarged photograph of Miss [illegible], the [illegible] mare, and her first colt. The photo was taken at the stock farm at [illegible] and is a wonderful enlargement of a [illegible] taken at 6 o'clock in the morning. [illegible], the trainer, is holding her, and the large picture shows [illegible] This [illegible] photograph is framed in [illegible]

[illegible]

Note on Which Suit Was Brought Declared Spurious.

[illegible]

STEPHEN CASSINELLI.

[illegible]

FORGERY CHARGED.

Attorney for Stephen Cassinelli, Says a Note Was Changed

In the suit of Giovanni Ferrera against Stephen Cassinelli and wife for $400, called for trial before Judge [illegible] yesterday, a charge of forgery was made by the attorney for the defendant.

[illegible]

[illegible]

Alibi of Alleged Forger Attacked in the Courts.

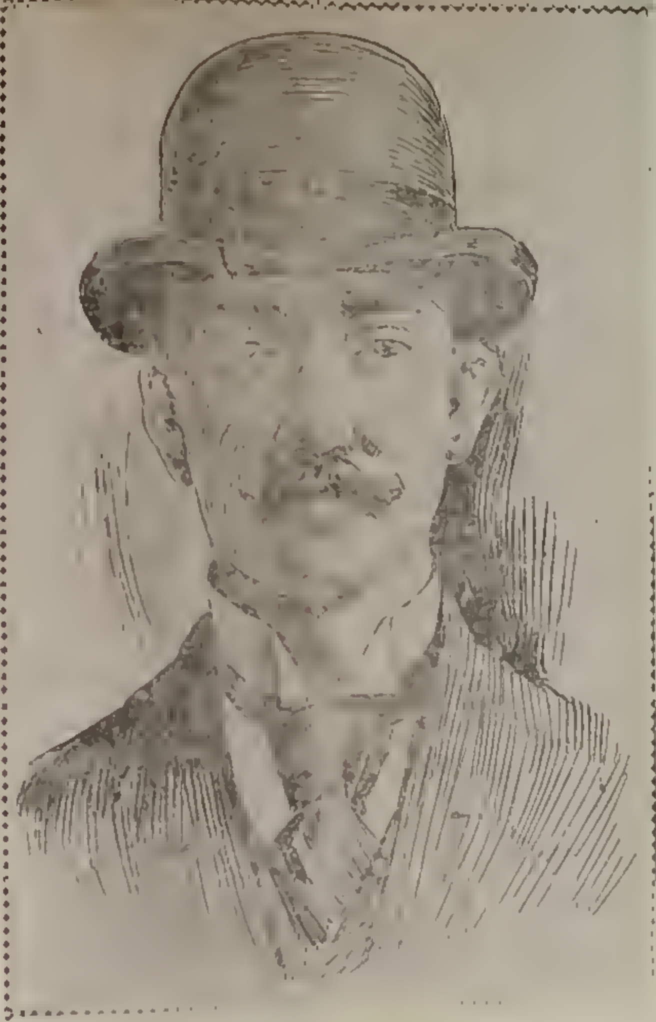
[illegible]

[illegible]

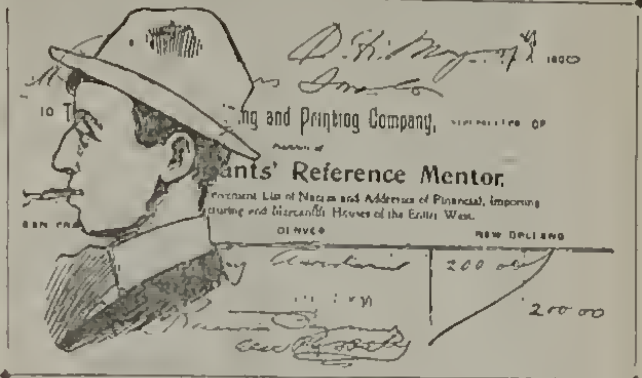
Mrs. [illegible] Bail Raised.

[illegible]

PRIVATE DETECTIVE CURTIN ACCOMPLICE OF LE BLANCHE



SMOOTH SWINDLING SCHEME OF FICTITIOUS ADVERTISING COSTS ONE FIRM OVER $4,000



PORTRAIT OF J. R. HAYES AND ONE OF THE BILLS HE IS ACCUSED BY CASHIER WALTER A. GOMPERTZ OF COLLECTING FROM THE DUNSMUIR'S SONS COMPANY.

AN illustration of the ease with which the average cashier can be induced to pass out his employer's cash is furnished in the advertising transactions of the firm of R. Dunsmuir's Sons Company, during the month of May.

Walter A. Gompertz, the cashier of the big coal firm, paid twenty-two bills during the month of twenty-six business days, aggregating $4,300. He did not discover that he had been robbed until he was checking over his accounts on June 11th. Then the services of Harry N. Morse's Detective Agency was secured and the cashier was soon aware of the fact that the publications or newspapers for which he had been drawing and issuing the firm's checks had never had any existence. Yesterday Gompertz swore to a complaint charging J. R. Hay, alias J. R. Hayes, known familiarly as "Bob" Hayes, with obtaining money by false pretenses.

The scheme which was worked on the Dunsmuirs, and the cashier is very positive in his identification of Hayes as the man who worked it, was clever, though the idea was by no means a new one. The almost daily repetition of the trick and the unusual size of the bills are points which might have attracted the attention of some people, but Gompertz never even grew suspicious. He drew a check for everything that was presented and Captain Jules J. Callundan of the Morse Agency has a bunch of the firm's checks an inch thick lying on his desk.

The first application which was made to the firm for advertising was to put the business address in the city directory in black type. The cashier was told that it would cost $1, and a contract was signed. In addition to the signature of the cashier was the O.K. of John A. S. Lowe, business manager of the company. It was represented that the advertising was to be in the directory of 1901. A few days later the individual who had secured the contract came around and collected the dollar and surrendered the contract. When the contract was surrendered the collector presented "a cancellation of contract," which he asked the cashier to sign. This was to release him from all further obligations. The last words on this "cancellation" were "In cancellation of contract No. ——." Now in the printing of this stipulation it was carefully planned that the "contract No. ——" should stand in a line by itself. Then about two inches of blank space was left between here and the lines which were printed for the signature of the firm. This "cancellation" was carefully cut with the scissors just above the line which contains "contract No. ——." Then in the blank space was printed a contract stipulating the name of the publication and writing in the amount to be paid and the advertising space to be used. The firm's signature which had originally been attached to the cancellation was now on a contract, and these agreements ranged in amount from $80 to $250.

The name of John A. S. Lowe, which was written on the original contract for $1, had been studied and a clever imitation was added to the new contracts at collection time. As each of these bills was paid Gompertz was asked to sign another "cancellation." The next day this would come back as a contract with the O.K. mark of Manager Lowe, and only four days out of the twenty-six business days of the month did the cashier miss paying a bill and signing—always in pencil—another "cancellation." He might have still been paying and signing had he not checked up his accounts one day and found that he had issued checks for advertising $4,300 in excess of the usual monthly bills. He explains his willingness to pay these bills, though he had no recollection of having signed the numerous contracts, by saying that he simply saw the O.K. of Manager Lowe. This imitation in some instances is rather clumsy.

The bills were all made out on fancy bill heads, indicating that the printing bills of the operator must have been considerable. The agent represented that he had offices in the Mills Building.

The bill paid by Gompertz May 15th was for $140. It is on this that the complaint and arrest were made. It is a fair sample of the bunch, the heading reading as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, May, 1900.

R. Dunsmuir Sons Co.

To Mercantile Publishing Company, Dr.

Publishers of "The Mercantile Gazette," comprising a complete list of names and addresses of banks, importing, wholesale, manufacturing and mercantile houses of the Pacific Coast. Denver, San Francisco, Portland.

The bill is receipted by "A. Bell, per A."

The last bill paid by Gompertz was a week ago yesterday. The same day he discovered the swindle. A few days later Hayes called at Raphael's with another young man and bought a hat. He presented a check for $210, evidently one issued by Gompertz for advertising. All the checks were being cashed in the same manner, but it seemed impossible to get trace of the man passing them, for they were usually issued in the name of the publication in which the advertising was supposed to appear. The collector signed all sorts of names when collecting, and in many instances the signatures to the bills are nothing more than scrawls.

When Hayes presented this particular check the clerk informed him that it was unusual for the firm to accept such paper from strangers. Then Hayes called upon a friend in the store to identify him, and this identification is what finally resulted in his arrest. He was located Saturday night, living with his mother, brothers and sisters at 557 O'Farrell street. Sunday night he was arrested. He was held without a warrant until yesterday afternoon in order to prevent publicity, as Captain Callundan says he has two partners and it was desired to capture these. The two persons who are described are residents of San Francisco and left last week when it became known that their work was discovered. The last visit of a collector was June 6th, and he was told to return in a few moments when the cashier would be in. He was suspicious and never came back. It is promised that one of the men will be arrested to-day.

Hayes is twenty-three years of age, is constantly smoking cigarettes and has a manner which is most aptly described as belonging to "a fresh lad of eighteen." He declines to say anything about his case, or what he has been doing for a living. He was once a messenger boy. Afterwards he worked in the men's furnishing departments of several stores and he made one trip to Manila on a transport.

His arrest on a warrant yesterday was made necessary by his attorney bringing habeas corpus proceedings in the Superior Court. Captain Callundan is trying also to locate the printing firm which did the work for the swindlers.

SAYS HE PAID FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS

WHICH SUM WAS TO HAVE PURCHASED THE PULL,

TO GET A JOB ON THE POLICE FORCE

Edward Darcy Deposited the Amount With Attorney J. M. Chretien in October.

Grand Jury Investigates Story, Which Involves Policeman Hickey, Also Kelly.

FIVE hundred dollars is what Gripman Edward Darcy of the Market-street Railway says was demanded of him for a position on the police force. When the "pull" which he brought to bear failed to work, he made complaint to Chief Sullivan.

In the statements made by Darcy to the Grand Jury and to the Chief of Police during the investigation, Attorney John M. Chretien, Policeman Jerome J. Hickey and one Kelly, whose given name Darcy does not know, are mentioned.

Darcy says Chretien received a certificate of deposit for the amount he was willing to pay for a star. Chretien denies that he ever made an attempt to get a position on the police force for Darcy, but says the money was put up as a fee providing Darcy was appointed.

Captain [illegible] says there may be [illegible] in the matter to-day. "It is possible," he says, "there are men on the force who have [illegible] of [illegible] positions and who think the payment of the money got them there. I believe the [illegible] of this [illegible] will bring forward others who have paid for places on the force. Where money was accepted under such circumstances I believe we can prosecute under the statute regarding receiving money under false pretenses."

In the story which he tells the police Darcy says that some time prior to October 26, 1899, he was introduced to Kelly by Policeman Jerome J. Hickey, who is a door keeper of the City Prison. The introduction, he says, was for the purpose of having him meet with one with enough influence to get him a position on the police force. Hickey, he says, knew he had put up his coin for the position, but he did not know the amount nor the person to whom it had been given. He says Kelly knew all about it.

By previous arrangement, says Darcy, he met Kelly at a cafe at [illegible] street, a small court off Montgomery street, between Pine and California. The object of the meeting being to have him meet Chretien. Darcy says he took with him his friend Thomas [illegible] to witness all that took place. Proceeding, Darcy says:

[illegible]

[illegible]

JOHN M. CHRETIEN.

[illegible]

The certificate of deposit was to be held in Chretien's safe deposit box until I got my position on the police force and then the certificate of deposit was to be [illegible].

[illegible]

In a statement given out last night the Chief of Police says:

[illegible]

When Darcy was called before the Grand Jury he changed front in regard to the indorsement of the certificate. He declared that it was he who indorsed it, and besides, he said he got his money back.

To test the matter Darcy was requested to write his name on a separate sheet of paper, and on comparison it was seen that it widely differed in appearance from the signature on the certificate. While this was patent on the most casual examination, District Attorney Byington advised the Grand Jurors that Darcy's approval of the act of his agent was sufficient to relieve him from successful prosecution on a charge of embezzlement or obtaining money by false pretenses.

Samuel H. Daniels of the Bank of California told the Grand Jury that he paid the money called for by the certificate of deposit to Chretien.

This is Chretien's statement of the transaction with Darcy:

I never made a contract with Darcy or anyone else to procure a position on the police force for him. I was merely the custodian of a certificate of deposit for $500 in which I had a [illegible] interest in the event that Darcy became a policeman. These are the details of the affair:

Last October Kelly, [illegible], Thomas [illegible] and Darcy and I met in the [illegible] by Darcy. Prior to that meeting Darcy and Kelly [illegible] introduced Darcy, saying he was [illegible] on the police force. I was requested to be custodian of the [illegible], which Darcy was to put up, and consented. If he got the appointment I was to receive a fee.

I gave Darcy a receipt for a certificate of deposit, and it was understood that it was to be returned to him on demand. The certificate was sealed in an envelope, indorsed by Kelly and Darcy and deposited in the Safe Deposit. I want to state right here that I never mentioned Darcy's name to anyone in reference to getting him on the police force. I never turned my hand over in the matter, nor did I approach anyone connected with the department, Commissioner, Captain, Lieutenant or Sergeant, in his interest.

Another thing: Darcy indorsed the $500 certificate in my presence, and in the presence of [illegible] and Kelly. A short time, only a few days after that certificate was deposited in the safe, Darcy came to me and requested me to pay his friend Kelly $100 out of it. I told Darcy I could not advance the money and he asked me to cash the certificate.

I went to the Bank of California at his request, got the $500, gave $100 to Kelly and placed the remaining $400 in the Safe Deposit. The whole matter then rested until a week ago last Thursday, when Darcy came to me and said he had decided to drop the whole business. He demanded his money and I asked him when he wanted it. He said the following day would do, but he could have had it that day.

On Friday, the day following his demand, I met him at my office. I asked Darcy about the $100 I had given Kelly at his request and he replied he knew nothing about that, that was none of his business. I then saw I was the "sucker." Darcy had my written contract to return the $500 and I had to make good and take chances on recovering the hundred.

I took the $400 from the Safe Deposit, added another $100 and obtained a certificate of deposit from the Bank of California for $500. I adopted the method of returning the money because I had received a certificate of deposit and I wanted to return another for self protection.

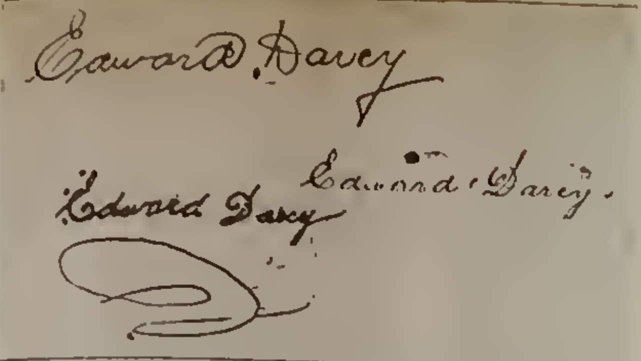
Darcy took the certificate, duly indorsed, from me and gave me a receipt, which, by the way, I had [illegible], who was present, indorse as a witness. The three of us went out and had a drink. Darcy seemed pleased and said he was glad he got his money back. I asked him why he expressed that feeling.

"Because," he said, "I was told I never would get it."

Then I demanded an explanation and he said he had been summoned before the Grand Jury and asked me what to say. I told him to stick to the facts, to tell the whole truth, and he said he would.

[illegible] no further attention to the matter, and [illegible] about it except to get back the [illegible] any [illegible] and he has [illegible] the money to me on the 30th.

The police say they are not ready to drop the matter, though the Grand Jury did not think there was sufficient ground on which to return an indictment.



THE FIRST SIGNATURE IS THAT OF EDWARD DARCY, AS IT APPEARS ON THE CERTIFICATE OF DEPOSIT, AND WHICH CHRETIEN SAYS WAS WRITTEN BY DARCY AT CHRETIEN'S OFFICE. THE SECOND WAS WRITTEN BY DARCY AT THE OFFICE OF CAPTAIN OF DETECTIVES SEYMOUR. THE THIRD SIGNATURE APPEARS ON THE CERTIFICATE OF DEPOSIT WHICH CHRETIEN GAVE TO DARCY IN RETURNING THE DEPOSIT.

NEW GRAND JURY IMPANELED; WILLIAM T. KIBBLER FOREMAN

A new Grand Jury was impaneled by Presiding Judge [illegible] of the Superior Court yesterday. The foreman is William T. Kibbler, and Henry T. Gibbs [illegible] Secretary. Following are the names, business [illegible] and addresses of the Grand Jurors:

[illegible], manager San Francisco News Company, 1[illegible] Henry street.

JOHN [illegible], liquors, corner Larkin and North Point streets.

[illegible], real estate, [illegible] Bush street.

[illegible], secretary [illegible] of Wells, Fargo & Co., [illegible].

[illegible], real estate dealer, southwest corner Masonic avenue and Frederick street.

HENRY T. GIBBS, secretary George W. Gibbs & Co., hardware dealers, [illegible] Fremont street.

[illegible] of Green Bros., proprietors Cafe Columbia, 15 Powell street.

[illegible], upholsterer, 22[illegible] Union street.

WILLIAM T. KIBBLER, druggist, [illegible] Larkin street.

[illegible], stationer, [illegible] Market street.

[illegible], proprietor California Boiler Works, 125 Fremont street.

[illegible], grocer, [illegible] Turk street.

[illegible], clerk with Justinian, Caire & Co., 121[illegible] Vallejo street.

JOHN [illegible], proprietor Pioneer Glass Works, [illegible] Francisco street.

JOHN W. [illegible], proprietor St. George Stables, [illegible] Bush.

PETER [illegible], wholesale liquor dealer, 112[illegible] Green street.

FRANCIS [illegible], street contractor, 220[illegible] Geary street.

FRANK [illegible] VAIL, of Sanborn, Vail & Co., stationers and art dealers, 7[illegible] Market street.

[illegible] WOLF, cigar dealer, 1[illegible] Buchanan street.

[illegible] did not give any special instruction to the Grand Jury [illegible] to be important. He admonished the Grand Jurors [illegible] inquire into all alleged infractions of the law and [illegible] indictments or presentments, as the [illegible] of law.

A DEALER IN POLICE JOBS

John M. Chretien in a New and Interesting Role.

ACCUSED OF OFFERING STARS AT SO MUCH PER.

EDWARD DARCY PAID FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS AND STILL IS A CIVILIAN.

When the Grand Jury Took Up the Case the Attorney Made Haste to Pay Back the Money.

Attorney John M. Chretien, who was expelled from the [illegible] Committee last year for attempted extortion, has distinguished himself again. This time he is accused of receiving money from would-be policemen through representations that he would obtain them positions on the "force." Chretien's accuser is Captain of Detectives Seymour, who claims to have evidence that Chretien obtained $500 of the money of Edward Darcy, a cable car gripman who wanted to be a policeman. Chretien got the money last October, it is alleged, but paid it back nine days ago, when an incident of the transaction was brought to the attention of the Grand Jury. Darcy is still a civilian, and before his money was returned to him he charged that some one had forged his name in order to cash a certificate of deposit. Since then he has admitted the signature, but when asked to do so he finds it hard work to write his name in a similar way.

The accusation against Chretien is based on the following document:

SAN FRANCISCO, October [illegible], 1899.—Received of Edward Darcy certificate of deposit for $500, the same to belong to me on my order if he be appointed on the police force of the city and county of San Francisco. In the event of his failure to be appointed, then the said certificate to be returned to him on demand and presentation of this receipt.

JOHN M. CHRETIEN,
[illegible] Montgomery street, room [illegible].

According to the story told by Darcy before he got his money back he was taken to Chretien by a man named Kelly. Darcy was accompanied by Thomas Duran, a fellow gripman, and in the presence of Duran and Kelly the ambitious Darcy handed Chretien a certificate of deposit for $500, which amount the gripman had deposited in the Bank of California. The certificate, which was in Darcy's name, was put in an envelope. Then the envelope was placed in Chretien's safe deposit box. Months went by. No star fell Darcy's way. He ceased dreaming on May 7th, when he learned that his certificate of deposit had been cashed. He was shown the indorsement and at once declared it to be a forgery. Then Captain Seymour was notified, and the case was called to the attention of the Grand Jury. On June 5th, while the case was pending, Chretien paid Darcy $500. A change came over Darcy, and when called before the Grand Jury he declared that the indorsement on the certificate of deposit was in his writing. As the signature was unlike his natural writing, samples of which were in the possession of the police, he was asked to write his name. He worked hard, but the signatures he made in the jury room hardly bore a family resemblance to the indorsement. However, his admission that the indorsement was genuine blocked the investigation.

In speaking of the case last night Captain Seymour said: "Chretien obtained Darcy's money through false pretenses. He cashed Darcy's certificate of deposit the very next day after he received it. S. H. Daniels of the Bank of California can testify to that. Darcy called at the bank on March [illegible]th, and said that he had lost his certificate of deposit. He wanted to know if it had been cashed. When asked if he had indorsed it he said he had not. Being assured that no one could cash the certificate without his signature he went away satisfied. After he went out the clerk looked up the matter and found that the paper had been cashed. Of course, Darcy had not lost his certificate, he merely wanted to find out if it had been cashed. When he went to the bank again on May [illegible]th he learned that Chretien had drawn his money. He declared that the indorsement was a forgery, and did not fall down on his story until Chretien paid him back the $500.

"Chretien is said to have cashed another certificate of deposit given him by another man who wanted to buy a place on the police force, but Daniels cannot remember the name of the depositor. Chretien ought to be indicted, and I shall bring the matter before the attention of the next Grand Jury. In the meantime I shall continue my investigations."

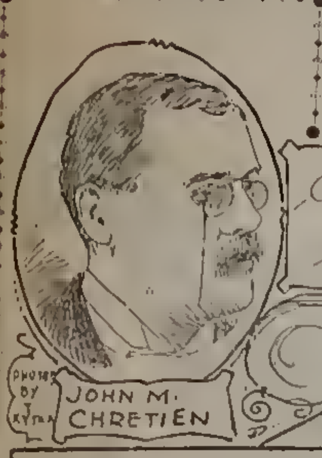
The accused man denies that he has ever dealt in police positions.

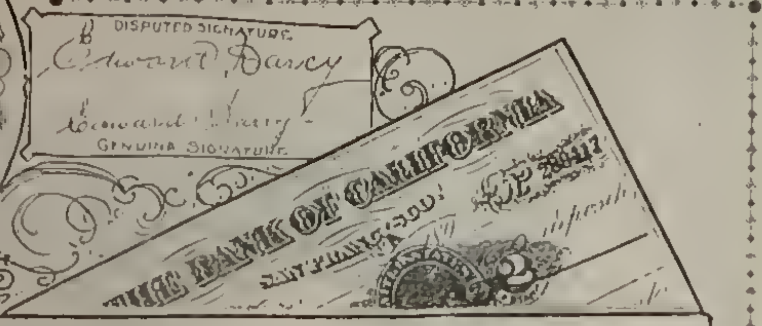
"Darcy merely made me a depositary of the certificate," says Chretien. "Kelly and Daniel O'Connell, a broker, brought him to me. I did not promise him any position on the force. At Darcy's request I paid out $100, but I returned him [illegible], so I'm out $100."

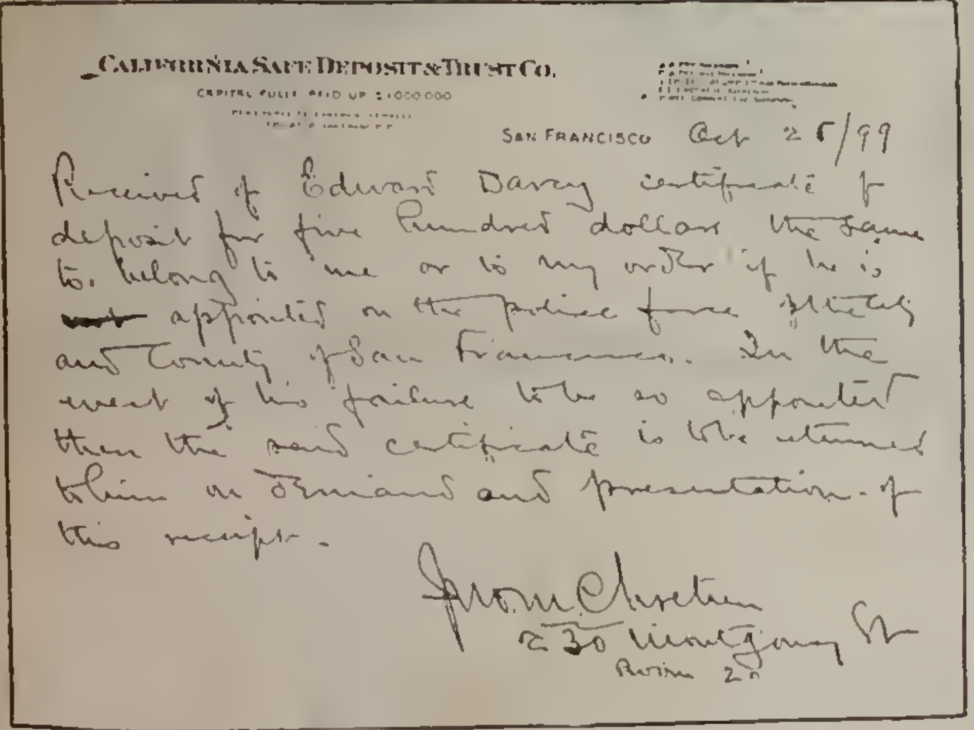
The mysterious Kelly, who figures in the affair, is said to be in Chicago now. He left here shortly after Darcy put the check in Chretien's keeping.

LAWYER CHRETIEN SAVED BY DARCY'S POOR MEMORY

Could Not Say Whether or Not He Had Indorsed That Certificate of Deposit That Lay So Long in a Safe-Deposit Box.







Lawyer Chretien and the Agreement He Entered Into With Edward Darcy.

I DO not intend that Attorney Chretien or any one else shall negotiate for the sale of positions in the Police Department while I am at the head of the detective force. Notwithstanding the fact that the Grand Jury refused to indict him I have determined that he shall not go unpunished. I have consulted with the District Attorney and expect that a warrant will be issued for Mr. Chretien's arrest in a few days."

Captain of Detectives Seymour seems determined to prosecute "Jack" Chretien, the well-known attorney, [illegible] for negotiating for the sale of a position on the police force to Edward Darcy, a gripman in the employ of the Market-street Railway Company. Darcy was anxious to become a policeman, and [illegible] the necessary influence he was [illegible] to Chretien, who was [illegible] as the friend and legal adviser of [illegible] [illegible]

Darcy's story of subsequent events, as told by himself in the presence of Captain Seymour and the official stenographer of the department, is as follows:

Statement of Darcy.

"Several weeks [illegible] Officer Hickey, who is doorkeeper at the City Prison, [illegible] a man named Kelly, whom [illegible] I do not know. The object of the introduction was to make me acquainted with some one who had sufficient influence to get me a place on the police force. Hickey knew that I had some money which I was willing to give for the privilege of wearing a star. Kelly was also aware that I had [illegible] and would willingly give it to any one who would have me appointed a member of the Police Department. [illegible] by a previous agreement with Kelly I met him in a saloon on [illegible] street, a [illegible] the west side of Montgomery street, between [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible]. The saloon is on the south side of [illegible] street.

"The object of the meeting was to have Kelly introduce me to John M. Chretien. John Doran, a friend of mine, accompanied me to the saloon. My object in taking him with me was to have him as a witness to the transaction.

Introduced to Chretien.

"When we reached the saloon both Kelly and Chretien were there. Kelly introduced me to Chretien, who, he said, was the proper man to see to get a place in the Police Department. Kelly at that time said that it would require money to get the position, and that Chretien was just the man to fix it. Hickey was not present at the meeting. After Kelly introduced me to Chretien he walked away after promising to return and talk the matter over with me.

"I had [illegible] with me the amount I was to put up for being made a policeman. I drew the money out of the Hibernia Bank. As an evidence of good faith I went to the Bank of California where I deposited the money, receiving a certificate of deposit for the amount. My friend Doran was with me at the time. We returned to the saloon shortly afterward and met Kelly and Chretien.

"After a short conversation Chretien, Doran and I went to the Safe Deposit building at California and Montgomery streets.

"There," Darcy said, "the following agreement was drawn up:

The Agreement.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., [illegible] 1899.
Received of Edward Darcy certificate of deposit for $500, the sum to belong to me or my order if he is appointed on the police force of the city and county of San Francisco. In the event of his failure to be appointed then the said certificate to be returned to him on demand and on presentation of this receipt.
JOHN M. CHRETIEN.

"I gave Chretien the certificate of deposit for the $500," continued Darcy, "and [illegible]

[illegible]

The Certificate Disappears.

[illegible]

Seymour Takes Action.

[illegible] threatened investigation by the Grand Jury, sent for Darcy and returned the amount to him. When the investigation was held Darcy was suddenly stricken with a defective memory. He could not tell whether or not he had indorsed the certificate of deposit, notwithstanding the fact that he positively stated to Captain Seymour that the signature was a forgery. He was then asked [illegible]

Chretien to Be Prosecuted.

[illegible]

[illegible] PHILLIPS CAPTURED.

Young Couple, Said to Be From San Francisco, Arrested.

PHOENIX (A. T.), June 19.—A young man giving the name of A. B. Hale and his seventeen-year-old wife are in jail, charged with forgery. They say they are natives of San Francisco and were married in Los Angeles two years ago, since when they have been in Arizona. Hale is of French and American parentage, and his wife is an exceptionally pretty Portuguese woman. The former came in [illegible] piece of work and Hale realized $40 on three checks. Hale appeared at the Phoenix National Bank today to cash a fourth check drawn for $300, when he came face to face with H. W. Stevens, whose signature had been forged and who is a former employer of Hale, who worked at the Trilby mine. Hale escaped and got as far as Tempe with his wife before he was overtaken by the Sheriff. The forged signature is a fine imitation of the genuine, and was probably designed by the woman.

Beverly Bolkin Arrested.

Beverly Bolkin, the son of Cordelia Botkin, was arrested late last night for disturbing the peace. He gave bail and was released. Bolkin created a disturbance on Market street, where he was celebrating the approach of the Fourth of July.

When you read the dispatches from the front have one of the Chronicle's new war maps at hand. In this way you can thoroughly understand what is going on. Post, 10 cents.

VAST WEALTH DEPENDS ON A MEMORANDUM

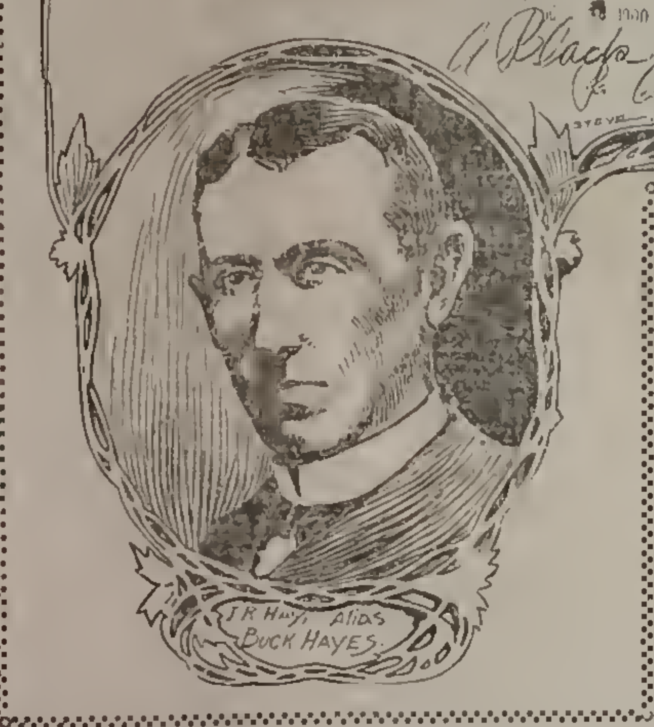
Sailor's Claim to Millions of Cape Nome Gold.

LINDBLOOM HIS PARTNER

Contract Made When Both Were Victims of Adversity.

[illegible]

DUNSMUIR COMPANY AN EASY VICTIM FOR THESE SHARPERS.



R. DUNSMUIR'S SONS COMPANY holds more than forty receipts for advertising [illegible] bricks, [illegible] about $[illegible], and "Buck Hayes," formerly a messenger boy, is in the City Prison charged with helping to manufacture and unload them. Back of these hard facts, however, is an unaccountably successful bogus advertising scheme virtually new to San Francisco. So far as is known now the Dunsmuir people are the only victims, but the [illegible] was so easy and afforded such a good living for the schemers that they did not need to enlarge their sphere of operations and increase the probability of being caught. "Hayes," whose name is really John R. Hay and [illegible] the city's [illegible] as a clerk with a [illegible] street, is only one of a gang, and it is expected before long that his comrades will be with him behind the bars. Hay was taken to the City Prison early yesterday morning by Captain John J. Callundan of the Morse Patrol Agency, although it had been intended to keep him out until all the men were arrested.

The scheme has been in operation since February last, but did not come under investigation until Thursday of last week, when John A. H. Lowe, [illegible]ager for the Dunsmuirs, noticed that he had signed an astonishing number of checks for advertising and sent to Walter A. Gompertz, the cashier, for information. Lowe said that he had not made any such contracts, and Gompertz said he was equally at a loss to explain the bills, since they had come to him with what he took to be an acknowledgment by Mr. Lowe and would not make an inquiry.

Lowe sent for Detective Harry Morse and asked him to investigate. It was soon found that there were no such concerns as those whose high-sounding names appeared on the bills. No two of the stack of bills are credited to the same firm, and there is not a [illegible] address on one of them, although a few have the names of persons purporting to be those of officials. Headquarters are only designated "New York," "San Francisco," "Denver," "Chicago," and some firms are large enough to have all four cities noted as the location of branch house. Almost all the billheads seem to have been printed at the same place and the paper, with but few exceptions, has the same watermark.

The accounts which have been paid without question at the office of R. Dunsmuir's Sons Company have come from as many firms as there are accounts, and include the "Merchants' Reference Memorandum," "The Trade Register," "Austin Brothers' Printing Company," "Wilson Brothers & Co.," "R. L. Jones Brothers Company," "Jones Commercial Company," "Reference Book," "Drake Brothers Company," "The Mercantile Gazette," "Hall's Annual Business Record," "Commercial Printing Company," "United States Business Register," "Merchants' Chart for Business Reference," "[illegible] Business Reference," "United States Commercial Reference Journal," "United States Register" and "The United Coast Journal."

Hay was traced through the last check, one for $120. He did not cash it immediately, but one day early last week went into Raphael's with two friends and treated them to a hat and some [illegible]. When he came to settle he found that he did not have money enough and presented the check, receiving $[illegible] in change. This was his undoing, for when the check was presented at the bank Captain Callundan traced Hay within a few hours. When he took him Hay did not deny that he knew something of the scheme, and expressed himself as willing to aid in finding the ringleaders. He remained quietly with one of Morse's men, and on Sunday afternoon told Lowe how the work was done, although never admitting that he had anything to do with it. His explanation was as follows:

One of the men would go and solicit the advertisement and would put it into a liberal space in the book, which was presented as a dummy of the publication, for a trifling amount, generally 75 cents or $1. This was usually paid out of hand and a receipt given. Soon afterward the man who got the advertisement or another would call with what he termed a "cancellation blank," the upper part of which would correctly record the transaction. A member of the firm or a responsible employe would be asked to sign this unusual voucher on the ground that "the firm" wanted to know that the amount was duly paid before the advertisement was printed. The manipulators of this advertising scheme would then make out a bill for any amount, from $50 to more than $[illegible], according to what they wanted or thought they could get, using one of the innumerable billheads. Then they would tear off that end of the "cancellation blank" which had the firm signature and pin the fragment to the bill.

In the case of the Dunsmuir accounts the bills were presented one after another until some forty-five had been paid by Gompertz. He noted his own signature or that of some one in the office "by order of Mr. Lowe," and prepared every check which Mr. Lowe signed as having come through regular channels. In March one spurious bill was passed. In April and May there was thirty-[illegible] of them. It was then that Lowe began to wonder at more than $[illegible] worth of advertising in one month.

Many of the receipts are signed so illegibly that it is almost impossible to decipher them. Ordinary names were used and "color names" were most in favor. One is signed "A. Black, per A.," another "E. Walton, per Brown," and so on.

The investigation progressed favorably until Sunday afternoon, when Gompertz appeared at Morse's office when Lowe and others were questioning Hay. Gompertz recognized Hay as one of the men to whom he had paid the money, and Hay said in an aside: "That is the cashier at Dunsmuir's." After that Hay was unmanageable and would give no further aid, asking why they were bringing people up to identify him. He insisted that he was not the kind of a man to "peach," and finally nothing remained but to lock him up and work out the rest of the fraud without him.

Hay, who is 23 years of age, lives with his mother and sisters, and a cursory inquiry into his habits shows that he has no visible means of support and that he had his mail sent to a saloon at Geary and Mason streets.

Captain Seymour is co-operating with Captain Callundan and thinks that in time the accused, who is held on a complaint sworn to by Gompertz for obtaining money under false pretenses, will be connected with an attempt to work other firms in this city. The fraud which has been exposed is somewhat akin to the "directory swindle" in New York in 1898.

All day yesterday Hay, through his attorney, was trying to get out on habeas corpus proceedings. A writ was issued returnable before Judge Cook, who had to go out of town, and Judge Dunne was notified to take up the matter. He was busy and agreed to hear the case at 10 o'clock this morning. In the meantime, however, the complaint was sworn to and the warrant served.

328

Snap Judgment Not Granted.

Alfred A. Van Hovenberg, attorney for ... A. ... in his suit against Mrs. Florence Hettie Hinckley Moore, sought to have her default entered yesterday in the case, although her time to answer had been extended, but Judge ... refused its demand. The suit is for the Thomas ... estate, ... claiming title under a deed from Alice Edith Dickason.

NEW TRIAL ORDERED BY THE SUPREME COURT FOR MURDERER HOFF

ALBERT HOFF, MURDERER, WHO HAS BEEN GRANTED A NEW TRIAL, AND MRS. BOTKIN, MURDERESS, IN WHOSE FAVOR A DECISION MAY BE RENDERED ON THE SAME GROUNDS.

When a Judge tells a jury that although there is no evidence of motive on the part of the defendant for the commission of the offense charged, there may nevertheless have been a motive undiscovered, and that circumstantial evidence (the evidence relied upon to convict) has the advantage of direct evidence because it is not likely to be fabricated, he certainly expresses an opinion upon the force and effect of the testimony and intimates his view of the evidence.—Excerpt from the majority opinion of the Supreme Court remanding the Hoff murder case for retrial.

THE Supreme Court on rehearing of the argument has confirmed its first opinion remanding Albert Hoff, convicted of murder, to the Superior Court for retrial.

The ground for reversing the case, as set forth in the opinion handed down yesterday ... up in ...

[illegible]

Van Dyke, in concurring with Justice Garoutte, says:

"I dissent and concur in the main with what is said in the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Garoutte."

Justice McFarland wrote no opinion, contenting himself with the words: "I dissent."

Judge Intimated His View.

Justice Beatty, speaking for the majority, says:

"When a Judge tells a jury that although there is no evidence of a motive on the part of the defendant for the commission of the offense charged, there may nevertheless have been a motive undiscovered, and that circumstantial evidence ... has the advantage of direct evidence because it is not likely to be fabricated, he certainly expresses an opinion upon the force and effect of the testimony and intimates his view of the evidence."

Upon oral argument at the time of a rehearing the Attorney-General called the court's attention to the ... of ... Webster ... New York ... In commenting upon those cases the Supreme Court says the trial Judges in those instances were free from any constitutional or statutory restriction as to commenting on the evidence ... to the jurors. Continuing, the court says:

"It is scarcely necessary to extend this review of cases decided in other jurisdictions, since we may find in our own decisions the ... explicit statements of the true ... of the clause in question."

Instant Case Not Apt.

A number of California cases are cited and opinions of McFarland and Henshaw are quoted, while the instant case in which the instructions were given by Judge Murphy is distinguished as having no bearing on the Hoff case.

In his dissenting opinion Justice Garoutte, after ... calling upon the ... and legal style of the instructions given to the jury, says:

"Notwithstanding the foregoing suggestions, I see nothing in the instruction upon circumstantial evidence that justifies an order of this court calling for a second trial of the defendant. The declarations taken from the instructions and quoted in the majority opinion have been repeatedly given in the juries in criminal cases in the past, and upon appeal to this court have been ... ... in the ... of the law. These cases have declared the criminal law of this State too long to be now overthrown and cast aside without the gravest reasons. I think these reasons are entirely lacking.

... antial evidence ... to courts of ... matter not ... king up ... duty to ... At ...

[illegible]

SHERIFF'S ERROR A CAUSE OF DELAY

Peter McGlade's Third Trial Opens Up With a Brief Sensation About the Summoning of Men for a Jury.

Mr. Lackmann Called a Veniro of 200 Instead of 150 and Assumed Authority of Granting Dismissals.

Defendant's Attorneys Challenge the Venire as Irregular and the Point That They Made Is Sustained.

The Peter McGlade case, so prolific of scandals in the attempt to help this man out of the penitentiary, developed a small sensation yesterday. It wasn't a matter of much importance, but it gave to the defendant an additional day of delay.

Tuesday morning Judge Burnett of Santa Rosa was in readiness to begin the trial, having come to this city to relieve Judge Cook, who had conducted three McGlade trials and was weary of them. A venire of 150 talesmen had been summoned, but Attorneys Lennon and Hawkins, who represented the prisoner, were not willing to proceed. Mr. Lennon presented technical objections by which he obtained a continuance for a day.

When the case was called yesterday morning there was a similar array of court officials, attorneys and jurors.

"We object to this venire as irregular," said Mr. Lennon, taking the floor at the very beginning of the proceedings. "A venire of 150 talesmen was ordered, but the Sheriff had summoned 200, some of whom he had dismissed at his own volition. The entire venire has been corrupted and we charge that the Sheriff has been actuated by bias and cowardice."

Mr. Byington and Mr. Deuprey were both eager to talk, but Judge Burnett had inquiries to make and he ordered that Deputy Sheriff George Hare, who had been detailed to summon the jurors, be called to the witness stand.

Mr. Hare testified that in order to obtain the special venire he had taken names from the directory and the assessment roll. In order to be sure of the required 150, he and his assistants had summoned 200, and of these he had excused forty. There were 140 in court.

"Did you have any conversation with District Attorney Byington about the jurors?" inquired Mr. Lennon.

"Yes, Mr. Byington asked me to summon good, respectable men."

Judge Burnett held that the Deputy Sheriff had exceeded his authority, and so he dismissed the entire venire, ordering a new venire of ... men to be summoned for today.

Judge Burnett then asked Mr. Lennon for proofs to substantiate the charge that the Sheriff was actuated by bias and prejudice, but Mr. Lennon withdrew the charge, reserving the right to renew it if he should have the proofs.

[illegible]

Petition for Letters.

In the estate of Peter Christensen, who died February 11, 19[illegible], a petition for admission of will to probate was filed yesterday by Public Administrator [illegible]. The estate is worth about $[illegible] and is disposed of by an olographic will under date of February 6, 19[illegible], in which John [illegible], Louis [illegible] and the Children's Home Society are named as the devisees. It will be remembered that the will disposed of only a small part of the estate, and that there was a lively contest among certain alleged heirs for the remainder. [illegible] White is the attorney for the petitioner, with James H. Budd and [illegible] of counsel.

Says the Deed Was Forged.

In the suit for recovery of property belonging to the Anna Herzo estate before Judge Coffey, Expert Theodore Kytka yesterday testified that Mrs. Herzo's signature had been forged on the deed by which a restaurant on Third street was conveyed to John Clecak and M. J. Catusich.

SAYS SHE PROPOSED A DEATH-BED MARRIAGE.

Michael Catusich Testifies That Mrs. Anna Herzo Wished to Wed Him Before She Died.

Michael Catusich, one of the executors of the will of Mrs. Anna Herzo, was on the witness stand in Judge Coffey's court Tuesday. Mrs. Ellena Hadisich, sister of Mrs. Herzo and one of the principal legatees, complained that Catusich and John Clecak, the other executor, had misappropriated property belonging to the estate and she asked that they be removed and be compelled to [illegible]. The alleged misappropriation was denied by both of them. They said that they had purchased a restaurant in this city which Mrs. Hadisich averred belonged to Mrs. Herzo's estate, and that they paid her [illegible] for it.

It had been stated that Catusich [illegible] Mrs. Herzo and that he was anxious to marry her [illegible] her wealth. She left a large estate. Catusich testified that during her last [illegible] he was [illegible] and night [illegible] for her and that shortly before her death she asked him to send for a Justice of the Peace so that they might be married.

"She told me that if we got married she would die happy," Catusich said. "I told her that she would soon be well and then we would get married and go away on a wedding trip. I [illegible] to encourage her. She turned her face away and tears came to her eyes."

Attorney [illegible] asked Catusich to give samples of his handwriting. [illegible] had an idea that the documents produced by Catusich and Clecak [illegible] the transfer of property to them by Mrs. Herzo were not genuine. The hearing will be resumed next Monday.

FORMER MAYOR OF CHICO HELD TO BE A PERJURER.

Mrs. S M Houseworth.

Dr. J. Ellis Rodley, Convicted of Perjury

Decision of Supreme Court in Case of Dr. Rodley.

DR. J. ELLIS RODLEY, ex-Mayor of Chico, must serve out the twelve years of imprisonment meted out to him as punishment for perjury committed in subscribing his name to the bogus will of Alfred Fuller. This is the judgment of the Supreme Court, which body handed down a decision affirming the action of the lower court.

The arrest of Rodley was the sensation of the year in Chico. It was charged that he, Mrs. S. M. Houseworth and J. M. Harner had entered into a conspiracy to obtain possession of the estate of Alfred Fuller. Harner confessed a few days after his arrest, and it was his testimony that exposed the method of the conspirators. According to Harner, Mrs. Houseworth had promised to pay him $[illegible].

Fuller was an old resident of Butte county and had accumulated about $72,000. His health was poor for many years, and for a long time he was attended by Mrs. Houseworth. After his death, which occurred on October 11, 19[illegible], a search was made for a will but none was found. Several months later Mrs. Houseworth presented a purported will, by the terms of which she was to receive the entire estate with the exception of $[illegible]. The distribution of the sum excepted was provided for in a clause which read as follows: "I request $[illegible] to be equally divided between the legal heirs of my estate." The will was dated June 9, 19[illegible], and the attestation of Rodley and Harner, the witnesses, bore date of August 3, 19[illegible].

A contest was begun by the legal heirs of Fuller, and at the trial expert evidence was introduced that forced the Court to find that the will was a forgery and that Rodley and Harner had committed perjury in swearing that they had signed the will as witnesses at Fuller's request. Rodley gave bonds promptly when arrested, and stubbornly fought the charge, but despite his efforts to keep out of prison his trial resulted in a conviction.

An appeal was taken to the Supreme Court upon the question of the admission of certain evidence and upon instructions delivered by the Court, and others asked for by the defendant, was refused. One of the points raised was that conspiracy had been shown between Mrs. Houseworth, Rodley and Harner to filch the estate. The testimony in question was presented by a witness, [illegible], that Mrs. Houseworth long after the death of Fuller had approached him and asked him to become a witness to the will, saying that she would pay him $[illegible] for his services, as she had agreed to pay Dr. Rodley the same amount for his signature. The Supreme Court held that this evidence was admissible, as it went to show that the defendant was in the conspiracy. There were fifty objections taken to instructions and rulings of the Court, all of which rulings were passed as valid.

The decision just rendered settles the matter finally so far as the courts of this State are concerned, but it is intimated that the attorney for the defendant will apply to the Supreme Court of the United States on a writ of error.

Fighting Off the Stripes.

In his hard fight to keep out of the penitentiary, Dr. J. Ellis Rodley of Chico was yesterday given a temporary respite by the Supreme Court. Chief Justice Beatty, in acting upon his writ of habeas corpus, ordered the Sheriff of Butte county to keep the prisoner in his custody pending action in the United States Supreme Court on a writ of error. Provision is also made for Dr. Rodley's release on bail, but the bond must be approved by the Chief Justice.

Dr. Rodley is under sentence to serve twelve years at San Quentin for perjury committed in the Fuller will case. He has been for years a prominent physician in the northern part of the State and was at one time Mayor of Chico. His arrest and conviction caused a sensation.

LIKE A PUZZLED CHILD, WIFE TELLS ENDING OF ROMANCE

Pretty Mrs. Chadwick-Cooper Home Again, Leaving Her Husband in the Ogden Jail.

PRETTY Norine Schneider's [illegible] is ended. All her castles in the air have disappeared like thistledown before a summer wind. After a five-weeks ardent courtship [illegible] with diamonds and dreams of wealth and [illegible] in Mamma Schneider's comforting [illegible].

"It is all like a novel, just like a novel," said Mamma Schneider yesterday, [illegible]

MRS. CHADWICK-COOPER [illegible] NORINE SCHNEIDER, AS SHE APPEARED IN TELLING OF HER MATRIMONIAL [illegible] WITH ADVENTURER HARRY [illegible] COOPER

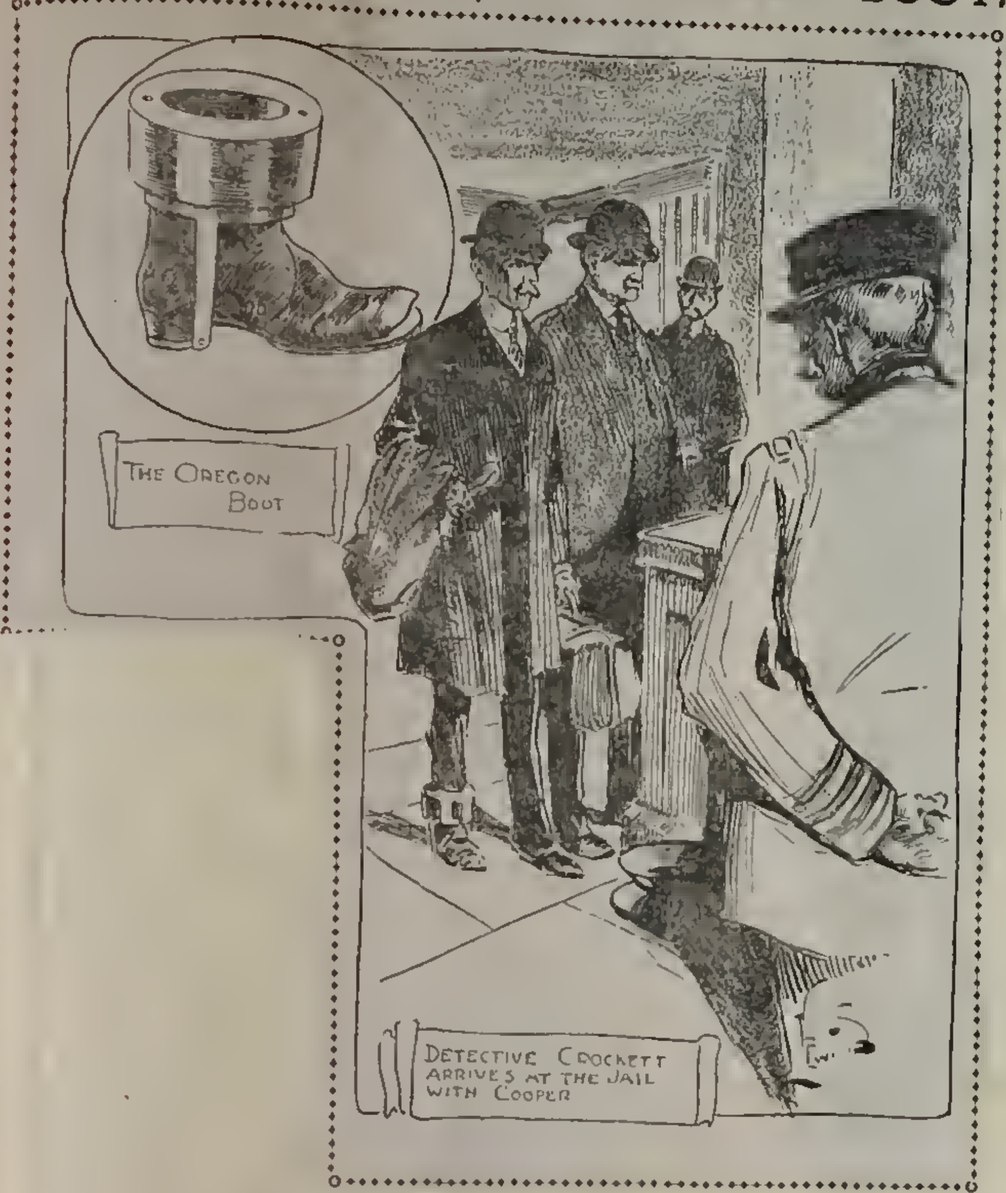
[illegible] and a few days [illegible] a trial experience like a [illegible] drama, she is back again [illegible] with her mother.

Her swindling bigamist [illegible] Ernest Moore [illegible] for her at the [illegible] Colonel Andrews' diamond palace.

Of all the romance that began [illegible] with the gallant and engaging [illegible] Crockett doctor in her papa's hotel at Vallejo Junction there is nothing left [illegible] forged [illegible] telegrams [illegible] the tawdry [illegible] love letters of a criminal and the tears of a hoodwinked, confiding, tender girl in [illegible]

[illegible]

COOPER COMES BACK WEARING SEVENTEEN-POUND OREGON BOOT.



MUST NOT TAMPER WITH THIS JURY

Judge Lawlor Takes Pains to Warn the Jurors Selected to Try Daniel J. Sullivan on a Charge of Forgery.

A Suggestive Lapse of Memory Concerning the Circumstances of the Case Manifested by Many Talesmen.

Court Enjoins Them to Report to Him the Effort of Any Person to Engage in Conversation About the Case.

"The Court admonishes you that it is your duty to report promptly to the Court the effort of any person to engage you in conversation on any subject connected with the trial of this case, or to carry on a conversation in your presence or hearing, or in any way do anything calculated to create impressions in your minds concerning the facts involved or the result of the trial, so that appropriate action may be taken thereon."

The jury selected to try Daniel J. Sullivan, formerly bookkeeper in the office of Bond and Warrant Clerk Charles A. Perry, was made the object of special admonition by Judge Lawlor yesterday, probably because of the suggestive lapse of memory concerning the circumstances of the case manifested by many of the talesmen examined before selection.

Sullivan is charged with forging the name of Police Judge Cabaniss to an order of release for a prisoner in the City Prison. There are two other similar charges against the defendant.

After the impanelment of the jury a continuance was granted until to-day, owing to the illness of Assistant District Attorney Alford, who has charge of the case. In dismissing the jury for the day, Judge Lawlor cautioned them in the words already quoted. The jurors are:

[illegible]

TO TRY FORGERY CHARGE FIRST

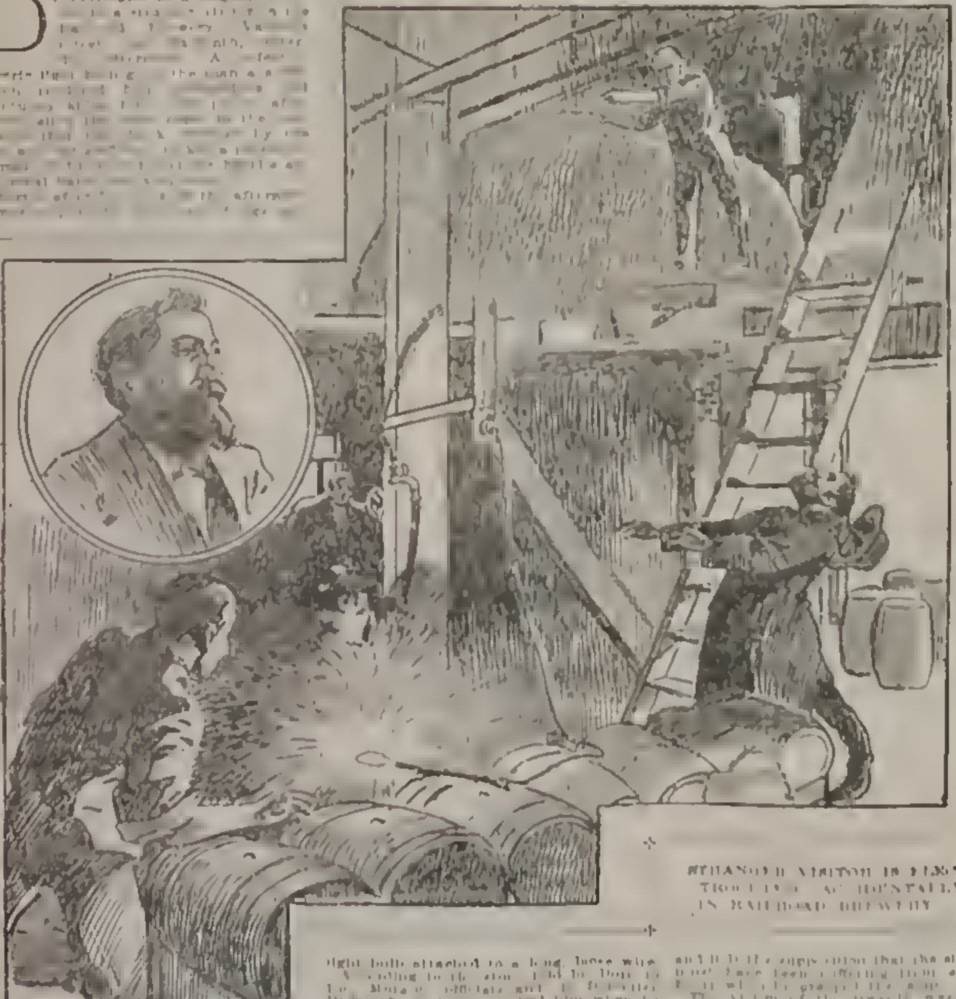
"Sir" Harry Westwood Cooper's Cases Before the Courts.

"Sir" Harry Westwood Cooper, alias Ernest Chadwick, appeared in Judge Carroll Cook's court yesterday, but his trial for forgery was postponed until Saturday. At that time a beginning will be made in impaneling a jury. The trial on a charge of perjury will be assigned by Judge Dunne Saturday.

ASKS FOR A GLASS OF BEER AND RECEIVES FATAL SHOCK

Death of a Stranger in a Brewery Follows Contact With Defective Electric Light Bulb.

D[illegible]



STRANGER VISITOR IS ELECTROCUTED ACCIDENTALLY IN RAILROAD BREWERY

[illegible]

May 8 – 1900

June 2 – 1900

Vol. XIX

CALIFORNIA DECISIONS.

PUBLISHED SEMI-WEEKLY BY

L. R. DEMPSTER,

COR. BOND ST. AND GLEN PARK AVE

SAN FRANCISCO

TELEPHONE SOUTH 284.

Subscription Price:

Per Year	$12.00
Single Copies to non-subscribers	25

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco as second-class matter August 3, 1899

CRIMINAL LAW—LIBEL—EVIDENCE—EXPERT TESTIMONY—HANDWRITING—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In a [illegible]tion for libel, where the indictment is based upon an anonymous letter, which the defendant claims was not written by her but by another person and samples of the handwriting of the latter person are shown to an expert on examination for comparison with the anonymous [illegible] are put in evidence the expert testifying that there is no similarity or resemblance [illegible] it is error for the court to strike the [illegible] from the evidence on the motion of the [illegible] attorney on the ground that there had been no independent evidence connecting [illegible] of the samples with the libelous letter, as the jury had a right to pass upon the question of the resemblance or similarity of the handwritings and [illegible] with reference [illegible].

Appeal from Superior Court of Santa Barbara County.

For Appellant, H. F. Starbuck, C. T. Currier.

For Respondent, Attorney General Ford.

Filed May 3, 1900.

IN BANK

The People of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent, vs. Vida Addis Stoake, Defendant and Appellant.	Crim. No. 595.

Defendant was convicted of the crime of libel and prosecutes this appeal from the judgment and order denying a new trial.

It appears from the evidence that during the year 1895 a number of scurrilous letters reflecting upon Dr. Martha Case, Dr. Winchester and others of Santa Barbara were put in circulation in that town. The letters were all anonymous, and differed considerably both in penmanship and style, some appearing to have been written by women in a feminine hand, some quite illiterate in style, and others in a business, clerical hand, and of this class was the letter addressed to Dr. Martha Case, accusing her of being the mistress of Dr. Winchester, and imputing to Dr. Winchester immoral and scandalous conduct. The indictment in the case was based upon this particular letter. The defendant denied having written these letters, and, aside from showing that she was unfriendly to Dr. Winchester, the evidence was circumstantial, resting upon the opinion of witnesses as to the similarity between defendant's handwritings and these anonymous and libelous letters. The greatest stress seems to have been laid upon the opinion testimony of Theodore Kitka, an expert in handwriting. His testimony, which ran through several days of the trial, was to the effect that all the libelous letters introduced in evidence were in the handwriting of the defendant. The defendant claimed and sought to prove that one F. N. Gutierrez, who seems to have been an expert in various styles of handwriting, had written these anonymous and libelous letters at the instigation of other parties who were enemies of the defendant, for the purpose of implicating her in the offense charged. During the progress of the trial, while the witness Kitka was under examination, a large number of samples of the writings of Gutierrez was shown him, and he was asked to compare them with the handwritings of the libelous and disputed letters, and particularly in reference to certain peculiarities both of the letters written by Gutierrez and the disputed letters; the witness, however, testified that in his opinion there was no similarity or resemblance between them.

Before closing his case in rebuttal the district attorney moved to strike out all the samples in the handwriting of Gutierrez which had been admitted in evidence for the purpose of comparison, as stated, on the ground that there had been no independent evidence connecting Gutierrez with the disputed and libelous letters. Defendant's attorney objected to striking out said evidence, contending that, having been introduced for the purpose stated, the jury were entitled to examine the same and determine for themselves from a personal inspection. The court granted the motion to strike out, on the ground, as appears in the record, that there was no independent evidence tending to connect Gutierrez with the disputed writings, and therefore the jury had no right to consider the admitted writings of Gutierrez for the purpose of comparison with the disputed writings.

We think the court erred in striking out the evidence in question. In a case involving a comparison of different writings, the ordinary individual can frequently arrive at a conclusion quite as correct as that of the opinion of the most skilled expert in handwriting, particularly where, as in this case, the expert testified that there was no resemblance or similarity. Such is the rule of law not only in this State, but in others. C. C. P., § 1944. As said in Garvin vs. State, 52 Miss., 207: "Jurors may use their eyes as well as their ears." See also Gannt vs. State, 50 N. J. L., 490; Vinton vs. Peck, 14 Mich., 287; Dietz vs. First Nat. Bank, 69 Mich., 287; Rose vs. First Nat. Bank, 91 Mo., 399; Wagoner vs. Ruply, 69 Tex., 567; Brobston vs. Cahill, 64 Ill., 356.

The jury, therefore, should have been permitted to pass upon the question of the resemblance or similarity of Gutierrez writings with the disputed writings and form their own conclusion in reference to such similarity or resemblance. As it was, this expert witness was substituted for the jury in passing upon this question of fact under consideration. By a personal inspection the jury might have formed a different opinion from that of the expert. At any rate, an examination of the letters by comparison might have raised a reasonable doubt as to whether the disputed writings were by the defendant.

The other points presented on the part of the appellant are not of sufficient importance to require special consideration, but on account of the error already pointed out the judgment and order denying a new trial will have to be reversed; and it is so ordered.

VAN DYKE, J.

We concur:
TEMPLE, J.,
BEATTY, C. J.,
MCFARLAND, J.

ILLEGAL USES OF PHOTOGRAPHY.

By Thomas W. Hayes, U. S. Secret Service.

The use of photography in making counterfeit bills and stamps of the United States has become so general that the members of the Secret Service division of the Treasury Department has undergone a course of instruction upon the practical uses of that science.

The statutes of the United States forbids the making, procuring, or even the possession of a photograph of any government obligation. Although this law is generally known, the Secret Service has to seize some print or likeness of a Treasury certificate or coin every day or so. It is well for photographers generally to be fully informed of the law upon the subject, so that they can instruct prospective customers as to its danger.

Most of the counterfeiters of bills now use photography in reproduction. One of the most dangerous bills the Secret Service ever had to combat was made through a photographic process. Newspaper readers are familiar with the gigantic plot of the Jacobs-Kendig gang in Philadelphia last year. The counterfeit "Monroe head" one-hundred-dollar bill was one of the best counterfeits ever turned out.

W. L. Jacobs, a wealthy cigar manufacturer, together with W. L. Kendig and Arthur Taylor, two engravers, planned to bribe a Treasury official, issue $10,000,000 of the fraudulent notes, place them in the Treasury, and draw out $10,000,000 in good money. Had it not been for the cupidity of the engravers, there is not a doubt but what the great steal would have been an accomplished fact. Each member of the gang was to get $2,000,000 as his share of the proceeds.

The plates were photographed on steel, etched, and the finished bills were perfect. Banks accepted them without hesitancy. The lathe work on the back of the bills was even more perfect than that upon the original bills. The camera had brought out every single line on the original bill, and the finished product was a perfect piece of the engraver's art. But the engravers grew impatient and did not wait for the steal on the Treasury to be consummated. They passed hundreds of the bills, and the counterfeit was discovered. A few days later Chief Wilkie of the Secret Service had unearthed the whole plot and arrested all of the conspirators.

Walter C. Cresson was arrested by the writer in a St. Louis cellar just as he had completed an exposure of a $10 certificate. He was a noted counterfeiter, but a conviction was not secured because the government could not prove that he had made a photograph of the bill. Had we allowed him to develop his negative, a conviction would have been certain.

In 1895 William J. Beane, alias W. J. Furton, also a noted counterfeiter, was arrested in Oakland. He had in his possession a complete photographic outfit, and was engaged in turning out an exceedingly dangerous $10 bill. He was sentenced to four years' imprisonment.

On the whole, it is best for photographers not to experiment with Uncle Sam's bills as subjects.

Call May 15 — 1900

MRS. BOTKIN SEEN BY MORE THAN COOK

Two Ex-Sheriff's Employes Who Are Sure They Met the Woman on Market Street.

The Judge and the Prisoner.

[illegible]

[illegible] No. 22 – Alexander Farm [illegible] Fields
Lost $2500 here

T Kytola [illegible]

good,

DUE WARNING TO ALL CAMPERS AND HUNTERS

Heavy Fines Must Be Paid to School Districts by Those Causing Forest Fires.

Special Dispatch to The Call.

CALL HEADQUARTERS, WELLINGTON HOTEL, WASHINGTON, May 14. The following bill, which recently became a law, was championed by Representative Julius Kahn of California. It will be of particular interest to hunters, campers, etc., to know the danger they run unless they extinguish the fires built by them:

[illegible]

Call
May 15
1900

HORSE HAVEN

MOTHERS OF FAMOUS SONS

BRENTWOOD STOCK FARM. HOME OF MANAGER.

GROUP OF FAST HORSES FLYBYNIGHT ON LEFT.

NOWADAYS, when high-bred horses earn thousands and sometimes hundreds of thousands of dollars during a single season, as much care is bestowed upon them by owners, grooms [illegible] as though they were princes of the blood royal. Indeed, no prince, though a kingdom hung upon his life, is watched so jealously and treated with [illegible] care as a king or queen of [illegible]. As the fame of California as the home and training ground of world beating trotters and runners spreads through the country more and more interest is taken in the methods [illegible] here in the breeding up of horse flesh. California is watched with eager interest by horsemen the world over, for here are being developed ideas in the scientific development of strength and speed in horses that may revolutionize the sport.

To the glorious climate of California must be given the largest praise for the wonderful work already done. Nowhere else can the sensitive and highly strung thoroughbreds stay in the fields day and night, winter and summer,

HAMILTON II.

TAKING A STROLL.

HAMILTON II.

LOADING BARLEY FOR FEED.

MOWING ALFALFA.

w[illegible] benefit to health, wind and limb. [illegible] grass regions of Kentucky are swept with snow and sleet part of the year and the [illegible] of England are [illegible] in cool mist and rain, but [illegible] and warmth transform the pastures of California into an equine paradise.

In several parts of California the [illegible] care of horses is being studied, [illegible] of money on a lavish scale. The more famous stables and breeding farms have been described in detail. One of the most interesting of the newer institutions, about which little has yet been said, is the "horse sanitarium" near Brentwood, in eastern Contra Costa county, at the head of the San Joaquin valley. There many novel methods are in vogue which are worthy of the notice of all lovers of horse flesh.

Brentwood stock farm is situated five miles north of Brentwood station, on the Southern Pacific, and within a mile or two of the new station of Oakley, on the Valley Railroad. It is owned by H. Dutard of San Francisco, who has already expended $100,000 in making this a Garden of Eden for horses. From the time five years ago, when analyses of the soil were made until the present day, when seventeen kinds of grasses are grown for horse feed, nothing has been left undone to bring out the matchless qualities of California soil and climate for the recuperation and building up of horses. The place is in reality a practical application of the rest cure to horses, with intelligent care and watchful skill in assisting the animals to throw off weakness, injuries, diseases or conditions inimical to speed or endurance.

Brentwood farm is in reality "made land." It is situated in the triangle formed by [illegible] arms of the San Joaquin river and is therefore nearly surrounded by water. By great labor and expense [illegible] levees have been thrown up, holding back the water of the river and confining it to the two [illegible] that stretch on either side of the farm. These canals have ten or twelve feet of water at all times, sufficient to float [illegible] schooners and large barges, which carry most of the freight of the farm and transport horses to and from the river steamers, and go to San Francisco.

When the land was first reclaimed it was low and boggy. That was four years ago. It has been steadily rising from the [illegible] until, in places, it is almost up to the level of the [illegible] after crop of alfalfa [illegible] feed, while the grass pastures send up their velvet growth so rapidly that herds of horses [illegible] The surplus is cut and [illegible]

The [illegible] however, is a secondary matter in the care of the horses [illegible] pastures. It is the [illegible] quality of the ground that [illegible] first. This quality may be appreciated when the terrific pounding to which a horse's feet are subjected in racing is recalled. During the season a horse runs almost daily, at frantic speed, over a hard, beaten track, and in spite of the utmost care it is impossible to avoid injuries to hoof and ankle. [illegible] animals are often sent to Brentwood apparently irretrievably ruined through this constant pounding. Often they cannot walk and are hauled to the grassy pasture and fed by hand for a day or two. Then, as they cool out and feel the grateful springy sod under them, they gain confidence, and gradually their feet and ankles return to original suppleness and strength. In an incredibly short time the horses are frisking about, sniffing the fresh breeze, and kicking up their heels as if they were colts again.

Coach horses, heavy truck horses, hackneys and cobs, which pound their feet to pieces on the basalt blocks of San Francisco, show such genuine surprise and astonishment when they are placed on the green sward of Brentwood that they arouse laughter. Some of the poor animals are frightened with the elasticity of the ground and tremble as though they expected a sewer to open under them. Others walk slowly about, sniffing the fresh earth, which is so strange to them, until they are sure of their ground, when they rush wildly about, head and tail up, in the first great romp of their lives.

Frank Nugent, whose intuitive knowledge of horseflesh is as great as David Harum's, is in charge of affairs at Brentwood. He originated most of the reforms in the big sanitarium, and personally watches the progress of every horse that comes to take the rest cure. He pointed proudly to a heavy Percheron mare passing by drawing an enormous load of hay, and said: "There is a mare that was broken down by the paving stones of San Francisco. She hurt her back—a horse's weakest and most vulnerable spot—and was worthless. I got her for [illegible]. I took her just to see what I could do in building her up. She could not walk when I brought her here. I fed her with a little [illegible] at first, and she was so utterly broken in spirit that she dared not try to stand on her feet. By degrees she acquired confidence, until within a few weeks she was galloping about, perfectly free of every sign of weakness. I have been using her here, and have refused [illegible] for her. She is absolutely sound and does not hesitate to pull any load."

The same history is recited of high-bred race horses, which have taken the Brentwood rest cure to recover from over-racing, too much dope or bad feeding. They gain the glow of health and the swiftness of their prime.

Brentwood farm contains [illegible] acres. It is divided and subdivided into a [illegible] of fields, pastures and paddocks. Not a foot of barbed wire is on the place. Rotation of fields and change of grasses are used in the [illegible] of Superintendent Nugent to bring a horse out of the dumps in the quickest possible time. In his experiment with grasses, Mr. Nugent was the lucky discoverer of a new grass, short stocky, quick growing, nutritious and agreeable to the finicky palate of his pets. The savants of the State University have been asked to define and classify this grass, which seems to be new to California. Besides this grass, alfalfa, barley, blue grass and the native grass are used to a large extent. The native grass is in some respects superior to any other. It grows with such luxuriance in the Brentwood pastures that it is no unusual sight to see a bunch of colts wading through it with only their heads visible.

[illegible] that it contains a piece of high, somewhat hard ground, as well as the soft and elastic bottom. The animals are thus enabled to try out their own feet and test them [illegible] in returning strength. At certain seasons when the alfalfa requires it the bottom can be flooded from the levees without reaching the higher ground upon which the horses continue grazing undisturbed.

This flooding process, by the way, is a most ingenious one, the outcome of an intelligent perception of the natural advantages of the situation. The power that raises the water and carries it through the ditches is the Pacific ocean, though the farm is sixty miles inland. When the tide runs into the Golden Gate, forcing millions of tons of water into the bay, it backs up the waters of the San Joaquin river, and this in turn raises the water in the little canals on either side of Brentwood farm. The rise and fall averages six feet. By a system of gates Superintendent Nugent has artfully contrived to let the tide force the fresh water into ditches, where it is locked as the tide recedes and diverted into the field where required. Thus, in five minutes' time and by the mere closing of a gate the force of the ocean is used to irrigate alfalfa fields far out of sight of the ocean.

"We have built the levees on the safety plan," said Superintendent Nugent. "That is, we have run them up to a point higher than the highest flood ever known. Our ditches work both ways, too, which is a novelty. If there is a flood of water that we want to get rid of, all we have to do is to open the gates when the tide is low and it runs off into the canal and so to sea. If the water is wanted, and it is too low to reach the gates by the tidal power, we use the big siphon that runs over the side of the levee into this ditch. We use a hand-pump, like a kitchen pump, to suck the air out of this big siphon, and then, the land being lower than the water on the other side of the levee, the water flows over the levee and irrigates our fields. No labor at all is involved, either in pumping or directing the flow of the water."

In many cases horses require delicate handling when they first arrive at Brentwood. They are nervous with much racing, overstrung, off their feed and generally broken down. They are placed in a separate paddock, with an eight-foot double-tight board fence, insuring them isolation, quiet and absolute rest. Hay, water and feed can be given to a horse without entering the paddock. The paddock itself is a miniature field, covered with alfalfa, or blue grass, or young barley. Under these circumstances a horse quickly recovers his spirit and then his strength. The same treatment that would be beneficial to a neurotic human being is applied to the horse, with equally beneficial results. Each paddock has an inclosure in which the horse may withdraw in rainy weather.

When Mr. Dutard selected Brentwood for his novel horse sanitarium he did it with the object of securing for the animals immunity from mosquitoes or other insect pests. The constant breeze blowing from the sea secures this result at Brentwood, where mosquitoes are unknown. The breeze is the same as that which sweeps over the peninsula of San Francisco, save that it is tempered by [illegible] miles [illegible] over cultivated fields and long stretches of chaparral.

One of the enthusiastic admirers of Brentwood farm is Sam Hildreth, trainer for William C. Whitney, ex-Secretary of the Navy. Hildreth said: "Taking into consideration everything, from the climate to the care of each horse, there is no place to equal this. It is an ideal place for the recuperation of race horses."

Barney Schreiber, too, is a believer in the California rest cure for race horses. He has a number of valuable animals at Brentwood now, including Flyby-night. He argues that the cool pastures are of more benefit to horses than the higher lands, which are dry and hard. Whenever one of his numerous racers is knocked out by hard riding, accident or indiscreet feeding, he sends it to Brentwood for the rest cure. In a few days it is returned, glossy as silk, hard fleshed, sound in hoof and wind, and full of spirit.

The success of Brentwood in handling local and Eastern horses of renown has attracted great attention. Famous horses are sent there from all parts to undergo the treatment that practically remakes them. A whole string of Eastern horses is to be taken in hand this summer, to be turned out in the early fall ready to run.

With the success of Brentwood established it is more than likely that other model farms will be laid out in various parts of California, where peculiar advantages of climate, water supply and soil will render them profitable. The State in time seems bound to wrest the laurels from Kentucky as the ideal home for horses, [illegible] haven in a sense both large and wide.

Mch 25 1901

SCHOOL BOARD HELD IN CONTEMPT OF COURT

SPECIMEN OF THE CALIFORNIA SYSTEM, WHICH IS SAID TO BE THE LEGAL COPY-BOOK SERIES.

We minded that the sharpest ear
The buried brooklet could not hear.

CALIFORNIA

Hundred Years War with France
Shakespeare was born at Stratford

SHAYLOR

SPECIMEN OF THE NEW YORK SYSTEM, FOR UPHOLDING WHICH JUDGE HEBBARD SAYS THE MEMBERS OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION ARE IN CONTEMPT

CONTEMPT of court is the charge that stands against the Board of Education on Judge Hebbard's calendar. Cecil W. Mark, Mrs. Mary Kincaid, James Denman and John H. Casserly must show cause why they should not be punished for neglecting to obey an order of the court in regard to a change in copy books.

The members of the board were before Judge Hebbard yesterday, and their explanation was only half satisfactory. They said they had taken an appeal from the ruling of the court, and therefore considered they had a right to consider Judge Hebbard's order as a negligible quantity until the Supreme Court's decree is received.

A discussion in regard to the legal phase of the matter ensued. It grew out of the suit of J. C. Green against the former Board of Education. About a year ago the board directed that the California system of vertical writing published by the H. S. Crocker Company of San Francisco should be discarded, and that the Shaylor system of vertical writing, published by Ginn & Co. of New York, put in use in the public schools of San Francisco. Crocker & Co. had Green bring the suit to test the validity of the School Directors' action, and Judge Hebbard decided Crocker's books to be the only ones from which the young idea of San Francisco may legally learn to write. He therefore directed that Ginn's books be abandoned and Crocker's reinstated.

The members of the Board of Education compared the two systems and could discover no material difference in them, so it was resolved to await the Supreme Court's ultimatum before switching back to the California system. It was figured out that the parents of 30,000 pupils had paid for the Crocker books when they were first introduced, and that an equal number subsequently purchased the New York system. Now if the California books be restored, it will necessitate the buying of 30,000 new books, and if the Supreme Court reverses Judge Hebbard's decision it will require 30,000 more new books, and so on through the intricate mazes of litigation.

It was contended that if the Judge had granted a prohibitory writ the appeal would not stay proceedings, and the Board of Education would be in contempt, but there was a mandatory order, and appeal from that part of the judgment would stay proceedings. Judge Hebbard intimated that next Wednesday, unless restrained by a writ of prohibition from the Supreme Court, he will formally adjudge the respondents guilty of contempt.

HALF-BREED HEIR MUST DISGORGE

Asked to Show His Proofs of Heirship.

MOODY & CO. VS. TREAT & SON

Gridley Merchants Having Some Difficulty in Collecting a Bill of Some $200 or More From a Slippery Jap—Win the First Case But an Appeal is Taken.

Special to the Enterprise.

OROVILLE, March 22.—The attorneys for the Eastern heirs of Alfred Fuller have filed notice directed to William Fuller which may cause him to "show his hand," so to speak. In other words, they have filed notice directed to the alleged heir, for an inspection, on April 3d, of all copies of accounts, books, papers, documents, letters and written matter of every kind, which may be in the possession of Wm. Fuller, involving his proof of heirship.

ANOTHER MOVE IN THE ALFRED FULLER CASE

Attorney for Eastern Heirs Wants to See the Indian's Documentary Proof

OLD MAN'S LETTERS ARE SOUGHT

Motion to be Made April 3d for an Order Commanding Their Production in Court

Special to The Record.

OROVILLE, March 22.—Attorneys Carter and Dockweiler, who represent William Fuller, the half breed Indian of Tuolumne who claims to be the son of Alfred Fuller, deceased, on account of whose estate three prominent persons are in jail, may be compelled to produce for the benefit of the eastern heirs of Alfred Fuller, their important documentary evidence tending to prove the heirship of their client.

Attorney Carleton Gray, representing the fifteen eastern heirs of Fuller, today gave notice that on Tuesday, April 3d, at 10 a. m. he will offer a motion for an order directing the attorneys for William Fuller to produce for inspection and copying, if necessary, all the accounts, books, documents and letters in their possession or under their [illegible], and more particularly the [illegible] to William Fuller in [illegible] to show that Alfred Fuller [illegible] William Fuller as [illegible]. The motion will be made under Sec. 1000, Code of Civil Procedure. Attorney W. H. Carlin of Marysville is now associated with Attorney Gray.

COURTS WILL HEAR OF BELL SECRETS

MRS. TERESA BELL, WHO DECLARES THAT THE ESTATE OF HER LATE HUSBAND, THOMAS BELL, IS NOT INSOLVENT, AS WAS REPORTED

THAT the bonds of a [illegible] that [illegible] back financial life to an estate that has long been regarded as hopelessly involved in debt and litigation is the latest and most unexpected [illegible] that [illegible] from the tangled affairs of Thomas Bell's estate.

The mystery that has [illegible] of the administration of this estate is to have a remarkable chapter added, which it it turns out as Mrs. Teresa Bell predicts, will be the brightest episode in the gloomy history of a [illegible] aged estate.

San Franciscans are tolerably well acquainted with the [illegible] the Bell family that began to [illegible] and [illegible] after the death of Bell over seven years ago. Mrs. Bell, the widow of Thomas Bell, who now has taken the [illegible], has hitherto remained in the background [illegible] a retiring person who scarcely dared to call her soul her own, while across her life pathway fell the shadow of the influence of Mrs. Mary E. Pleasant, a [illegible] mental [illegible] known [illegible] as "Mammy" Pleasant [illegible] attained prominence in the Sharon-Hill-Sharon litigation.

At last Mrs. Bell [illegible] herself and [illegible] a secret which [illegible] the [illegible] Mammy Pleasant, after the [illegible] letter [illegible] that [illegible] years had been [illegible] against her [illegible] information concerning her own affairs.

With all the [illegible] has been [illegible] Mrs. Bell has plunged into the task of rejuvenating her husband's estate [illegible] hopeless loss [illegible] out of their [illegible].

First and foremost [illegible] are the mining properties [illegible] estate of her husband is interested. This property is located near [illegible] Mexico and Mrs. Bell has expressed a determination to go to Mexico for the purpose of adjusting and protecting the rights of her husband's estate in that country.

The mining properties in which the Bell estate is interested is [illegible] proposition, the works employing not less than [illegible] men continuously [illegible] extensive machinery and utilizing [illegible] and mules in its operations. Mrs. Bell says that she and her children, as the heirs of Thomas Bell, are entitled to a controlling interest in these mines and also will [illegible] [illegible] of the heirs as well as of the creditors.

Mrs. Bell recites that Bell died October 16, 1892, leaving an estate worth in the neighborhood of $1,000,000; that she was granted a family allowance of $2,000 a month from October 16, 1892, to October 14, 1896, when the allowance was reduced to $1,[illegible] a month, and that June 18, 1895, it was fixed at $[illegible] a month, at which figure it still remains. In consequence of the family allowance Mrs. Bell represents that she is a creditor of her husband's estate to the extent of $[illegible], exclusive of interest on overdue installments that Stacke represented himself unable to pay.

[illegible] Stacke's management of her husband's estate Mrs. Bell says that she was not aware of his delinquency to the [illegible] until last December, when she was informed of his duplicity. Stacke was Thomas Bell's partner and was named as [illegible] executors of Bell's will, Henry [illegible] and John W. [illegible] Maxwell being his co-executors under the provisions of the will. [illegible] resigned in 1892 and Stacke and Maxwell had joint control and management of the estate until September [illegible] 189[illegible], when Maxwell resigned, since which date Stacke acted as sole executor until he was suspended by Judge Coffey last Friday.

Mrs. Bell alleges that prior to his acceptance of the trust as executor of the Bell estate Stacke was the agent and attorney in fact of Mrs. Louise J. Thompson of New York, one of the creditors of the Bell estate; that Mrs. Thompson held a $[illegible] mortgage on [illegible] acres of land in Santa Barbara county, appraised at $134,750, and that the ranch was rented at $4,0[illegible] a year until July 189[illegible], after which it was rented for $[illegible] a year; that the executors collected the rent but did not attempt to pay off the mortgage; that Stacke wrote to Mrs. Thompson that there was no money with which to pay what was due her, that the ranch was worth double the amount of her claim and [illegible] foreclosure of the mortgage, telling her that he could manage it for her after she secured the title; that he would retain her power of attorney so that it would not appear that he was her agent at the time of the foreclosure proceedings, which he did February 13, 189[illegible], it being understood that no defense to the foreclosure proceedings should be made by Stacke or Maxwell, that the foreclosure suit did take place and the property was bid in by Mrs. Thompson for $[illegible], being the amount of the note with interest to the date of sale. She says that Stacke allowed the interest to become in arrears in order to induce Mrs. Thompson to foreclose the mortgage.

[illegible]

DEVONSHIRE'S NEPHEW ENGAGED TO AN ACTRESS.

[illegible]

April 5 - 1900

MARGUERITE SILVEY ON TRIAL FOR HER LIFE

Special Dispatch to the Call.

PRINCIPALS IN THE MERCED MURDER CASE AND THE SCENE OF THE TRAGEDY.

MERCED, April 4.—The trial of Miss Marguerite Silvey, charged with having killed Charles A. Thomas last December, commenced in the Superior Court this morning, Judge J. K. Law presiding. J. W. Knox appeared for the defendant and District Attorney F. G. Ostrander, assisted by F. W. Henderson, represented the people.

Shortly before 10 o'clock Miss Silvey, accompanied by her father, mother and her sister-in-law, Mrs. [illegible] Silvey, who was with her when she shot Thomas, entered the room and was seated near Miss Silvey's attorney. The defendant was very pale and showed signs of nervousness.

The following jurors were selected: C. [illegible], R. H. Waller, Thomas Max[illegible], W. C. Wil[illegible], G. W. Hasler, William Robinson, [illegible] Howell, [illegible] Chittenden, F. M. Preston, W. H. Mc[illegible], J. [illegible] and A. J[illegible]. The taking of evidence will commence to-morrow.

The young lady whom Thomas married after he [illegible] his divorce from the wife he left in Iowa arrived here yesterday to appear as a witness in the case. Her grandfather, Rev. A. H. Hitchcock, and [illegible] are also [illegible] here as witnesses. The latter married a sister of Thomas [illegible].

Promise of Marriage.

The circumstances of the murder are as follows:

Charles A. Thomas, a reporter on the Merced Star, after several [illegible] was [illegible] with Miss Marguerite [illegible] by her father to [illegible] several times [illegible] that he had [illegible] her. [illegible] after several [illegible] betrayed [illegible] train [illegible] they were [illegible] Los Angeles [illegible] at Fresno they got [illegible] a hotel [illegible] wife [illegible]

After a few days Mrs. [illegible] Fresno, to follow [illegible] Merced [illegible] his wife and the two [illegible] the girl's father [illegible] the marriage [illegible] Thomas [illegible] at least made an excuse regarding his whereabouts.

As the father was unable to obtain any proof that a ceremony had been performed he demanded the return of his daughter. Thomas refused and the girl seemed desirous of remaining with him. Her brother, Lace Silvey, armed with a pistol, called at the house where the two were rooming and demanded that his sister return with him to her father's home, and when Thomas attempted to interfere he fired several shots at him, none taking effect. He succeeded in getting his sister to her former home, but through a secret means, she succeeded in carrying on a correspondence with her lover and asked him to take her back to him that both might be happy. This correspondence was carried on about a week when on the afternoon of December 2[illegible], accompanied by her sister-in-law, she waited at the door of the Star office, where Thomas was employed, and waited for him to leave the office. At 4:30 o'clock he started out of the door and was met by the woman that claimed to be his wife. She engaged him in conversation for a few moments and then pistol shots were heard by those employed in the office. Thomas rushed back into the office closely followed by Miss Silvey, who held the still smoking revolver in her hand and was about to aim again when she was disarmed by parties in the office. Thomas sank into a chair, exclaiming "I'm shot." He was removed to his room and medical aid summoned. He suffered greatly during the night and on the following day the bullet was removed. After lingering through the night he died at 7 o'clock on Friday morning.

Released on Bail.

Miss Silvey, after she fired the fatal shot, walked with her sister-in-law down the stairs to the street and started toward home, but was overtaken and arrested and lodged in jail, but was afterward released on [illegible] bail. After the death of Thomas she was rearrested and charged with murder. She appeared in the Justice Court and was held to appear before the Superior Court. On a doctor's certificate which represented that the jail was unfit for one so delicate, she was released on [illegible] bail.

Thomas was born in Henderson, Iowa. Before he came to California he married, but was divorced. After coming to California he located in Suisun, where he again married. After a short time he separated from his wife, but did not get a divorce, which explains why he did not marry Miss Silvey.

Ap. 6. 1900

EXAMINER, SAN FRA[illegible]

FAINTS AT THE BAR OF JUSTICE

Woman on Trial for Murder Becomes Unconscious in Court.

IS CARRIED IN ON A LOUNGE

Prosecution Closes Its Case Against Margaret Silvey of Merced, Who Shot Her Betrayer.

[Special Dispatch to "The Examiner."]

MERCED, April 5.—A sensational incident occurred during the trial of Miss Margaret Silvey to-day in the Superior Court. The young woman is on trial for murder, she having shot and killed C. A. Thomas, whom she accused of betraying her, in this city in December last. This afternoon, during the examination of one of the witnesses for the prosecution, the defendant arose, gazed about the room for a moment and then fainted away. Her mother and numerous other ladies who were present went to the girl's assistance and she was carried into the clerk's office, adjoining the courtroom, where she was restored to consciousness. Court was adjourned for an hour and the trial was resumed and Miss Silvey was carried back into the courtroom on a lounge, upon which she rested until adjournment this evening.

No new facts have developed thus far, the testimony merely going over the occurrences as already published in "The Examiner."

After the fainting episode to-day the prosecution rested its case and Attorney J. W. Knox made the opening statement for the defense. He promised to prove that C. A. Thomas was a moral pervert and said the evidence to that effect will be given by Thomas' own relatives. He also said he would prove that Miss Silvey was subject to epileptic fits, St. Vitus' dance and other afflictions, and that when she shot Thomas she had no control over the muscles of her arms and hands. At the conclusion of the attorney's statement court adjourned till to-morrow morning.

THOMAS WROTE THE LETTER.

So Says Expert Kytka of the Anonymous Note.

During the past few days District Attorney F. G. Ostrander of Merced has been in San Francisco awaiting the result of handwriting expert Kytka's examination of an anonymous letter found upon the body of C. A. Thomas, who was killed by Miss Margaret Silvey, and which letter brought about the murder. The result of Miss Silvey's trial, which is now in progress at Merced, depends in a great measure upon Kytka's findings. The anonymous letter, which Thomas alleged he received through the mail, reflected upon Miss Silvey's character and caused the breaking off of her engagement with a Bakersfield young man. The note, with several admitted writings of the deceased, was placed in Kytka's hands several weeks ago. Last night the expert informed Mr. Ostrander that it is his belief that Thomas wrote the anonymous letter himself. The writing, as compared with the admitted letters of the deceased, corresponds in every detail.

Mr. Ostrander was dumfounded when the findings of the expert were made known to him, and left for Merced at once. It is believed this discovery will result in the acquittal of the young woman.

Ap. 7. 1900 [illegible]

MARGUERITE SILVEY ACQUITTED BY A JURY

While Testifying for Herself the Young Woman Broke Down and Her Mother Fainted.

Special Dispatch to The Call.

MERCED, April 7. The jury in the Silvey case rendered a verdict to-night of "not guilty." The day was occupied in examining witnesses, and this morning Lace Silvey, brother of the defendant, was placed on the stand, and during the testimony he was interrupted by the mother of the prisoner fainting. She was removed from the courtroom and restored to consciousness.

After Lace Silvey had given in his testimony the defendant took the stand and recited her relations with Thomas, telling how he promised to marry her and of her trip south when she thought that she was being taken to Los Angeles, but instead was taken off at Fresno, and on account of Thomas not having sufficient money to get married she was compelled to return to Merced the following four days later. She was [illegible] during the time she was testifying [illegible] broke down, [illegible] the afternoon session [illegible] the stand and continued [illegible] Thomas had deceived her.

After the examination of the witnesses for the defense the case was submitted to the jury without argument. They retired to the jury room and in a few moments returned with the verdict that acquitted the young woman of the crime.

TAKING LONG-DISTANCE PICTURES OF CRIMINALS WITH THE TELEPHOTO

[illegible]

By Theodore Kytka.

[illegible]

The size may [illegible] from [illegible] times the size of [illegible] with an ordinary lens from the same [illegible] point. This class of photography had [illegible] the limiting of [illegible] until a few [illegible].

Instantaneous pictures were impossible with the former class of [illegible] the advent of the [illegible] and [illegible] exposures of [illegible] of a second the [illegible] of times [illegible] the size of the one taken with an ordinary lens from [illegible].

[illegible] progressive manufacturers [illegible] predict a great future for this branch of photography, chiefly in astronomical, military, geographical and surveying experiments. The size of the telephoto camera may vary from a 4x5 inch to a [illegible] feet.

A figure taken with a telephoto lens will preserve much better proportions in foreground and background than any portrait lens of the best make without telephoto [illegible] will [illegible] by [illegible] a figure facing [illegible] will be greatly exaggerated in size owing to the short focus of the lens. It will [illegible] found that all the foreground is exaggerated and the background greatly dwarfed. The same subject taken with a [illegible] lens will reproduce, [illegible] the [illegible] distance between the subject and lens which is at times twenty-five [illegible] the proper proportions of the [illegible] fore and background and the relative [illegible] of [illegible] will have [illegible] of drawing [illegible].

[illegible] made was taken by [illegible] a photograph of the summit of Mount [illegible] feet high, which was taken at a distance of forty-four miles, on a [illegible] negative, showing wonderful detail, and for which he was awarded the gold medal of the Royal Photographic Society of England.

Ships may be thus photographed many miles out in the ocean. The experiments with modern projectiles and cannons and explosive forces may be photographed with safety.

[illegible] of the [illegible] taken from Geneva forty-four miles away. The small picture of the same [illegible] taken at the same distance with an ordinary camera.

How Telephotographs of Criminals Are Taken at Long Distance With an Ordinary Camera.

[illegible]

Hopkins Institute of Art, taken from the Crocker Building by Theodore Kytka. The small picture was taken with an ordinary camera.

AMES ON FORGERY

ITS DETECTION AND ILLUSTRATION

WITH

NUMEROUS CAUSES CÉLÈBRES

[illegible]

BY

DANIEL T. AMES

[illegible] Editor of The Penman's Art Journal of New York
Author of Ames's Compendium of Practical and Artistic Penmanship, Ames's Alphabets, Ames's Guide to Practical Writing, and [illegible] Examiner of Questioned Handwriting,
[illegible]

SAN FRANCISCO
DANIEL T. AMES
24 [illegible] STREET

NEW YORK
AMES-ROLLINSON COMPANY
1900

PHOTOGRAPHS ON THE SKIN.

A scientific discovery is bound to be picturesque and interesting and must attract universal attention. A Roumanian chemist named Dinkerescu discovered a means of combining the substances which are used in sensitizing paper for photographic purposes so that they can be applied to the human cuticle without injuring it, and the skin thus be made a sensitive plate for the printing of photography. Dinkerescu's remarkable discovery is a combination of photography and the etching process, and that to some extent the image is "bitten" into the cuticle, says the Chicago Chronicle.

At any rate, the impression is permanent, the image is clear and distinct, and the skin is not made a negative. The impression does not wear away with the change of the tissues and the renewal of the surface of the skin, because the substances or changes which have been produced by the process of photography are renewed according to the modifications produced by the "biting" process, just as those of a tattooed outline are. And whatever the mechanical means employed, the results are remarkable. By this means every human being becomes a sort of photograph album. The likenesses of his friends, landscape views associated with his childhood or with significant events in his life, portraits of the great men and heroes whom he admires, and many other things may be reproduced beautifully and permanently on his surface.

This book embodies the author's experience of more than thirty years in the study and investigation of questioned handwriting, involving the examination of more than two thousand cases, in over twelve hundred of which testimony has been given in the various courts of the United States and Canada. Upwards of forty of the most noted cases, not only of this country, but of the world, are presented with superior engravings, illustrative of the methods of the detection of forgery, and its demonstration before the courts, to do which over seventy pages of engravings are required.

Examples are thus presented of nearly every phase in which handwriting can come into question. To the lawyer, banker, and aspirant to expertism, the book will be invaluable.

It has 293 octavo pages, printed on an extra quality of paper, and in its entire make-up is in the highest style of the printer's art.

Sent by mail, postpaid, bound in law sheep $3 00

Bound in cloth . . . 2 50

(Orders filled by return mail.)

Remittances should be by U. S. Money Order, or exchange on San Francisco Bank.

Address all orders to

DANIEL T. AMES,

24 Post St., San Francisco, Cal.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Preface 9

Introductory 13

CHAPTER I. Personality in handwriting—What constitutes personality, and how it comes into writing so as to distinguish the writing of one person from that of another—No two handwritings can possibly be identically the same—Habit of writing—How formed, and how it operates to detect and illustrate forged and spurious writing—School versus adult writing—Nations as well as individuals are distinguished by their writing—Eccentric persons develop an eccentric style of writing—Examples of eccentric and other styles of writing—Sex in writing. 19-42

CHAPTER II.—Movements in writing defined and illustrated—Styles of writing, angular, semi-angular, round shaded, upright, and back hand 43-46

CHAPTER III.—Writing under abnormal circumstances—With left hand—By persons intoxicated, nervous, assisted, or hypnotized—With pencil or stylographic pen...... 47-56

CHAPTER IV.—Signatures or other writing never written twice alike—Howland will contest........... 57-58

CHAPTER V.—Persons do not always recognize their own signatures—Notable instances cited........... 59-61

CHAPTER VI. Writing over folds in the paper and one ink-line over another. Indications by which the facts may be determined—Important cases cited and illustrated.................................... 62-67

CHAPTER VII. Methods of forgery, their detection and illustration—Forgery by the aid of a tracing, how effected, and the inevitable indications; also, free-hand forgery, and the methods of its detection.. 68-72

CHAPTER VIII. The use of expert testimony respecting handwriting—Historical cases in English, French, and American courts, and the estimate placed upon such testimony by high judicial authority.... 73-83

CHAPTER IX. Sources of expert knowledge, and who may give testimony as experts. The legal definition of the word "expert".... 84-87

CHAPTER X. Experts should be employed by the court—They should be able to make plain the reasons for their opinions—Illustrations should be made by photographs, or with crayon upon blackboard or paper 88-92

CHAPTER XI. Disguised and imitated writing—Case of Everett v. Wilkinson illustrative of disguised writing........................ 93-99

CHAPTER XII. Certainty of conclusions reached through expert comparisons of writing—Must vary in degree, with the circumstances of each case. The genuineness or ungenuineness of writing is not determined by any one thing, but by a series of instances where the true characteristics are present or absent, as the case may be—Examples: a bank case in New York, and the Bird case, Los Angeles, California 100-103

CHAPTER XIII.—Why experts differ in their opinions—Not all who give testimony as experts are qualified to do so—Often through the seeking of attorneys, incompetent or mercenary witnesses are employed as experts to disparage the testimony of those skilled and honest.. 110-114

CHAPTER XIV.—Inserted sheets in documents—Added or changed entries in books of accounts—Ink and pencil erasures—Identification of typewriting 115-118

CHAPTER XV.—The frequency of forgery—Largely against estates—Several ingenious and interesting cases cited and illustrated—The Fuller case, in Newport, Vermont—The Miser Russell case, in New York City—A forged note against the Jacob Erwin estate, Jersey City, N. J.—Forged notes against the Gillespie estate, Warsaw, N. Y.. ... 119-129

CHAPTER XVI.—The Lewis will contest, Hoboken, N. J.—Forgeries against the estate of James G. Fair, San Francisco, Cal.—Forged will of A. J. Davis, of Butte, Montana—Forged check and note against the Hodge estate, Plymouth, N. H.—Forged deed, Kingston, N. Y.—Baker will contest, Toronto—Gordon will contest, Jersey City, N. J.—Forgery against the Redfield estate, Syracuse, N. Y.—The Murdock alleged forgery, Willows, Cal.—The Morey-Garfield forged letter—Cadet Whittaker case, West Point—Collum-Blaisdell alleged forgery, Minneapolis—Botkin murder case, San Francisco—Dr. Kennedy murder case, New York—Hunter-Long forgery, Philadelphia—Becker raised draft, San Francisco (all illustrated).............................. 130-215

CHAPTER XVII.—The trial of Roland B. Molineux in New York for the murder of Mrs. Katharine J. Adams by means of poison sent through the United States mail (fully illustrated).................... 216-236

CHAPTER XVIII.—Report of the writer on the celebrated Dreyfus case, Paris, France.. 237-241

CHAPTER XIX.—The Junius Letters—Abstract from the celebrated work of Sir Edward Twisleton, embodying the report of the famous English expert, Chabot, on the authorship of the Junius Letters (with numerous examples of both Junius's and Francis's writing)........... 242-254

CHAPTER XX.—Qualifying an expert witness—Use of photographs and blackboard 255-259

CHAPTER XXI.—Kinds of inks—Their composition—Copying ink—Safety ink—Colored inks—Ink tests, for the purpose of determining their identity or otherwise—Ink erasures by chemicals and their restoration—Evidence as to the relative ages of ink upon documents—Judging of the color of inks...................................... 260-272

CHAPTER XXII.—Paper—Materials used and methods of manufacture—Water-mark erasures, etc.................................. 273-276

CHAPTER XXIII.—Divination of character from handwriting—Some remarkable instances quoted.................................. 277-282

CHAPTER XXIV.—Dermal lines of the thumb as a means of personal identity 283-284

COMMENTS ON ADVANCED SHEETS.

Office of the San Francisco Savings Union.

532 California Street, corner of Webb Street

San Francisco, February 23, 1900.

DANIEL T. AMES, Esq.
#34 Post Street, San Francisco.

Dear Sir:- We have had the opportunity to examine the advance sheets of your work on "FORGERY, ITS DETECTION AND ILLUSTRATION" and it impress us as an exceedingly interesting work to the general reader, and more especially one of great value to bankers and others who have to guard against the attempts of characters who seek to prey on society through acts of forgery.

Very truly,

Germania Trust Company.

12 Montgomery Street, S. E. cor. of Sutter

Paid up Capital & Reserve $ ...

San Francisco Cal. February 13th, 1900.

Mr. Daniel T. Ames,

San Francisco, Cal.

Dear Sir:-

The undersigned having enjoyed the privilege of inspecting the advance pages of your forthcoming book entitled "Ames on Forgery its Detection and Illustration", feel assured that in the issue of such a work, exemplifying as it does your unprecedented experience as an examiner of contested handwriting, you have rendered the banking, legal and business world a substantial service; we therefore earnestly commend it as a most comprehensive, instructive and fascinating work; one eminently worthy of the most liberal patronage.

Yours truly,

From General W. H. L. Barnes, San Francisco.

"I have the pleasure of perusing the advance sheets of your forthcoming book, 'Ames on Forgery.' It is a work of great value to the legal profession and of interest to the general reader. I have no doubt your book will be successful and take its proper place as a standard work on the subject of which it treats."

From New York Herald.

"Mr. Daniel T. Ames, famous as a handwriting expert, has in press, a book entitled "Ames on Forgery: Its Detection and Illustration, with Numerous Causes Célèbres." Advance sheets are before me. Mr. Ames's experience as an examiner of contested handwriting in courts of justice covers a period of nearly forty years, not only in New York City, where he has chiefly resided, but throughout the United States and Canada, in England, and in France. His views, therefore, upon that subject are of vital interest."

From Professor H. B. Canman, Heald's College Journal.

"Professor Daniel T. Ames, the founder and for twenty years the editor of the Penman's Art Journal, has done the mercantile public a great service in bringing together in book form, the results of his more than thirty years' observations as an examiner of contested handwriting in courts of justice. Professor Ames writes in an unusually lucid and interesting manner. The wealth of the material at his disposal has enabled him to cover the entire field in a way that appeals to the interest of the ordinary reader quite as much as to the specialist. The book will be indispensable to the banker, the bank-teller, and the attorney, but besides them it will have a large popularity on account of the absorbing nature of the subject and the anecdotal manner in which it has been clothed."

From Frank E. Vaughan, Penman's Art Journal, New York

"Those interested in the expert phases of handwriting will be delighted at the announcement that Mr. Ames has in preparation an exhaustive volume relating to this subject. It is hardly necessary to say that it will be the standard authority on this subject. No man in this country, if indeed in the world, has given to the scientific study of handwriting characteristics nearly so much thought and attention as Daniel T. Ames. By a general consensus of opinion in the penmanship profession, as well as among lawyers and laymen, Mr. Ames is preeminently at the head of the guild of writing experts."

GENERAL COMMENTS.

From The Banking Law Journal, New York.

"For over forty years, Mr. Ames has been a careful student of handwriting as teacher, author, and publisher, and for over thirty years he has made a specialty of its study and comparison for the purpose of distinguishing between genuine and forged or simulated writing. His experience has covered more than 1,200 cases in twenty-two States, the District of Columbia, Canada, England, and France, in a large proportion of which cases he has given testimony before the various courts of justice. Mr. Ames's fame as a handwriting expert, pen artist, editor, and publisher of pen literature extends throughout the financial business and educational circles of America and Europe."

From The Journalist, New York

"For more than twenty years Mr. Ames was the editor and proprietor of the Penman's Art Journal, which is altogether a unique publication. It is the ne plus ultra periodical of the penman, accountant, stenographer, amanuensis, and intelligent office-man, and is a welcome messenger to a constituency of more than 75,000 readers. It is not too much to say that Mr. Ames has done more than any other man of our times to systematize the art of artistic penmanship and to utilize it in its best phase. His Book of Alphabets is a recognized authority on lettering, while his 'Compendium of Practical and Ornamental Penmanship' is the most comprehensive and most largely patronized of any work of its kind in print.

"Of the bona fide handwriting experts of the country, Daniel T. Ames is conspicuously and easily at the head. He brings to his work a keen analytical insight, a fine discrimination, and an accurate technical and scientific knowledge of handwriting born of a long lifetime of special training and practical experience. His opportunities for detecting and tracing individual characteristics in the multitude of false guises assumed by the clever forger have been on the broadest scale, having reached into thousands of cases.

"Mr. Ames goes into court as sunny and serene as a May morning, and passes through the tortuous channels of cross-examination with the easy grace and confidence of one who asks nothing better than to dwell among the snares and pitfalls set by shrewd attorneys."

From Evening Post, San Francisco, Cal.

"Professor Ames for a generation in the East has occupied the front rank as an expert on the great forgery cases there."

From Los Angeles Times.

"Mr. Ames is one of the most eminent handwriting experts in the world. His record has been published far and wide, until his name is the first thought of whenever a dispute is stirred up over a signature."

From Court Journal—Official Court Record, New York.

"Daniel T. Ames has made the subject of handwriting the study of his life and is widely recognized as an authority on doubtful handwriting of all descriptions."

From Sandy Hill (New York) Herald

"Daniel T. Ames stands at the head of his profession. Being a ready artist, he makes a free and effective use of the blackboard and crayon, which, with his lucid explanation, rarely fails to win a favorable verdict."

From San Jose (Cal.) Mercury.

"Professor Ames is the Sherlock Holmes of chirography."

From New York Sun.

"Mr. Ames has been engaged in the handwriting business over forty years, and has testified in every grade of court in this country and Canada and written opinions for courts in England and France. He has appeared in all the important cases in this country for thirty years past or more."

From Willows (Cal.) Daily Journal.

"Famous expert Daniel T. Ames was the central figure in the proceedings in the Murdock note case in the Superior Court today. The fame of this gentleman as a handwriting expert, pen-artist, editor, and publisher of pen literature is world-wide, and Mr. Ames's long experience in court makes him a good witness."

From Los Angeles (Cal.) Express.

"Daniel T. Ames is the greatest handwriting expert in the world."

From National Magazine.

"At the head of handwriting experts in the United States stands Daniel T. Ames, whose experience covers a lifetime in the chirographic art, and more than thirty years as a handwriting expert. In Mr. Ames's office, on Broadway are the skeletons of stories stranger than any fashioned by Poe, Gaboriau, or Conan Doyle."

Sunday Telegram, Lowell, Mass.

"Mr. Daniel T. Ames has been the leading handwriting expert for thirty years. He was the founder and for over twenty years the editor of the Penman's Art Journal, and is known wherever skilled penmanship is practiced."

From The Commercial Advertiser, New York.

"Mr. Ames is called the dean of the expert business, he is scholarly like a college professor in appearance. His explanations are clear, formal and business like."

From United States Treasury Counterfeit Detector, New York.

"Mr. Ames, probably more than any other person in any profession has been the means of defeating fraud and making triumphant the truth. Mr. Ames, as well as being an expert on handwriting, is at the head of his profession as a penman and designer. His work is of the highest artistic character, and examples of it are to be found in every quarter of the globe."

From Munsey's Magazine.

"Mr. Daniel T. Ames is the most prominent handwriting expert in the United States. During thirty years he has been engaged in passing upon disputed, forged, or disguised writings. His services have been required in more than fifteen hundred cases. His most famous efforts were made in the Fair will case at San Francisco, the Hunter-Long forgeries at Philadelphia, the Lewis will case, and more recently, the Botkin and Molineux murder trials."

Reference is made to the following-named gentlemen, by permission.

- PINKERTON'S NATIONAL DETECTIVE AGENCY, N. Y. and San Francisco.
- GEN. W. H. L. BARNES, San Francisco.
- Messrs. PIERSON & MITCHELL, Attorneys, San Francisco.
- C. S. WHEELER, of Bishop & Wheeler, Attorneys, San Francisco.
- D. L. DELMAS, Att'y, San Francisco.
- REUBEN H. LLOYD, Att'y, San Francisco.
- JOS. C. CAMPBELL, Att'y, San Francisco.
- HENRY ACH, Att'y, San Francisco.
- GEO. H. MASTICK, Att'y San Francisco.
- E. P. HEALD, President Heald's College, San Francisco.
- C. S. HALEY, Vice-President Heald's College, San Francisco.
- STRUVE, ALLEN & McMICKEN, Attorneys, Seattle, Wash.
- A. B. GARDINER, LL. D., ex-U. S. Judge Advocate, now District Attorney, City of New York.
- Ex-Judge WM. T. AUSTIN, Galveston, Texas.
- Ex-Judge JOHN R. HAIR, Babylon, Long Island.
- Ex-Judge HARRY BINGHAM, Littleton, N. H.
- Ex-Judge A. X. PARKER, M. C., Potsdam, N. Y.
- Ex-Judge W. T. HOFFMAN, Jersey City, N. J.
- Chancellor A. McGILL, Jersey City, N. J.
- NATHAN D. PETTY, Surrogate, Riverhead, L. I.
- Judge LESLIE W. RUSSELL, Canton, N. Y.
- Messrs. CHASE & ALDRICH, Newport, Vt.
- J. G. CANNON, Vice-President Chase National Bank, N. Y. City.
- Messrs. PECKIN & HESE, Montpelier, Vt.
- Gen. JAMES WALKER, M. C., Wytheville, Va.
- JOHN N. ROBINSON, Q. B., St. Thomas, Ont.
- GEORGE S. HICKOK, Cashier National Park Bank, N. Y.
- ELLIS H. ROBERTS, Ass't U. S. Treasurer, New York.
- E. W. HALE, U. S. Sub-Treasury, New York.
- ARTHUR F. EGGLESTON, Pub. Prosecutor, Hartford, Conn.
- A. L. DRUMMOND, Ex-Chief U. S. Secret Service, N. Y.
- J. KEARNY RICE, U. S. District Attorney, Trenton, N. J.
- BANK OF THE METROPOLIS, New York.
- B. B. OSLER, Q. C., Toronto, Ontario.
- SNOW, CHURCH & Co., New York.
- SHEPARD-COOPER Co., New York.
- Hon. FOSTER M. VOORHEES, Gov. N. J., Elizabeth, N. J.
- Messrs. JOSEPH WEILL & BROS., New Orleans, La.
- WILKINSON DETECTIVE AGENCY, New York.

342

Tales Told by Handwriting

By Wm. J. Kinsley

THE employment of professional handwriting experts as witnesses in court cases that often involve enormous sums of money, or the liberty or even lives of suspected malefactors, has awakened widespread interest in the methods of this class of experts, their resources and capabilities in conserving the ends of justice.

Many uninformed people appear to look on the handwriting expert as one who, by intuition or the possession of some mysterious occult power, is enabled to distinguish at a glance the true and the spurious in any questioned handwriting. Nothing could be further from the fact.

The secret of his power—as in any other line of scientific research—lies wholly in his intimate familiarity with the innumerable physical details which comprise the written line or word or letter—sometimes so slight a matter as the dotting of an i or the placing of a comma. It is precisely the same specialized sense, born of acute observation and minute scrutiny that enables an expert chemist to take two powders of like weight and color, identical in appearance to the common eye and perhaps in taste to the common palate, and say: this drug is harmless, wholesome; that is a deadly poison—and to specify not only their various individual constituents but the exact proportion of each. The trained eye of the handwriting expert (as in another case could that of the expert chemist) can often detect at a glance certain distinguishing earmarks of submitted writing that enable him to fix the identity of the writer almost offhand. In the great majority of cases, however, the cunning of the forger calls for deliberate, painstaking study and investigation before the conscientious expert is willing to announce with absolute surety an opinion so often fraught with tremendous possibilities for good or for evil.

Nothing else that a person does is so characteristic as the handwriting, and the identification of the individual can be established by it better than by portraits or almost any other means. As lawyers and laymen and courts are finding this out, the handwriting expert is more and more called upon to untangle snarled questions and to right wrongs.

PHOTO BY [illegible], NEW YORK

WILLIAM J. KINSLEY

It is only when attention is directed to this interesting science by the wide publicity given to some great case in which handwriting plays an important part that the notice of the general public is drawn to it. The average person would be surprised to know of the great number of cases that find their way to the office of the handwriting expert. The man who has made a success in this line is constantly in demand, and makes frequent trips to distant points to appear as witness in courts.

THE EXPERT AND THE CHARLATAN

Though nearly every large town has some one who devotes some attention to handwriting, there are but five or six men in this country who give to it practically all of their time, and who have gone very deeply into the subject.

To allow any person to qualify as an "expert" and to testify as such is a matter wholly within the discretion of the court. Unfortunately, courts frequently are lax in determining this question. Almost any one who can write is permitted to give alleged "expert" testimony regarding handwriting. In one case within the writer's experience—a case, too, involving life and death—the court unwittingly accepted the "expert" testimony of a witness who, it was afterward proven, was unable to write even so much as his own name. In the litigation attending the disposal of large mining interests held at Butte, Montana, the court permitted testimony in regard to the handwriting of the testator from a witness who admitted that he had seen the testator write but once, and that in lead pencil over twenty years before.

Any one accustomed to writing is usually allowed to qualify as an "expert." To the lay mind it is natural to confound experts who have studied the subject deeply in all its various phases with those who have had occasion to examine it casually, or who may possess uncommon facility with the pen without ever having had occasion to investigate scientifically just those little illusive points upon which the professional expert places his reliance.

Hence, when we read of "experts" being mistaken, or of an equal number of them appearing on opposite sides of the same case, it will nearly always be found upon investigation that they are of the class described above, whose lack of thorough special training and specialized experience really should have disqualified them from giving testimony. Though any one may call himself an "expert," or a "professional expert" for that matter, thus opening the door to charlatanism in exactly the same manner that it is opened more or less in all vocations, yet, as a matter of fact, it is very rare that professional handwriting experts testify to a contrary state of facts, and the cases in which they have been proven mistaken are remarkably few.

THE WEIGHT OF THE ANTI-DREYFUS TESTIMONY

A case such as the Dreyfus affair has a tendency to confuse the public mind and leads to wrong conclusions. In initiating the prosecution of Dreyfus the French Government submitted the documents to expert Gobert, of the Bank of France, who is considered the leader in this line in France. Gobert reported that Dreyfus did not write the incriminating documents. The prosecutors then placed the papers in the hands of Bertillon, the inventor of the anthropometric system of measurements (used principally on criminals) which bears his name. It mattered not that Bertillon had never appeared in a handwriting case before, or that his skill in this line was unknown. He was a man of science, of great renown in other lines, and the Government relied on these facts to bolster up its claim that Dreyfus wrote the incriminating papers. Bertillon reported in favor of the Government's contention, and it was an easy matter to get some alleged experts—weak as to skill and ability—and one or two honest but misguided men to agree with him. Some of these afterward changed their opinions when better standards of writing were given to them.

Dreyfus' friends sent engraved reproductions of standards and disputed documents to the best known experts all over the world, and without exception these reported that Dreyfus was not the writer of the disputed papers. On the side of the French Government were a few so-called "experts," headed and dominated by a man with no experience whatever. The experts of skill and experience in France and the world over were practically unanimous in favor of Dreyfus. The writer's critical examination of the documents in question produced an absolute conviction that they could not possibly have been written by Dreyfus.

Unless the individual is fitted by nature and inborn liking for investigations of this character, no amount of education and experience will fit him. But, given natural equipment and inclination, it is necessary first of all that the expert have a good general education. He should have a sufficient command of language to make others see what he sees. He should have a good eye for form and color, and a well-trained hand to enable him to describe graphically as well as orally what his trained eye has detected. A few strokes on a blackboard or large sheet of paper will often make a clouded point appear much plainer to court, jury and lawyers than hours of oral description. The ability to handle the crayon and to simulate well the writings under discussion is a great aid.

THE HUNDRED AND ONE STUDIES OF THE EXPERT

Making a collection of the handwritings of all nations, classes and conditions of people; collecting autographs; collecting and testing thousands of samples of paper and the various makes of inks, visiting paper mills and ink laboratories, investigating ordinary lead pencil and indelible pencil writing and the manufacture of these pencils; studying rubber-stamp impressions; collecting all kinds of pens and experimenting with them—these are some of the things the writer has found of use to him in his studies. His experience as student, bookkeeper, teacher of penmanship and bookkeeping, and editor has also been drawn on for many helpful ideas. In this, as in other callings, the expert keeps his eyes and ears open and makes use of anything that will be of use in reaching a conclusion.

Editor's Note—This is the first of two papers.

343

The services of the expert are required in a wide range of civil and criminal cases. Where handwriting is questioned on notes, checks, drafts, receipts, wills, deeds, mortgages, bonds, anonymous letters, money orders, registered letter receipts, "green goods" letters, pension papers, and in smuggling and (a strange and gruesome thing) names of jurors on coroners' inquisitions—in short, on any kind of document where it becomes necessary to establish the identity of the writer, the expert is called in. Life, liberty, honor and property are frequently balanced on a pen point—a few marks of a pen being the determining feature in many a case.

The handwriting of the schoolboy and schoolgirl, though crude, is conventional and idealized. It has but few characteristics so long as the school model or copy book hand is the goal. The pupil gives constant attention to the handwriting as well as to the thought. A number of students of about the same grade, under the same teacher, will write much alike. Fifteen or twenty of these students could each write a line on a page and it might baffle a layman, and perhaps puzzle an expert, to tell whether or not more than one person wrote the page. This constant striving after one ideal, and putting thought on the handwriting, had drawn them all toward that ideal and away from individuality.

THE GROWTH OF A MATURE HANDWRITING

A glance at Plate 1, presented herewith, will illustrate this point. Each line is written by a different student, ages from seventeen to twenty, who have been under the same school influence from five months to a year.

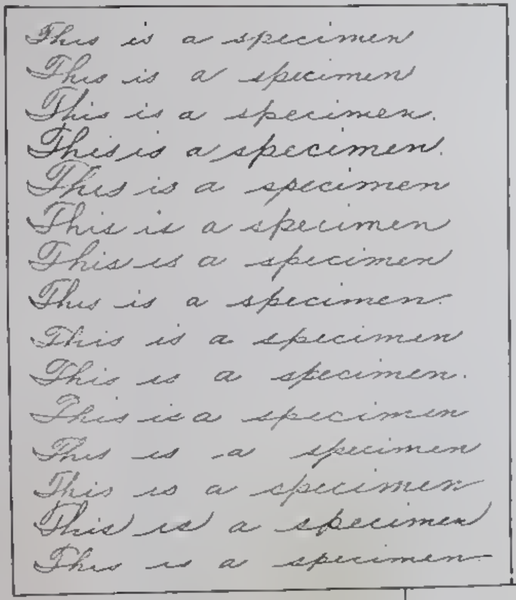

PLATE 1—EACH WRITTEN BY A DIFFERENT PERSON

In a twelvemonth these students will be scattered and their occupations and environments will be totally different. One will be a banker, another a lawyer, another a teacher, another an insurance policy writer, another a farmer, another a blacksmith, another a bookkeeper, another an editor, and so on through the various occupations of life. The conditions of life and the manner and frequency of writing will be as varied as the individuals. Temperament, too, will assert itself, and whereas in the student-writing all gave thought to the mechanical or handwriting part of putting thoughts on paper, now the whole attention is focused on the thought itself and not the means of expressing it. By countless repetitions of the various forms and combinations of letters in each person's handwriting they become fixed unconsciously and irrevocably, and the handwriting is really without thought—reflex action.

So gradually do we depart from the conventional standard or copy book hand that we scarcely realize it. By degrees we lop off here and add there until we have a handwriting that suits us, so far as our skill will go, and one that is peculiarly characteristic of us. It bears the stamp of our personality in every angle and turn in i dot and t crossing, in shade and alignment—in every part of it.

DIFFICULTIES THAT CONFRONT THE FORGER

In ten years this same group of students—now bankers, lawyers, and so forth—if asked to write the word This would likely write it about as it appears in Plate 2. In this plate are here specimens of handwriting of mature persons who have been applying their writing to various occupations.

When a handwriting once becomes settled and firmly fixed it is an impossibility to throw it aside like a cast off coat and put on a new one at will. It is here that a person who attempts to disguise his own writing or to simulate that of another meets with insuperable obstacles. No one knows all of the characteristics of his own writing. They are so common and have been acquired so unconsciously that the writer himself is usually unaware of their presence.

Even did the writer know his characteristics he could not throw them off. When a person attempts to simulate the handwriting of another he doubles his difficulties. He imagines that he knows all of the characteristics of the other hand and that he has the skill to imitate them. To simulate characteristic handwriting, full of departures from the copy-book style, is far more difficult than to produce conventional or copy book hand. In simulating the handwriting of another your hand and mind would be doing double duty—endeavoring to avoid your own and trying to copy the characteristics of the other.

Emerson has pointed out that "every man is a prisoner to his powers." Once our handwriting passes the formative period and becomes settled it has departed from the standard, and these departures are termed characteristics. These characteristics are the hall-marks of identification.

FIXING THE IDENTITY OF A WRITER

Disraeli has said: "Nature has given to every man a peculiar handwriting, as she has given him a peculiar countenance, voice and manners." Believing that this is true, the expert, when beginning to study a case, critically examines the "standard" or "exemplar," as the known writing is called, and notes the characteristics in it. In this study he takes into account size, slant, shape, shade, speed, spacing, movement, proportioning, alignment, pen pressure. Some of these may be disguised successfully, but it is not possible to disguise all. Each of the fifty-two letters and the ten digits gives opportunities for display of personality, and when the connections and various arrangements of the letters are taken into account, the combinations that can be formed from the strokes are so numerous as to be almost beyond the power of figures to express. It makes a difference whether or not a letter is used at the beginning, the end, or in the middle of a word.

Some characteristics are more markedly peculiar than others—more individual and personal. Of course a characteristic peculiar to one hand alone would and should be given much more weight, because of its very personality, than a characteristic common to many hands.

No particular number of characteristics is needed to enable the expert to reach a conclusion. It depends upon how strongly marked the characteristics are. If two striking characteristics are found, it is obvious they should be given more weight than twice one. And if three are found, it much more than trebles the strength of the opinion.

The expert studies and investigates until he discovers a lack of similarity, or finds a sufficient number of characteristics to render it almost mathematically certain that the same person wrote both the standard and disputed writings. It would be considered a strange coincidence if two human beings were found with two bodily marks identically the same. If the number were increased to five or six marks (cast in same eye, moles in same place, loss of same fingers and toes, etc.) it would be considered miraculous; and if increased to twenty, an impossibility. This is a fair illustration of the reasoning followed.

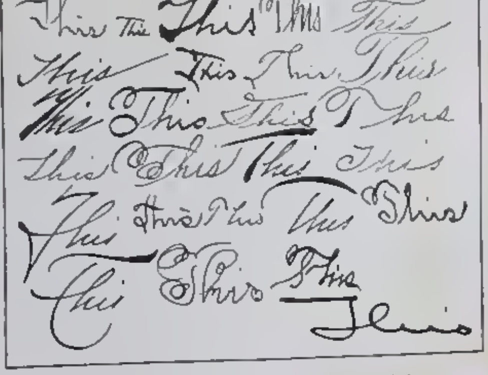

PLATE 2—EACH WRITTEN BY A DIFFERENT PERSON

Marks that are strong and peculiar to the individual are given more weight than characteristics common to many, and fewer of these peculiarly personal marks would be needed to reach a conclusion than where the departures from the copy book hand are of a more frequent kind.

HOW THE PICTORIAL EFFECT DECEIVES

Pictorial effect—or the writing picture as a whole—is what deceives laymen and pseudo-experts frequently, especially if they are obliged to make an offhand decision. A skillful forger can imitate the general arrangement in such a way that the piece of writing has a very puzzling appearance. It is this pictorial appearance that misleads bankers and others who do not get below the surface.

The expert places no reliance whatever on the pictorial resemblance of a piece of disputed writing to the standard. Of course there must be some resemblance or unlikeness, otherwise there would be no need of an expert investigation. The pictorial resemblance between standard and disputed writings may be compared to the likeness existing between stage impersonations of Gladstone, Bismarck, Blaine, and other noted men and the originals themselves. The impersonator is "made up" to look like the distinguished individuals he poses to represent, but a careful scrutiny of him, in which the beards and wigs are removed and the grease paint washed off, proves not only that the personator is a base imitation, but reveals his own identity as well. This is what a scientific examination does in the case of forged and simulated handwriting. It demonstrates the forgery first, and in nearly every case unmasks the forger.

WHAT THE WRITING TELLS OF THE WRITER

It is possible to tell with fair degree of accuracy the nationality, sex and age (approximately). A study of the handwriting of the different nations makes it comparatively easy to recognize in any questioned specimen the nationality of the writer. The aggregate characteristics of a nation are reflected in the style of handwriting adopted as a national standard. The style most in use in the United States is the semi-angular, forward slant hand, although the vertical round hand is now being largely taught in the public schools and will affect the appearance of the writing of the next generation quite appreciably.

Frequently educational and newspaper critics compare unfavorably American writing with that of other nations. The writer has investigated the subject by collecting from many countries copy books and specimens of writing from leading teachers of writing, students in various grades of schools, clerks and business men.

America is so far in advance of any other country in artistic and business penmanship that there is really no second. Americans as a whole write at a much higher rate of speed and with a freer movement than any other nations, and, consequently, many critics stop when they have criticised form alone, not making allowance for quantity. Nervous, rapid writers (and such the Americans are) produce writing more or less illegible, but it is not the fault of the standard so much as the speed with which the writing is done.

THE COPY-BOOK OF THE NATIONS

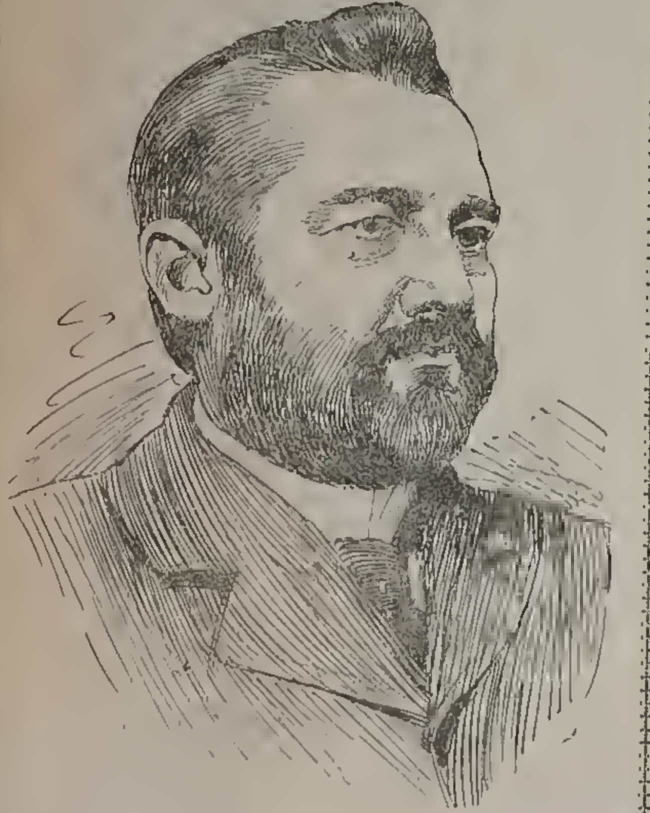
The writing of England is either angular (for rapid business style), or the civil service round hand—too slow for the every-day rush of business. England's colonies, influenced by her copy-books and teachers, write about as England does. Canada is an exception, as her proximity to the United States causes her to mix the English and American styles, with the American gaining ground.

The German and French write two radically different styles. Hence the identity of the nation producing the writer as well as the identity of the writer himself usually can be established. Before the writer is known this frequently is of great benefit to the cause of justice, as it narrows down the search.

In the Baby Clark abduction case in New York, in the summer of 1899, the nurse girl advertisement which secured the place for the nurse was submitted to the writer. He gave as his opinion that the writing was (1) that of a woman; (2) of a person of more intelligence and higher station than the average nurse girl; (3) of a woman accustomed to do much writing—likely a newspaper writer, judging from style; (4) of a person between twenty-five and thirty years of age with a settled handwriting. The arrest and confession of the abductors proved this analysis to be correct.

Chronicle June 1 - 1900

E. C. KILPATRICK, THE DEPOSED PRINCIPAL



KILPATRICK IS FOUND GUILTY.

BOARO OF EOUCATION HANOS IN ITS VEROICT.

DIRECTORS DECLINE TO EXPEND MONEY FOR THE CIVIL SERVICE.

Quarantine of the Burnett School Is Demanded — Teachers Fined for Absence From the Institute.

E. C. Kilpatrick, principal of the Business Evening School, was found guilty yesterday by the Board of Education and discharged from the department. Superintendent Webster stated that, as far as his knowledge of the trial warranted him in speaking, the finding of the Board was correct. Kilpatrick applied to the Superior Court in the afternoon for a writ of review, and Presiding Judge Bahrs directed that the Board of Education send the record of the proceedings in the case to Judge Murasky's court on June 8th.

The action of the Board took the form of a resolution, which reads as follows:

Whereas, Certain charges have been duly preferred before this Board by Walter S. Braun, complainant, against E. C. Kilpatrick, respondent, and a public hearing and thorough investigation were had on May 3d, 11th, 9th, 15th and 24th, 1900, before this Board upon said charges, both complainant and said respondent being present and represented by counsel, and evidence having been introduced by both parties, argument being made by the respective counsel, be it Resolved, That for evident unfitness for teaching, proved to the full satisfaction of this Board at said hearing, the said E. C. Kilpatrick be and he is hereby dismissed from the School Department of the city and county of San Francisco, such dismissal to take effect June 1, 1900.

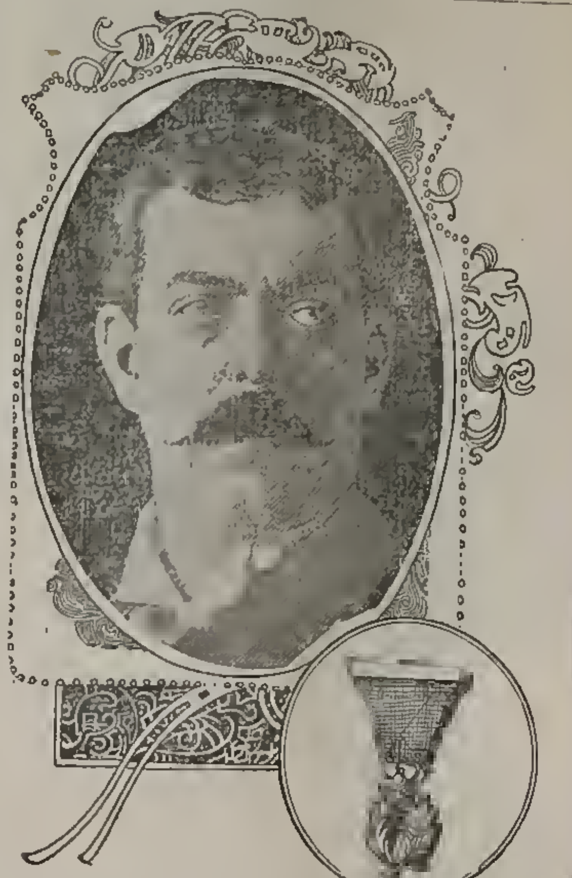
Examiner May 24 1900

AMEDEE JOULLIN HAS BEEN DECORATED BY THE BEAUX ARTS

The Great French Art School Recognizes the Merits of the San Franciscan's Paintings of Indian Life.



ARTIST AMEDEE JOULLIN AND THE DECORATION HE HAS RECEIVED FROM THE BEAUX ARTS, PARIS.

ANOTHER San Francisco artist has had his merits recognized abroad. This time it is Amedee Joullin who has won the honors and is being congratulated by his fellow-artists. The Paris Beaux Arts has conferred a decoration on him and made him a member—all in recognition of his meritorious work way out here in San Francisco.

Joullin is the first San Franciscan to receive this honor, and it has been conferred upon few Americans. It is greatly coveted among the French painters. Yesterday morning M. de Trobriand, the French Consul-General, delivered to Mr. Joullin the decoration and certificate of membership, which were issued March 31st by Georges Leygues, Minister of Public Instruction and Beaux Arts, and countersigned by Delcassé. The decoration is a laurel wreath, the certificate says. "M. Amedee Joullin, artist painter of San Francisco, is made an officer of the Academy."

It is Joullin's Indian pictures which have won him the distinguished honor. A few years ago the artist abandoned Chinatown, in the painting of which he had achieved much success, left behind his favored sand dunes, forgot his flower pieces and portraits and went off into New Mexico to paint the strange peoples of the pueblos—the citizens of the fabled "Seven Cities of Cibola." There, in the land made world-famous by the travels of Cabeza de Vaca, Estevanico and Fray Marcos, and by the conquests of Francisco de Coronado, he settled down to study the life and color of the handsome Zunis, who so won the admiration of Cushing and Bandelier. He made friends with Zuni and Moqui, heard the legends of Quivera and the Enchanted Mesa, caught the spirit and witchery of the desert and then sat to his canvases.

When, after long sojourn with the Indians and a journey to the City of Mexico, he came back to San Francisco the connoisseurs opened their eyes at his work. He had gone far ahead of anything he had done before. His "Goor," representing the wailing of a son over his murdered father, made a hit at the Omaha Exposition and at the National Academy in New York. "The Fireman" was purchased by members for the Bohemian Club. "The Weaver," "The Carver of Hieroglyphs," the "Passing the Wampum Belt" and "Watching the Prisoner" were the most notable of his other works—all painted in the land of turquoises. And now their great merit has been formally recognized by the highest French authority.

Mr. Joullin was born in San Francisco, studied first under Virgil Williams at the Art School, spent two years in Jules Tavernier's studio, painted scenery for John McCullough at the old California Theatre under Voegtlin, and then went to Paris, where his masters were Bougereau and Robert Fleury, and then he entered the Beaux Arts. Returning to San Francisco some ten years ago he became an instructor for the Art Association, and has been a prominent figure in local art circles ever since. Now Fame is reaching out a hand to him.

Examiner 1. 5. 1900

A purchase by T. W. Gibbon of Los Angeles will take a Cadenasso south. Another fine piece of this artist's work is on the way to El Dorado. Dr. de Vecchi bought an "Evening," as attractive a picture as Cadenasso has ever done, and Theodore Kritko has secured "The Storm," the largest of the canvases shown by Cadenasso at the Hopkins' exhibition. A number of smaller sales have summed up a profitable season for Cadenasso. Recognition for this artist came slowly for a while, but now a picture completed is virtually a picture sold. Canvas and paint are no longer nightmares. Cadenasso's shivering days are over.

LEFT A TRAIL OF BAD CHECKS

Former Army Employe Traced Across the Continent.

PLACED UNDER ARREST IN PHILADELPHIA.

SECURED BLANKS FROM THE DISBURSING OFFICE IN THIS CITY.

He Filled Them Out Under Assumed Names and Then Had Them Cashed at Various Banks.

Special Dispatch to the "Chronicle."

WASHINGTON, March 9.—Chief Wilkie of the Secret Service Department received word to-night from agents in Philadelphia that they had arrested Edward A. Grinnell, who was formerly employed in San Francisco in the office of Major J. R. Hall, surgeon and paymaster of the Army, and who was wanted on the charge of stealing Government property. On December 23, 1899, it is alleged, he left San Francisco, taking with him a checkbook from the disbursing office containing 400 blank checks, which he filled out under assumed names, and had no difficulty in having them honored. Before leaving San Francisco he cashed two of the checks, and then, it is supposed, went to Texas, where he posed as a Government mule buyer, and succeeded in passing a check for $3400 on the South Texas National Bank of San Antonio.

Since he left San Francisco he has had checks honored at the following banks: The Bankers' National, Chicago, $100; Bank of Commerce, Cleveland, O., $547; Cincinnati National, Cincinnati, $102; First National Bank, Covington, Ky., $50; Continental National, St. Louis, $360; Mechanics Bank, St. Louis, $181; Union National, New Orleans, $300; New Orleans National, New Orleans, $350; Memphis National Bank, Memphis, $1000, and the South Texas National Bank of San Antonio, Tex., $3400. In some instances, when the banks could not cash the check in full, he would take what they would give him and say that he would call again for the balance.

In this way he received from the Memphis National Bank $1000 for a $5000 check. In New York, he posed as E. E. Gordon, a sport, and blew in $3000. His most common aliases were E. E. Grimshaw, S. S. Byrne and F. C. Wallace. He is only 25 years old, but he has already served a term of three years for grand larceny in Ohio. Wilkie says that he has raised $10,000 on his worthless checks. He goes to San Francisco for trial.

Edward A. Grinnell was employed as a clerk in the Medical Supply Department of the United States Army in this city until December 23d last, when he disappeared with a checkbook containing 400 blanks and the check-protector with which Major John D. Hall, the medical supply officer, usually signed checks.

The matter was at once reported to the Sub-Treasury, and steps taken to prevent Grinnell from cashing any of the checks, but before leaving this city he managed to dupe two local merchants with forged checks to the amount of $250. With this money he secured transportation from the city, and all efforts on the part of the local officials to ascertain his whereabouts proved fruitless.

GRAND JUROR IS INVOLVED.

The Sheehan Scandal Takes a New Turn.

REGENSBURGER ACTS AS CHIEF INQUISITOR.

WITNESSES SAY HE COLLECTED THE TAX OFFICE "RAKE DOWN."

Timely Recess of the Inquiry Helps to Extricate the Tribunal From Embarrassing Situation.

The Grand Jury held a warm session yesterday. One member of that body was placed in a very questionable light, and the situation became so embarrassing for the rest that a hasty recess was taken in order to avoid further complications. The trouble came during the investigation of the frauds alleged against former Tax Collector Sheehan, who was charged by certain of his clerks with making false and fraudulent demands upon the city treasury in favor of fictitious persons and having them cashed through the connivance of money lenders and warrant shavers. These accusations became current while Sheehan was still in office and were generally accepted in City Hall circles as true. Two of Sheehan's former clerks, James Wiseman and Hiram Goldstein, who had been discharged from the office because they refused to submit to constant and exorbitant assessments for imaginary causes, made sworn affidavits declaring with much detail that warrants had been issued to persons who had never worked in the office and had never made an appearance there, and that these demands were cashed by a broker who must have had knowledge of the fraud, since his clerk signed the fictitious names.

The case particularly referred to was that of Edwin Chapman, for whom a demand was made and cashed for services rendered during last April, when, in fact, Chapman did not go near the office until many months later, and then only after Sheehan had been threatened by his clerks with exposure. It was then, as Wiseman and Goldstein assert, that he managed to find a Chapman, though with different initials, whom he employed during November, presumably in order to have the man testify in his behalf if the discharged deputies should carry out their threats. In all those transactions Sheehan's chief deputy, Patrick Hagan, was charged with being the chief offender.

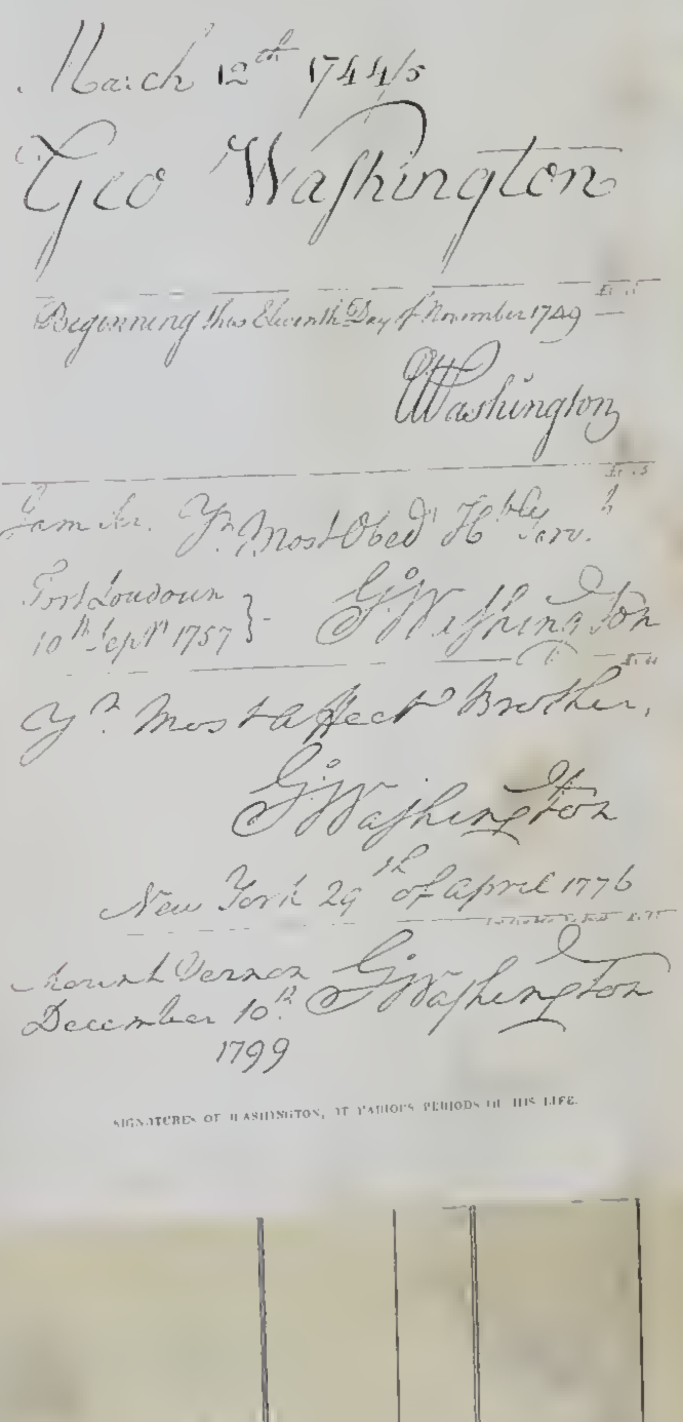
At the end of his term Sheehan had to be ejected by force from the office, after a pitched battle between his followers and those of Scott, who had been elected to the office. Sheehan was routed, but vacated the premises only after an order had been served upon him issued by the presiding Judge of the Superior Court. Shortly after that occurrence Sheehan and Hagan brought charges before the Grand Jury against Wiseman and Goldstein, charging them with having sworn falsely in the affidavits in the case. Sheehan, Hagan, Chapman and several of their friends gave testimony before the Grand Jury in an effort to prove that Wiseman and Goldstein were guilty of perjury in swearing to those affidavits. Evidently the Grand Jury was not convinced of the reliability of the evidence, and refused to take action. Yesterday the other side had a hearing, giving such testimony in substantiation of the charges in the affidavits, with additional details and circumstances, as to startle the Grand Jury. Wiseman was among the first witnesses examined. He reiterated every allegation to which he had previously sworn and which had been published. He added a number of details to the transactions of Sheehan and Hagan, and offered to prove every one of his allegations.

Grand Juror Regensburger, who had constituted himself chief inquisitor, cross-questioned Wiseman until the witness appealed to the Grand Jury, objecting to Regensburger's presence and declaring that Regensburger was implicated in the fraudulent transactions. When pressed to name the man to whom he paid the assessment Wiseman said, "I paid it to Regensburger," pointing to the Grand Juror. To relieve the situation a recess was hastily declared, presumably for the purpose of affording the interested juror an opportunity to withdraw. Regensburger did not take the hint, and the inquiry was resumed. Wiseman remained in the room for an hour. He told how Hagan had asked him to sign a fictitious name and he had refused, how the clerks had been systematically assessed under one pretext or another, how they were obliged to go to the brokers to obtain their pay, how the brokers, particularly Regensburger, had exacted the regular percentage and the office "rake down" on every demand, and how he had refused to endure such extortion any longer and was discharged. He swore positively that Chapman never worked in the office, either as clerk, deputy, outside deputy or as distributor of bills, during the month of April, for which Hagan had asked Wiseman to swear to and sign a warrant for the mythical Chapman.

Goldstein gave similar testimony. Regensburger tried to discredit the witness by asking him whether he had not sold his demand for one month twice. This Goldstein denied. He told of Regensburger's connection with Sheehan's transactions, making it appear that the broker was Sheehan's financial agent and the collector of all the assessments and rake-downs.

The tilt between the witness and the juror threatened a repetition of the Wiseman episode, but it was averted by cutting the investigation short.

P. R. McCarthy, at present a deputy under Sheriff Lackmann, but formerly a clerk under Sheehan, testified that he was employed in Sheehan's private office and had charge of the bills which were carried out, but never saw Chapman in the office during that month. J. F. Murray and Homer C. Warren, who had worked in the Tax Collector's office during the time Chapman is supposed to have been there, testified that they never saw him, though they were in a position to know every employe. Each of the witnesses was subjected to a cross-examination by Grand Juror Regensburger and in each case it developed that the money for what was variously designated as the "office," "election" or "charity" fund was invariably paid to Regensburger. A number of witnesses who were ready to testify were excused for the day, but may be called to appear for the next session.



SIGNATURES OF WASHINGTON, AT VARIOUS PERIODS OF HIS LIFE.

MOLINEUX DOOMED TO DEATH CHAIR.

GUILTY OF MURDER.

Long Trial Ends With the Young Club Man's Conviction.

HEARS THE FATAL WORDS WITH UNBROKEN NERVE.

VERDICT CAUSES SURPRISE IN UPTOWN CIRCLES IN NEW YORK.

Slayer of Mrs. Adams Cheered by a Big Crowd as He Was Escorted From the Courtroom.

Special Dispatch to the "Chronicle."

NEW YORK, February 10.—After deliberating seven and a half hours, the jury returned a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree against Roland B. Molineux, charged with the murder of Mrs. Katherine J. Adams by poison on December 28, 1898. Bartow S. Weeks, counsel for the defense, made the usual motion, and Recorder Goff adjourned court until February 16th, when he said he would hear the motion and sentence the defendant.

From the time the jury went out, at 3:15 P. M., the crowd in the courtroom watched the door through which they had left the court in silent expectancy. The jury came in shortly after 9 o'clock to ask for exhibits of handwriting, and again, at 10:30 o'clock, they came in for instructions. Fifteen minutes later it was learned that the jury had agreed. The court officers shouted for silence. Doors were locked and the gray-haired clerk of the court took his seat below the Recorder's bench. General Molineux sat straight in his chair, a glassy look in his eyes, and his hands folded on the table in front of him, trembling a little in spite of himself. Then there was a hush. The jurors walked to their chairs between a double file of court officials. As soon as they had taken their seats a deputy sheriff brought Molineux from the prison.

There was no sign of apprehension on the young man's face. His step was light and springy and he smiled as if he had not a care in the world. Then he sat down, looked for a moment straight at the Recorder's bench and then whispered to Mr. Weeks, who was showing signs of nervousness. A moment later the Recorder entered. The names of the jury were read and the clerk said:

"Gentlemen of the jury, have you agreed upon a verdict?"

"We have," replied the foreman.

"The jurors will please rise. The defendant will rise."

General Molineux sat with his hands clasped in front of him on the table. His face never flinched as the clerk asked again:

"What is your verdict?"

"We find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree."

As the words were spoken the bell in the firehouse near by struck 11 o'clock. It sounded like the tolling of a church bell for the dead. Molineux hardly moved. His neck stiffened a little and he straightened his back. General Molineux reached his hand to his son's shoulder and pressed it hard. Molineux put his own hand on his father's shoulder and stood without further movement, while his counsel asked that the jury be polled.

Each juryman agreed with the verdict rendered by the foreman, and then the Recorder asked if counsel had any request to make. Recorder Goff then heard the formal motion and ordered the removal of the defendant.

Molineux shook hands with his father and his brother Leslie and started to follow the deputy sheriff to the prison. As he left his seat General Molineux said to him, in tones loud enough to be heard by all: "Keep up your nerve," and the prisoner replied with a smile, "Yes; don't be afraid."

Molineux' mother and his wife, unable to bear the strain of long waiting for the verdict, had left the courtroom soon after the jury went out.

Mr. Weeks asked on behalf of General Molineux that the latter be permitted to visit his son, and the Recorder made an exception in this case and granted permission.

Foreman Martin stated that the jury had agreed among themselves to absolutely refrain from the discussion of any of the proceedings in the juryroom.

A tremendous crowd waited in the corridors of the courtroom and about the buildings until after the return of the verdict and when Molineux was brought out by the deputy sheriff somebody called for "Three cheers for Molineux!" and a remarkable demonstration with great cheering followed. The announcement of the verdict of guilty was received in the uptown districts and about the clubs apparently with great surprise. Many of the clubmen seemed to be staggered by the announcement and it was the main topic for discussion for the night. It is said the trial has cost $200,000.

STORY OF THE POISONING.

Molineux Jealous of Men Who Knew His Wife.

Blocks together a bit of "Candle" ...

Roland B. Molineux, Who Was Found Guilty of the Murder of Mrs. Kate Adams.

band, suspected, reproached and waited.

Henry Barnet, clubman, wealthy, petted by women and fond of women, died suddenly. At the club it was publicly said diphtheria had caused his death. But among his intimate friends the word passed quickly that he had received by mail a Kutnow powder, taken it without knowing its deadly nature and died. For some reason or other his friends were not quick to apprise the authorities of their beliefs. A mysterious letter was found in his rooms after he died signed with a woman's first name. This letter the police took. Later they found that Barnet was a habitual user of Kutnow powders, but that the one which caused his death contained enough cyanide of mercury to kill a horse. Still there was no clew apparently as to who sent him the fatal powders and caused his death.

With Barnet dead, Molineux turned his attention to Harry Cornish. Cornish was living with a widow, Mrs. Adams, and her daughter, Mrs. Rogers. He knew Blanche Molineux, and it appears knew also more of Molineux than it is well for one man to know of another. Two or three days before Christmas of 1898 Cornish, while at the Knickerbocker Athletic Club, received through the mail a small package. This contained a bottle of what was supposed to be Emerson's bromo-seltzer and a silver holder for the same. He supposed it was sent to him as a Christmas present by some joking friend. When he went to his apartments that night he took the bottle and holder with him and displayed them to Mrs. Adams and Mrs. Rogers.

The following day Mrs. Adams suffered from a severe headache. She asked Cornish to give her some of the bromo-seltzer he had received. He mixed it in water and did so. She complained of its bitterness and he tasted it. In less than an hour Mrs. Adams was dead and Cornish suffering great agony from poisoning. The physicians advised him to send for the Coroner. Instead of doing so he sent for the assistant State's or district attorney, McIntyre, who, it seems, was sufficiently intimate with all the parties in the muddle to desire to have it kept quiet. There were photographs in existence which McIntyre did not like and other evidence which was damaging.

The newspapers and the police took hold of the case. Scraps of evidence collected pointed to Molineux as the one who had killed both Barnet and Mrs. Adams, the latter unintentionally, for the poisonous bromo was intended for Cornish. Molineux denied his guilt and secured powerful counsel. The trial has resulted in his conviction.

HAD HYSTERICS, BUT DID NOT TAKE POISON

Lizzie Kiesel Went Into Convulsions.

NEARLY JUMPED OVERBOARD

TAKEN TO RECEIVING HOSPITAL FOR TREATMENT.

Doctors Say That the Case Was a Most Unusual One of Extreme Nervous Hysteria.

Oakland Office San Francisco Call, 908 Broadway, Dec. 11.

A lovers' quarrel sent Lizzie Kiesel to the Oakland Receiving Hospital last night and according to the stories of some of the passengers on the last boat from San Francisco last night it came nearly sending her to death in the waters of San Francisco Bay.

The story of the strange actions of the girl upon the boat and of her being taken to the Oakland Receiving Hospital under suspicion of having taken poison was briefly told this morning, but the causes that brought about that condition could not be ascertained until the girl became more composed. The physicians last night thought that it was a case of poison, self-inflicted, but after working upon her it became evident that the girl was suffering from a violent case of nervous hysteria. She went from convulsion into convulsion at the hospital, calling for her brother and for Gilbert Bell, the man whom she was with last night, and was unable to tell anything coherent about herself or others.

This morning the girl became more composed and told the story of the quarrel. She had visited the home of Bell last evening and there had been some difficulty between the two over a man by the name of Phillips, who seemed to creep into the love affairs of the two. She was taken to the last boat at 12:25 by Bell, who saw her on board. She began acting strangely on the boat and by the time she reached the Oakland pier she was in convulsions, and Policeman Agnew, who was on the train, thought that poison had been taken. This morning the girl said that she had not taken poison, but admitted that there had been a quarrel between herself and Bell.

Dr. W. S. Porter says that the girl was very nervous and run down in health and that it was an extraordinary case of nervous hysteria, probably superinduced by this lovers' misunderstanding.

Bell came to Oakland this morning and took the girl to her home in Fruitvale. He refused to discuss the affair other than to deny that the girl had taken poison.

"She is only worn out from overwork," said Bell, "and I am not going to discuss the matter further."

The quarrel must have been a severe one as it worked upon her nerves very badly, for several of the passengers on the last boat, including Richard Wise and J. Hazeltine, say that she acted as if she was going to jump overboard and she was carefully watched for that reason.

BOUND TO CONVICT ON PROPER PROOF OF CIRCUMSTANCES.

The Recorder read from the authorities on circumstantial evidence. "Greenleaf divides circumstantial evidence into two classes," he said, "certain, or that from which the inference necessarily flows, and uncertain, or that from which the inference has only the weight of probability. A verdict may be found on circumstantial evidence alone, and is often more satisfactory than if it had been found on direct testimony. Otherwise it would be useless to try to detect and punish criminals. Does the thief take a witness with him to see him steal? We are bound to convict on proper circumstantial evidence."

The Recorder then directed his attention to a discussion of expert testimony.

"There is still another class of testimony, expert evidence. That testimony, like circumstantial evidence, is often misapprehended and misunderstood. I must tell you, in the outset, that the law allows the testimony of experts under proper safeguards to be introduced, and it must be properly considered as evidence. It is proper that I should call your attention to some of the experts' testimony in this case. On February [illegible] Kinsley saw the defendant write. It was not a satisfactory test.

"On the 20th of the same month he saw him write again. He furnished the pen, ink and paper and instructed the defendant how to write. He requested the defendant to write vertically and he replied that he could not. [illegible] Kinsley instructed the defendant how to write vertically, and the defendant wrote, but it was not vertical. On the question of handwriting the prosecution called in experts and bank tellers, fourteen persons in all. In general, handwriting experts are allowed to testify as to the manner of handwriting, as to the time, as to the kind of ink employed and the age and the style of the writing. You have seen the experts show on the blackboard their so-called demonstrations. You have seen enlarged photographs. You have been furnished with copies of the writing done in photographs. And I may say here that never was a jury furnished with such ample opportunities of studying the exhibits in a case.

"I wish to impress upon you that the opinions which have been expressed by these experts are not conclusive upon you. These opinions have been formed by [illegible] in their offices and from studies [illegible] of them under the [illegible]. They have told you of their experience and of their comparison with admitted and disputed handwriting."

WARNS JURY ABOUT THE EXPERTS' OATHS.

Recorder Declares It Would Be Dangerous to Convict on Their Testimony Alone.

"NOW you, gentlemen of the jury," continued the Recorder, "might take up a piece of writing, look at it casually and not see certain things. But if you spent days examining it, put it under a magnifying glass, certain curves, angles, spaces and a number of marks might appear to you which did not upon your first examination. These experts have been able to call your attention to certain characteristics which you might not otherwise have noticed. Yet you are the sole judge of the fact as to whether you see the things they pointed out. You will give the opinions of these witnesses such weight as you choose and that they are entitled to. You must take into consideration their ability, their integrity and their opportunity to observe the things of which they speak [illegible]. Then you must draw your own conclusion and then [illegible] your judgment and your judgment on a fact.

"The prosecution claims that the defendant wrote certain writings and the experts have borne out the contention of the prosecution. Many of such letters have been placed in evidence. They are written on social, private and business matters.

"But I charge you that if the whole issue rested upon the testimony of experts it would be an extremely dangerous thing to convict a man of murder in the first degree upon such testimony alone.

"Yet, on the other hand, if you take the Barnet and Cornish letters and the address on the poison package together with the conceded writings, and compare them yourselves, on your own judgment, and come to the conclusion that the defendant wrote the address on the poison package, I say that you would be safe in returning a verdict of guilty."

J. P. Turner's Unpaid Notes.

A. Everett Ball, administrator of the estate of Edward S. Chester, filed a supplemental complaint yesterday in an action against Ruth E. Turner, administratrix of James P. Turner's estate, for $30,175.50, the principal due on notes which Turner gave to Chester in October, November and December, 18[illegible], and January, 189[illegible]. The notes, it is alleged, were in the hands of Turner and are now among the papers of his late [illegible] unless they have been lost or destroyed. They bore interest at the rate of 1 per cent a month. Turner [illegible] J. P. [illegible] in the Crocker building.

R. Molineux, charged with the murder of Mrs. Katherine J. Adams by poison on December 28, 1898. Bartow S. Weeks, counsel for the defense, made the usual motion, and Recorder Goff adjourned court until February 16th, when he said he would hear the motion and sentence the defendant.

From the time the jury went out, at 3:15 P. M., the crowd in the courtroom watched the door through which they had left the court in silent expectancy. The jury came in shortly after 9 o'clock to ask for exhibits of handwriting, and again, at 10:30 o'clock, they came in for instructions. Fifteen minutes later it was learned that the jury had agreed. The court officers shouted for silence. Doors were locked and the gray-haired clerk of the court took his seat below the Recorder's bench. General Molineux sat straight in his chair, a glassy look in his eyes, and his hands folded on the table in front of him, trembling a little in spite of himself. Then there was a hush. The jurors walked to their chairs between a double file of court officials. As soon as they had taken their seats a deputy sheriff brought Molineux from the prison.

There was no sign of apprehension on the young man's face. His step was light and springy and he smiled as if he had not a care in the world. Then he sat down, looked for a moment straight at the Recorder's bench and then whispered to Mr. Weeks, who was showing signs of nervousness. A moment later the Recorder entered. The names of the jury were read and the clerk said:

"Gentlemen of the jury, have you agreed upon a verdict?"

"We have," replied the foreman.

"The jurors will please rise. The defendant will rise."

General Molineux sat with his hands clasped in front of him on the table. His face never flinched as the clerk asked again:

"What is your verdict?"

"We find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree."

As the words were spoken the bell in the firehouse near by struck 11 o'clock. It sounded like the tolling of a church bell for the dead. Molineux hardly moved. His neck stiffened a little and he straightened his back. General Molineux reached his hand to his son's shoulder and pressed it hard. Molineux put his own hand on his father's shoulder and stood without further movement, while his counsel asked that the jury be polled.

Each juryman agreed with the verdict rendered by the foreman, and then the Recorder asked if counsel had any request to make. Recorder Goff then heard the formal motion and ordered the removal of the defendant.

Molineux shook hands with his father and his brother Leslie and started to follow the deputy sheriff to the prison. As he left his seat General Molineux said to him, in tones loud enough to be heard by all: "Keep up your nerve," and the prisoner replied with a smile, "Yes; don't be afraid."

Molineux' mother and his wife, unable to bear the strain of long waiting for the verdict, had left the courtroom soon after the jury went out.

Mr. Weeks asked on behalf of General Molineux that the latter be permitted to visit his son, and the Recorder made an exception in this case and granted permission.

Foreman Martin stated that the jury had agreed among themselves to absolutely refrain from the discussion of any of the proceedings in the jury-room.

A tremendous crowd waited in the corridors of the courtroom and about the buildings until after the return of the verdict and when Molineux was brought out by the deputy sheriff somebody called for "Three cheers for Molineux!" and a remarkable demonstration with great cheering followed. The announcement of the verdict of guilty was received in the up-town districts and about the clubs apparently with great surprise. Many of the clubmen seemed to be staggered by the announcement and it was the main topic for discussion for the night. It is said the trial has cost $200,000.

STORY OF THE POISONING.

Molineux Jealous of Men Who Knew His Wife.

Shake together a bit of "Camille," a little of De Maupassant, "Demimonde," a great deal of Laura Fair, and make the mixture taste exceedingly bad with a strong addition of powder from any "Tenderloin," and you have the Barnet-Molineux-Cornish-Adams murder case in all of its wickedness and mystery.

Roland Burnham Molineux is the superintendent of paint works in Newark. He is a member of the Knickerbocker Athletic Club, in which Harry C. Cornish has figured as an official, athletic trainer and general all-around good fellow. The two men were well acquainted in the past. They were even said to be intimate friends at the time Molineux suspected that his wife was untrue to him. How far this intimacy went is not to be printed. Molineux' wife was Blanche Chesbrough, and she was beautiful, siren-like, mistress of tears and smiles alike, a woman and an actress, a something not quite a perfect peach (as Dumas might say), but withal not showing the speck conspicuously. She was fond of warm dinners, rich wines, yachting parties, pleasures that lie between the border lines of good form and a good time. Once she had known one Henry Barnet, also a member of the Knickerbocker Athletic Club—known him before and after her marriage. How dear their acquaintanceship was was best known to themselves, but Molineux, the husband, suspected, reproached and waited.

Henry Barnet, clubman, wealthy, petted by women and fond of women, died suddenly. At the club it was publicly said diphtheria had caused his death. But among his intimate friends the word passed quickly that he had received by mail a Kutnow powder, taken it without knowing its deadly nature and died. For some reason or other his friends were not quick to apprise the authorities of their beliefs. A mysterious letter was found in his rooms after he died signed with a woman's first name. This letter the police took. Later they found that Barnet was a habitual user of Kutnow powders, but that the one which caused his death contained enough cyanide of mercury to kill a horse. Still there was no clew apparently as to who sent him the fatal powders and caused his death.

With Barnet dead, Molineux turned his attention to Harry Cornish. Cornish was living with a widow, Mrs. Adams, and her daughter, Mrs. Rogers. He knew Blanche Molineux, and it appears knew also more of Molineux than it is well for one man to know of another. Two or three days before Christmas of 1898 Cornish, while at the Knickerbocker Athletic Club, received through the mail a small package. This contained a bottle of what was supposed to be Emerson's bromo-seltzer and a silver holder for the same. He supposed it was sent to him as a Christmas present by some joking friend. When he went to his apartments that night he took the bottle and holder with him and displayed them to Mrs. Adams and Mrs. Rogers.

The following day Mrs. Adams suffered from a severe headache. She asked Cornish to give her some of the bromo-seltzer he had received. He mixed it in water and did so. She complained of its bitterness and he tasted it. In less than an hour Mrs. Adams was dead and Cornish suffering great agony from poisoning. The physicians advised him to send for the Coroner. Instead of doing so he sent for the assistant State's or district attorney, McIntyre, who, it seems, was sufficiently intimate with all the parties to the muddle to desire to have it kept quiet. There were photographs in existence which McIntyre did not like and other evidence which was damaging.

The newspapers and the police took hold of the case. Scraps of evidence collected pointed to Molineux as the one who had killed both Barnet and Mrs. Adams, the latter unintentionally, for the poisonous bromo was intended for Cornish. Molineux denied his guilt and secured powerful counsel. The trial has resulted in his conviction.

Roland B. Molineux, Who Was Found Guilty of the Murder of Mrs. Kate Adams.

HAD HYSTERICS, BUT DID NOT TAKE POISON

Lizzie Kiesel Went Into Convulsions.

NEARLY JUMPED OVERBOARD

TAKEN TO RECEIVING HOSPITAL FOR TREATMENT.

Doctors Say That the Case Was a Most Unusual One of Extreme Nervous Hysteria.

Oakland Office San Francisco Call, 908 Broadway, Dec. 11.

A lovers' quarrel sent Lizzie Kiesel to the Oakland Receiving Hospital last night and according to the stories of some of the passengers on the last boat from San Francisco last night it came nearly sending her to death in the waters of San Francisco Bay.

The story of the strange actions of the girl upon the boat and of her being taken to the Oakland Receiving Hospital under suspicion of having taken poison was briefly told this morning, but the causes that brought about that condition could not be ascertained until the girl became more composed. The physicians last night thought that it was a case of poison, self-inflicted, but after working upon her it became evident that the girl was suffering from a violent case of nervous hysteria. She went from convulsion into convulsion at the hospital, calling for her brother and for Gilbert Bell, the man whom she was with last night, and was unable to tell anything coherent about herself or others.

This morning the girl became more composed and told the story of the quarrel. She had visited the home of Bell last evening and there had been some difficulty between the two over a man by the name of Phillips, who seemed to creep into the love affairs of the two. She was taken to the last boat at 12:35 by Bell, who saw her on board. She began acting strangely on the boat and by the time she reached the Oakland pier she was in convulsions, and Policeman Andrews, who was on the train, thought that poison had been taken. This morning the girl said that she had not taken poison, but admitted that there had been a quarrel between herself and Bell.

Dr. W. S. Porter says that the girl was very nervous and run down in health and that it was an extraordinary case of nervous hysteria, probably superinduced by this lovers' misunderstanding.

Bell came to Oakland this morning and took the girl to her home in Fruitvale. He refused to discuss the affair other than to deny that the girl had taken poison.

"She is only worn out from overwork," said Bell, "and I am not going to discuss the matter further."

The quarrel must have been a severe one or it worked upon her nerves very badly, for several of the passengers on the last boat, including Richard Wise and A. Bernheim, say that she acted as if she was going to jump overboard and she was carefully watched for that reason.

[illegible] was a [illegible] furnished with such ample opportunities of studying the [illegible] in a man.

"I wish to impress upon you that the opinions which have been expressed by these experts are not conclusive upon you. These opinions have been formed by men versed in their science, and from studies, many of them, under the microscope. They have told you of their [illegible] [illegible] of their comparison with admitted and disputed handwriting."

WARNS JURY ABOUT THE EXPERTS' OATHS.

Recorder Declares It Would Be Dangerous to Convict on Their Testimony Alone.

"NOW you, gentlemen of the jury," continued the Recorder, "might take up a piece of writing, look at it casually and not see certain things. But if you spent days examining it, put it under a magnifying glass, certain curves, angles, spaces and stumpings of words might appear to you which did not upon your first examination. These experts have been able to call your attention to certain characteristics which you might not otherwise have observed. You are the sole judges of the fact as to whether you see the things they pointed out. You will give the opinions of these witnesses such weight as you choose and that they are entitled to. You must take into consideration their ability, their integrity and their opportunity to observe the things of which they speak to you. Then you must draw your own conclusion, and then [illegible] your judgment and the judgment on a fact.

"The prosecution claims that the defendant wrote certain writings and the experts have borne out the contention of the prosecution. Many of such letters have been placed in evidence. They are written on social, private and business matters.

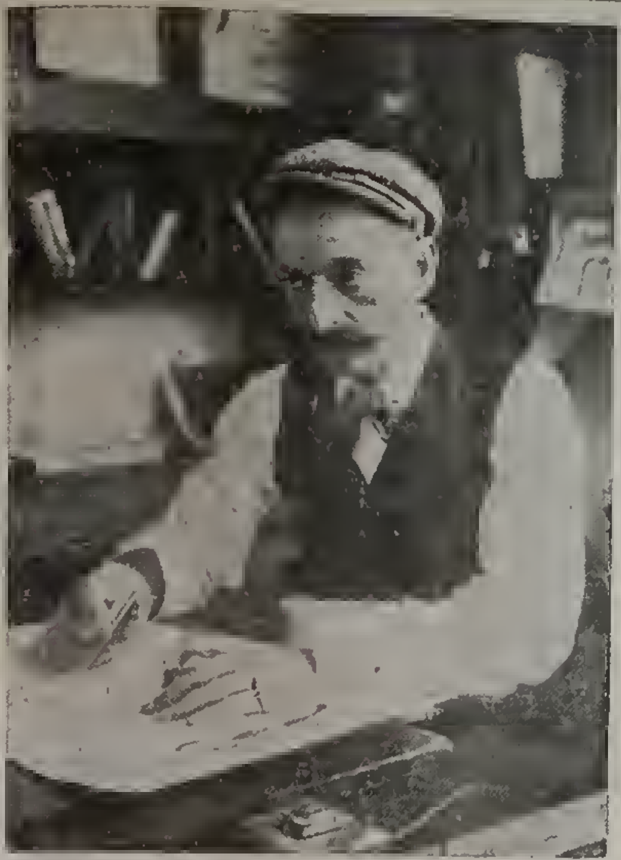
"But I charge you that if the whole issue rested upon the testimony of experts, it would be an extremely dangerous thing to convict a man of murder in the first degree upon such testimony alone.

"But, on the other hand, if you take the Barnet and Cornish letters and the address on the poison package together with the conceded writings, and compare them yourselves, on your own judgment, and come to the conclusion that the defendant wrote the address on the poison package, I say that you would be safe in returning a verdict of guilty."

J. F. Turner's Unpaid Notes.

A. Everett Ball, administrator of the estate of Edward S. Chesley, filed a supplemental complaint yesterday in an action against Ruth E. Turner, administratrix of James F. Turner's estate, for $9,177.50, the principal due on notes which Turner gave to Chesley in October, November and December, 1897, and January, 1898. The notes, it is alleged, were in the hands of Turner, and are now among the papers of his estate, unless they have been lost or destroyed. They bore interest at the rate of 1 per cent a month. Turner was killed by J. P. Fenna last year in the Crocker building.

ARTIST SOLLY WALTER DIES IN HONOLULU



SOLLY WALTER, THE WELL-KNOWN SAN FRANCISCO ART TEACHER AND ILLUSTRATOR, WHO RECENTLY DIED IN HONOLULU.

SOLLY WALTER, the well-known artist, art teacher and newspaper illustrator, died at Honolulu on February 26th, at the age of fifty-three. He had been a sufferer from consumption for many years and had gone to the islands in the hope of prolonging his life.

In keeping with his own request his body was cremated, and the ceremony took place at the Government cemetery the day after death. The urn now rests in Nuuanu cemetery, one of the most beautiful burial places in the world.

Solly Walter was a citizen of the world in the best sense of that term. Born in Vienna, he served as a cavalry officer in the war of 1866, an attache of the Colonel of his regiment. His family is one of prominence in Austria, several members of it occupying positions in the Government service, a brother being Government Director of Railroads.

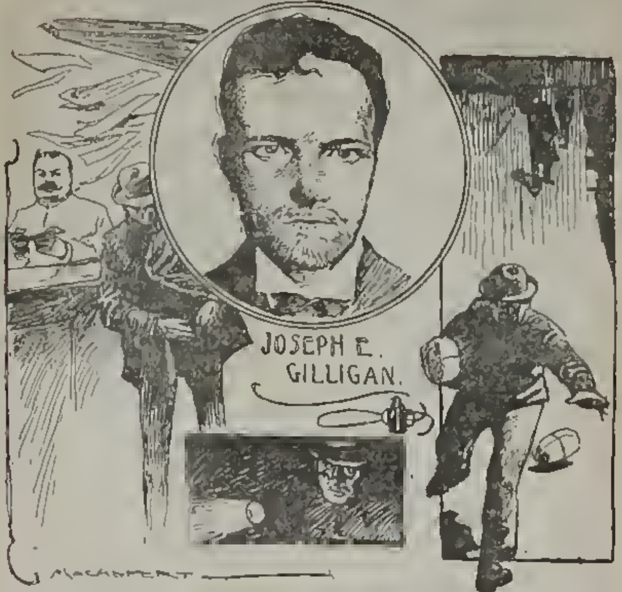
Walter had an artistic temperament. He early devoted himself to a sincere study of art in the ateliers and under the best masters in Paris. He visited many parts of the world, living for a considerable time in Constantinople, all the while doing much meritorious work with palette and brush.

He came to America about 1876, and married in New York in 1883. Coming to San Francisco soon afterwards, he found the city just awakening to a general appreciation of art, and in the beginning of a popular art education.

It was then that he began his work as a teacher of drawing and painting, and his classes soon became the center of art education and appreciation. His influence was felt all over the Pacific Coast.

His health began to fail some months ago, and accompanied by Mrs. Walter, he went to Honolulu in the barkentine Archer in the hope that the sea voyage and the climate there would benefit his health. In this he was disappointed. For some days before his death it was evident that he was steadily sinking.

A CROOK FROM COLORADO CAPTURED BY THE POLICE

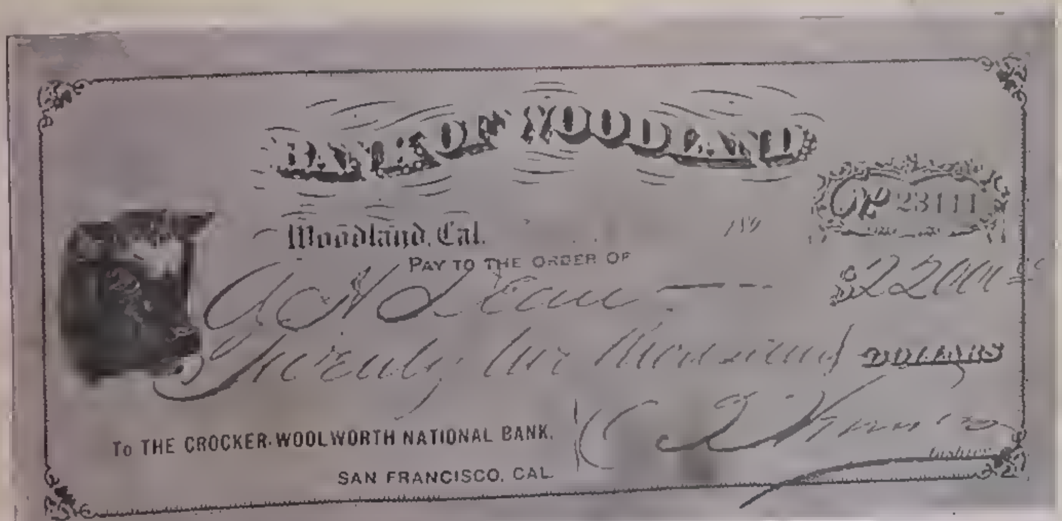


JOSEPH E. GILLIGAN, alias Harry Howard, is a recent importation from Colorado and apparently a very undesirable one. He had been here only a few months when he secured a position as waiter in the Park Hotel, Twenty-fourth and Mission streets, and one afternoon went through ten of the rooms, stealing a considerable quantity of wearing apparel, jewelry and anything else that was handy. He carried the articles to a lodging house at Eighth and Jessie streets, where they were found by Detectives Fitzgerald and Graham. He was arrested on April 30 last and got six months in the County Jail.

Recently Gilligan, alias Howard, got a position as cook in the Capital restaurant, 706 McAllister street, but was discharged. About a week ago he broke into the restaurant and stole several articles. Early yesterday morning he paid another visit to the restaurant. He was walking along Grant avenue with two bundles under his arms, and at Geary street passed Policemen Hurd and Snowball. This was shortly before 5 o'clock. Hurd became suspicious and stopped him. The bundles were opened and they contained two boxes of cigars, a bundle of laundry, a bottle of beer, a can of devilled ham and an oyster opener. Gilligan's answers to Hurd's questions were not satisfactory, but to back up his assertions he asked Hurd to accompany him to his landlady at 507 Jones street. When they got there the landlady said that Gilligan and a man named Campbell had occupied a room, but were ordered out Sunday, as they could not pay the rent. Hurd then started with Gilligan for the City Prison. At Leavenworth and Ellis streets the prisoner broke away and ran. Hurd called upon him to stop. He kept running and Hurd pulled out his revolver and fired four shots over the fugitive's head, thinking to scare him into stopping. It had the opposite effect. Gilligan soon disappeared into a lodging house on the northwest corner of Turk and Hyde streets.

The report of the shots brought Policemen P. Burns and Joy on the scene, and while Hurd kept watch outside Burns and Joy searched the lodging house. Burns found Gilligan hiding in a room on the top flat. He was taken to the prison and locked up in "the tanks." Later, when the restaurant man identified the articles, Gilligan was booked on a charge of burglary. He had effected an entrance into the restaurant by forcing open the rear window.

A charge of forgery was also booked against Gilligan. Last Friday he went to T. J. Clancy, saloon-keeper, 722 McAllister street, with a check for $12 on the First National Bank, purporting to be signed by John T. Sullivan, proprietor of the Grand Hotel on Market street. He told Clancy that he had been employed as a waiter at the Hotel and Sullivan had given him the check. He got the money. Clancy sent the check to the bank and found that the signature was a forgery. When Gilligan was searched at the prison a number of blank checks of the First National Bank were found in his pockets.



FAC-SIMILE OF THE FAMOUS BECKER DRAFT, RAISED FROM $12 TO $22,000, FOR WHICH SUM IT WAS CASHED AT THE NEVADA BANK, IN SAN FRANCISCO, AND IS ONE OF OVER FIFTY CASES ILLUSTRATED AND EXPLAINED IN THE BOOK.

Both in Case

The Game Law.

The open season for shooting quail, doves, deer and wild duck as fixed by the State law is as follows: Doves, 15th July to 15th February. Mountain quail and grouse, 1st September to 15th February. Valley quail, wild duck and rail, 1st October to 1st March. Male deer, 15th July to 15th October. Pheasants, the taking, killing, selling or having in possession at any time is prohibited; robbing or destruction of nests or having pheasant eggs in possession is a misdemeanor in the following counties: Butte, Trinity, Marin, Lake, Merced, Riverside, Los Angeles, San Bernardino, Santa Barbara, Kings, Ventura, Santa Clara, Monterey, San Joaquin, Yuba.

The clerks of nearly all the Boards of Supervisors have advised us no changes have been made this year, but the ordinances passed last year hold good if they do not conflict with the State law. The following counties have not passed any ordinances that alter the open season as provided by State law: Amador, Butte, Inyo, Modoc, Mono, Mendocino, Mariposa, Nevada, Napa, Plumas, San Diego, San Joaquin, Sacramento, Solano, Santa Cruz, Siskiyou, Tehama, Yolo and Yuba.

The changes are as follows:

Alpine—Deer, Sept. 2 to Oct. 15.

Alameda—Rail, Oct. 15 to Feb. 15. Quail, Nov. 1 to Feb. 1. Male deer, July 15 to Oct. 1. Pheasants protected until February, 1904. Hunting, killing or having in possession for purpose of sale or shipment out of county: quail, bob white, partridge, wild duck, rail, mountain quail, grouse, dove, does or deer, antelope, elk or mountain sheep prohibited.

Colusa—Deer, Aug. 15 to Oct. 15.

Calaveras—Deer, Sept. 1 to Oct. 15.

Contra Costa—Deer, July 20 to Sept. 2. (Use of dogs prohibited).

El Dorado—Doves, July 20 to Feb. 1. Trout, June 1 to Dec. 1.

Fresno—Valley quail, Nov. 1 to Jan. 31. Individual bag limited to 25 quail per day. Mountain quail, Sept. 1 to Feb. 15. Doves, Aug. 15 to Feb. 15. Pheasants, bob white quail and prairie chickens, close season in force for an indefinite period. Use of nets or seines in county waters prohibited.

Humboldt—Grouse and Wilson snipe, Sept. 1 to Feb. 15. Killing of waterfowl prohibited between one-half hour after sunset and one-half hour before sunrise. Pheasants and wild turkeys protected until Oct. 1, 1900. Black brant, Oct. 1 to March 1. Shipment of game out of the county prohibited. Deer, use of dogs prohibited.

Kern—Shipping game out of the county prohibited. Quail, Oct. 1 to Feb. 1.

Lake—Deer, Aug. 1 to Oct. 1.

Kings—Doves, Sept. 1 to Feb. 15. Quail, Nov. 1 to Feb. 15.

Los Angeles—Shipping game to markets outside of the county prohibited. Sea-gulls, egrets, pelicans, seals, protected. Trout season opens April 1st.

Marin—Deer, July 15 to Sept. 15. Quail, partridge or grouse, Nov. 1 to Feb. 1. Individual bag limited to 25 birds per day. Market hunting and shipment of game from the county is prohibited. Use of Repeating shot guns prohibited. Killing of meadow larks or any other song birds prohibited. Hunting within private enclosures or on public roads prohibited. Trout, with hook and line only, April 1 to Oct. 15.

Madera—Market hunting prohibited.

Monterey—Deer, July 15th to Sept. 1st. (Use of dogs prohibited). Quail, Oct. 1 to Oct. 5.

Napa—Trout, by hook and line only, April 1 to Dec. 1.

Orange—Doves, Aug. 1 to Feb. 1. Deer, Aug. 15 to Oct. 1. (Market hunting prohibited). Quail, partridges or grouse, Oct. 1 to Oct. 6. Ducks, Nov. 1 to March 1. Ducks and quail, shipment from the county restricted as follows: No person shall ship ducks or quail out of the county in quantities to exceed two dozen birds a week.

Placer—Trout, June 1 to Dec. 1.

Plumas—Salmon, trout, May 1 to Dec. 1 (netting prohibited.)

Riverside—Male deer, close season until July 15, 1901. July 15 to Sept. 15, thereafter. Quail, individual bag limited to 20 birds per day. Mountain or valley quail, pheasant and wild duck, sale of prohibited in the county. Wild duck, valley or mountain quail, shipment from county prohibited. Trout, any variety, close season until May 1, 1901. May 1 to Dec. 1, thereafter.

San Benito—Deer, Aug. 1 to Sept. 15. (Market hunting prohibited).

Santa Barbara—Deer, Aug. 1 to Aug. 22. Use of hounds prohibited. Quail, one day, Oct. 1. (Market hunting prohibited). Lobsters or crawfish, close season, April 15 to Sept. 15, shipping from county in close season prohibited. Abalones, taking, selling, having in possession and shipping from the county prohibited.

San Bernardino—Deer, close season continuous, 1899. Valley or mountain quail, wild duck, sale of prohibited. Trout, sale of, between April 1st and May 1st of any year and during 1899, prohibited. Tree squirrels, five per day the individual limit.

San Diego—Shipping game out of the county prohibited.

San Luis Obispo—Deer, July 15 to Sept. 1. Use of hounds prohibited. Doves, July 15 to Dec. 1. Hunting for markets situated outside of the county prohibited. Clams, use of plows or machines in digging prohibited. Shipment of abalones out of the county prohibited.

San Mateo—Deer, July 15 to Aug. 25. (Use of dogs not prohibited. Market hunting prohibited). Rail, Oct. 15 to Nov. 15. (Shooting from boat at high tide prohibited).

Santa Clara—Male deer, July 15 to Sept. 15. Quail, Nov. 1 to Feb. 1. Individual bag limited to 20 birds per day. Quail, wild duck, pheasants and doves, purchase and sale, or shipment out of the county prohibited.

Shasta—Deer, July 15 to Sept. 1. Shipment of feathered game out of the county prohibited.

Sierra—Deer, Sept. 1 to Oct. 15.

Siskiyou—Shipment of feathered game out of the county prohibited.

Sonoma—Deer, July 15 to Oct. 1. Quail, Nov. 1, to Feb. 1. Pheasants, close season till Jan. 1, 1901. Shipping game out of the county prohibited. Use of nets in streams of the county prohibited.

Sutter—Deer, Sept. 1 to Oct. 15. Doves, July 15 to Jan. 1.

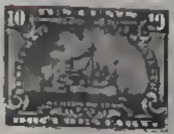
Trinity—Deer, Sept. 1 to Oct. 15.

Tulare—Deer, Sept. 1 to Oct. 15. Shipping game out of the county prohibited.

Ventura—Quail, any variety, Oct. 1 to Nov. 1.

[illegible] San Francisco, Cal., November 15, 1899.

Three months from date I promise to pay to the order of Louise Lagarde Eight [illegible] dollars, for value received, with interest at Seven (7) per cent per [illegible], until paid, both principal and interest payable in United States Gold Coin.



November 15th [illegible]

Ph. Maysounave

Ph. Maysounave
Ph. Maysounave
Ph. Maysounave
Ph. Maysounave
Ph. Maysounave
Ph. Maysounave

DEFT

Sutter Creek
May 7th 1898

On demand without grace, for value received I promise to pay to Mary E O'Connell the sum of 810 eight hundred and ten dollars interest one per cent per month from date till both principal and interest is paid, payable only in United States Gold Coin.

John Rick

Stock[?] Advance Apr 6 1900

Theodore Kytka, the first expert that testified in the Mansfield trial, in addition to being quite a jovial fellow, is a genius with a pen. As an experiment he forged off-hand five signatures of the name "N. C. Briggs" and mixed them with five genuine signatures. Mr. Briggs was only able to select three genuine from the forged, and Mr. T. S. Hawkins, with a thirty years' knowledge of the Briggs' hand-writing, was only able to select two. In a similar test with the signature "R. Shaw," Mr. Shaw was only able to select one out of four.

Herald Jan 12 1901

Grandma

T. Kytka 1901

The Morning Press

Published Continuously Since 1869.

Member of the Associated Press

Fithian Building, 635 State Street.

EASTERN BRANCH OFFICE:
50 Tribune Building, New York. T. R. Elker, Manager.
CHICAGO OFFICE:
317 Chamber of Commerce. A. Frank Richardson, Manager.
WASHINGTON OFFICE:
515 Fourteenth Street, Near Pennsylvania Avenue.
SAN FRANCISCO OFFICE:
L. C. Fisher, Merchants' Exchange Building.
LONDON OFFICE:
L. O. Johnston, 13 and 14 Red Lion Court, Fleet Street, London, England.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES:
Daily, per year, in advance $8.00
Daily, delivered by carrier, per month .75
Weekly, one year, in advance......... 2 00

TELEPHONE NO. 73.

The Press Publishing and Printing Company
CHO L. LLOYD, Manager.

The Official County Paper

A WHOLESOME SENTENCE.

Judge Oster fittingly closed the trial of Yda Addis Storke yesterday, when he sentenced the defendant to imprisonment for the maximum term provided by the law. He expresses the regret of the community when he said he was sorry the penalty was not greater, for a year in the county jail was not sufficient punishment for the crime committed.

But the sentence will be welcomed with feelings of relief by the people of the county. They know that a dangerous and desperate woman is where she can do no harm for a few months at least. The county is to be congratulated upon the result of the trial, and congratulations from the county are due those who conducted the case so successfully. District Attorney Squier made a state record by the manner in which he handled the prosecution.

Much credit, too, should be given one whose good work has possibly been partially overlooked in the excitement of succeeding events, but who, by his scientific and painstaking analysis of the writings involved, did much to strengthen the case against Mrs. Storke. It is Theodore Kytka to whom reference is made. Mr. Kytka is an ideal witness; he was on the stand longer than any one handwriting expert in any other single trial in the United States. He underwent a severe cross-examination for four days. But not a flaw could be found in the mass of convincing testimony presented by him; so admirably was his evidence presented, that it was only strengthened by the attacks upon it. Kytka impressed all who heard him as fully qualified as an expert, and conscientious and truthful witness.

Bee Apr 7 1901

Writing Expert Kytka left for San Francisco on Saturday. During his few days stay here Mr. Kytka made many friends. He delighted in mystifying several of our well known judges of signatures. W. E. Hawkins carries off the honors as having selected the largest proportion of genuine signatures. Rudy Shaw wrote his signatures on four pieces of paper. Mr. Kytka copied the signatures on four others. Then he told Mr. Shaw to select in four signatures. He succeeded in getting one correct.

Call Jan 12 1901.

THE METRIC SYSTEM.

WITH this Congress an earnest effort is to be made to bring about the establishment in this country of the metric system of weights and measures. It is indeed time that something were done in that direction. The Russian Government has decided to establish it throughout the Czar's dominions, and when it goes into effect there ourselves and the British will be the only civilized people on earth who do not use it.

That there is a commercial advantage to be gained by adopting it has long since been pointed out not only by our Consuls but by British authorities who have made a study of foreign markets. The machinery made and used throughout Continental Europe is gauged and constructed according to the metric system. The workmen are familiar with the measurements of that system, while they do not know the measures of America and Great Britain, and consequently if other things are all equal the articles that conform to the metric system are preferred in the market.

Some time ago it was reported from Germany that the Iron and Steel Manufacturers' Union of that country had adopted a uniform system of metric dimensions for all articles of universal consumption, and it was announced at the time that the reason for the step was that competition between great manufacturing nations has now become so keen that every point of advantage is a matter of importance, and experience has shown that in dealing with people who use the metric system there is a big advantage in using the same measurements.

The market in which the metric system is used is very large. It is estimated that two-thirds of the people living in civilized countries use that system, and the number is increasing, for it is to be noted the metric system is growing in favor in all parts of the world. When it has been established in Russia there will be another vast market using such measurements. It is clear, therefore, that if exporters of America and Great Britain wish to compete on even terms with their rivals they will have to follow the example of the majority.

Of course it is not expected that the system could be put into operation at once. The bill now in the hands of the House Committee on Coinage, Weights and Measures provides only for the use of the metric system in all transactions by and with the Government after a fixed date. The operation of such a law would compel the people to acquaint themselves with the system and would thus prepare the way for the adoption of such measurements in private business.

It is probable the change in our weights and measures could be effected with much less difficulty than appears at first thought. The terms, "Metres, grams, kilos," etc., appear strange to us, but we are a people who easily adopt new words, and the calculations would be no trouble to us at all, for these are based upon the decimal system with which our coinage has made us thoroughly familiar. The greatest trouble would be in getting our scales and measuring instruments changed and in applying the metric system to our subdivisions of land, but even in those respects the reform could doubtless be worked out without entailing any great amount of confusion.

It is to be noted that the British are working for the new system even more eagerly than ourselves. Not long ago the Associated Chambers of Commerce of Great Britain adopted resolutions declaring that whereas the present system of British weights and measures is "in the opinion of her Majesty's Consuls responsible for great injury to British trade this association urges her Majesty's Government to introduce into and carry through Parliament as speedily as possible a bill providing that the use of the metric system of weights and measures shall be compulsory within two years of the passage of the bill, and suggests that meanwhile the system should be adopted in all specifications for Government contracts."

Since Russia has already acted and Great Britain is preparing to act, it is surely time for the United States to give the subject serious consideration. We must keep up with the procession.

MRS BEN. F. GEIS WILLOWS

SAN JOSE, CAL., December 1, 1908.

ARREST FOR MURDER.

$1000 REWARD

will be paid by the Governor of the State of California for the arrest and conviction, and the citizens of Santa Clara County have subscribed an additional

$1200 REWARD

for the capture (dead or alive) of

PHOTO TAKEN IN 1895.

JAMES C. DUNHAM,

who brutally murdered six people near Campbell, Santa Clara County, California, on the night of May 26, 1896, and escaped to the mountains near here, where he was last seen on May 28, 1896, since which time no reliable clues have been obtained.

He is an American; about 32 years old at the time of the murder; fair common school education; quick to think or act, and very quick and active in his movements; athletic, and always kept himself in good condition; great pedestrian; very fond of hunting and fishing, and very expert with revolver; speaks Spanish, and may be able to write it. Below is a specimen of his handwriting (actual size) taken from a letter written some time prior to 1896. Note that two lines of writing are on lines of the paper, remainder is not. Some of the letters touch lines, others do not.

He drank, gambled, and chewed to a very limited extent; had few intimate friends, being very reserved and fond of going on long walking trips all alone; always associated with reputable people, and under ordinary circumstances was always gentlemanly and courteous, but rather quick-tempered; very studious, and was ambitious to improve his mind at all times; could talk intelligently on almost any subject; has followed various occupations—nurseryman, drummer, bicycle agent, confectioner, orchardist and farm hand; is supposed to have been studying law at time of murder; played well on harmonica; said to always sit with knees close together; did not know what to do with hands when idle; it is said that he had a habit of hooking thumb into vest pocket or waist band of trousers when talking, also of holding head on one side when talking; expert bicycle rider. Not much is known about his relatives; father, mother and sister are dead; brother at last report (1908) was practicing medicine in Seattle under name of Chas. Cobb. Dunham was very determined; when he made up his mind to do anything he never rested until he carried out his plans, and hated to give in when he made a statement. The photograph is said to be a good likeness of Dunham in 1895, but is taken from an ambrotype, and this reverses the features.

The above is a revision of the circular sent out by J. H. Lyndon, Sheriff of this county at the time of the murder. I waive all claims to the reward. Wire information at my expense.

ARTHUR B LANGFORD,
Sheriff of Santa Clara County, San Jose, California.

Additional Description of James C. Dunham

As He Was in 1896.

Height—5 ft., 11½ in. in shoes, and very erect.

Weight—165 to 180 lbs.; large frame; not much flesh; very muscular.

Hair—Almost black; some gray at temples; quite thick; no sign of baldness; cut long on top, short on sides and back Forehead—Medium height; square, but rather narrow.

Eyes—Blue, but difference of opinion as to exact shade; deep set, especially at inner corners; right lid droops slightly when talking, but not very noticeable, not amounting to a deformity; piercing glance when he first looks at you.

Nose—Flat on bridge, wide and fleshy at end; nostrils not very large; noticeable depression between eyes.

Mustache—Not very heavy; slightly lighter in color than hair, might be called brown; exposure to weather might give reddish tinge; curled at tips.

Mouth—Broad and straight across; lower lip is medium full and droops a little so that mouth is never entirely closed; deep depression between lip and chin.

Teeth—Said to be some stained by tobacco; one dentist says he filled some of Dunham's back teeth with amalgam or cement, and a posterior cavity in the left lateral incisor with gold; another has a record that shows he filled an anterior cavity in the anterior lower six year molar with platinum.

Chin—Broad and square; depression between chin and lower lip gives chin protruding appearance; some, who knew Dunham, say he had dimple in chin, and others say it was a cleft, but nearly all agree that it was one or the other.

Neck—Long, with cords large and prominent, making neck look very broad.

Hands—Large, sinewy, muscular, hairy and tanned.

Thumbs—First joint very slender compared to ends; ends short, wide and very square, having appearance of having been cut off, and making nail very short and square Feet—Wears No. 9 shoe.

Scars—When a boy cut left foot with ax; this is said to have left a big scar, running from left side of instep to outside of foot under left ankle.

If you are satisfied you have the right man located, arrest and send me photographs, with and without hat on, with complete description, height, weight, marks, scars, etc., also samples of writing if possible. So many have mistakenly thought they had this man spotted, and so many of our officers have had to make useless trips, that I must refuse to make any trips outside the State until I am positive you have the right man.

ARTHUR B. LANGFORD,
Sheriff of Santa Clara County, San Jose, California.

SPECIMEN OF DUNHAM'S HANDWRITING.

valley on the mountain sides are immense boulders as large as a small house and some considerably smaller. O! have to go. Good bye
Good night love
James C. Dunham